It was either on that night or on the following that he fulfilled an engagement to go and speak to the Irish crew of a large vessel lying well out in the "Roads." It was a stormy night; the wind blew half a gale, but he persisted in taking an open boat and making for the vessel. His friends, and I, his little friend, among them, listened anxiously to the wind, which was "blowing great guns," until long after midnight, when we discovered his cheery voice in the passage, and heard him tell how the seamen had thronged the hold and listened to him as he read from the Douay Bible the story of the Cross; how they sang and prayed and wept together amid the furious gale, and how thankful he was that he had not shown the white feather.

I will not enter upon the deep impression upon me and others of what seemed his passionate desire to save men from their sins by faith in the righteousness and love of God in Christ Jesus. I felt then and have felt ever since that he was one of God's ministers and prophets. Doubtless he totally forgot the circumstances; but, though very different occupations have, without the faintest dimming of our old and mutual affection, prevented our intercourse during the last fifteen or sixteen years, yet, I hardly know why, I have found it a matter of privilege and gratitude and conscience to intrude, if you think fit, so far upon your space.

By Rev. J. B. FIGGIS
BRIGHTON.

In the year 1860 a little book issued from the press with this title, "Times of Refreshing." As a hymn-book it was the precursor of Mr. Sankey's, and some of its sweet tones, as led by one of the sweetest voices ever heard, echo in our ears still. But it was more than a hymn-book; its publication marked an epoch of which, in larger editions, it contained some record. Of that epoch and its leader I want to speak a little.

In 1856 a Christian lady in the North felt a strong desire to go and stir up God's work in Ireland. She went, and probed many that she met with earnest inquiries as to whether they were born again. A young man heard her thus speaking to a friend at Ballymena, the arrow entered the joints of the harness, and he came to Christ. He was soon removed to Connor, and, with two other young men, he instituted a society for prayer. They met in a schoolhouse in September, 1857, the very year and month in which the devoted Lanphier established the daily prayer-meeting in New York, the seed of world-wide good. One and another Christian was admitted to the secret prayer-meeting at Connor, and in three months' time they had the joy of seeing the first manifest answer in a soul brought to Christ (December, 1857). Next month another convert was added, and the following February two more.

Early in 1859 one of the converts visited friends at Ahoghill, and by his earnest words and prayers the whole family were converted. The converts, like the first Christians, became missionaries to their friends and neighbours. Meetings for prayer sprang up here too, and people from the country heard the news of the Gospel, and some of them when passing through Ballymena were struck down, cast upon the pavement in a swoon. They could not eat, some for hours, some even for days. Many could not speak except at intervals. Some were affected once, some oftener, by this prostration. While utterance was allowed them they might be heard calling upon God in earnest tones for mercy, and in a few hours thanking Him that they had found it through Christ. "The stricken cases" excited immense attention. Newspapers referred to them, and everybody talked about them. But, whatever their cause or character, this has to be remembered, that side by side with them a silent work was going on in the souls of men; sometimes there were fifty converts to one "stricken" case.

The interest was deep and widespread; meetings were held day after day and night after night in churches—Presbyterian churches many of them. Thence they spread to private houses, and thence even to the streets, so that people could not restrain their anxiety of soul even when they had come together for other purposes, e.g., some assemblies of Orange lodges were turned into prayer-meetings, and in many a mill might be heard sounds of prayer and praise. This sort of thing went on in town after town, and village after village. The converts might be counted by thousands and tens of thousands.

When this was noised abroad, not a few turned aside to see this great sight, and amongst these was the dear servant of God lately laid in the grave at Hampstead. He was then a Congregational minister at Kingstown. He came back to his own church at Kingstown full of ardour. Fired himself, he soon set that church on flame, and others around came together to get kindled. There were services on Sunday, services on week-days, services in that seaside town, and services in the city near. Fifteen hundred people would be found coming together three or four times a week to be dealt with about sin and the Saviour, to sing the sweet hymns referred to, and to send in special requests for prayer by the score.

Perhaps the most striking meetings of all were those in the steamers in Kingstown Harbour. I have been at one of those services; officers and crew and hundreds of people from the shore crowding with earnest zeal to hear the sweet story of old. For years after, one could not cross the Channel in one of the express boats without hearing something to remind one of the times of refreshing. A devoted servant of God—one of the best Bishops that ever was—Dr. John Gregg, was crossing once, when a sailor touched his hat to him, "Are you a clergyman, sir?" "A minister of Christ, I hope," said the Bishop, humbly. "Would you like to join us at a prayer-meeting?" "With all my heart," said the Bishop. He led him below, and there all was ready for the meeting, and they asked him to preside. "No, indeed," he said; "it is your meeting, and you only asked me to join. Go on as usual." So one gave out the hymn, another read, and another prayed, and then, I doubt not, the "minister of Christ" spoke to them from a full heart. "But," said he, when all was done, "how did all this come about?" "Well, sir," said a pious sailor, "indeed, it was Mr. Denham Smith, who when we were in port used to have services with us, and all the crew came to Jesus. We keep up the meetings amongst ourselves now." The Bishop was delighted, and went to a gentleman I know, sending a message to dear Mr. Smith to tell him that he would honour his work ever after. Ah! John Gregg and Denham Smith have met in glory now, perchance, and draw together like twin flames.

It is of the latter I would speak; but where shall I find words warm enough to describe him? He was a man of rare joy and gladness. Never have I heard anyone speak such solemn things as fell from his lips; but never have I seen anyone so habitually happy—happy in the Lord, and happy in his home, and happy in God's beautiful world. He carried "music in his heart;" he was ever ringing bells of hope He was a man of intense affection; "he had a thousand friends, and loved each as though he had a thousand hearts." He might have been supposed to have led a life so much before the public as to forget his family; but on the contrary he manifested such family affection as I have never seen surpassed, seldom equalled. His last word was one of recognition of his eldest son: "My boy, my dear boy." He was a man of winning gentleness. He threw himself into every circle as though it gave him more interest than any other for the time, and so, by persuasiveness of manner as of word, sweetly drew scores and hundreds to the Saviour. Staying at hotels abroad, he showed how men of the world might be won over to Christ.

His early ministry was stimulating to readers, and calculated to promote much human advancement. Of later years he seemed to have one thing to do—to set forth the love of Jesus, the loveliness of Jesus, the perfect work of Jesus, the glorious hope of the return of Jesus. When they built the great hall in Dublin, where he was to take a leading part, his first text was, characteristically, "He shall bear the glory." He had a very strong grasp of Gospel truth; the trumpet gave no uncertain sound. Man's ruin, Christ's salvation, the Holy Spirit's work, were dwelt on with great clearness and fulness.

TESTIMONY IN THE SICK-ROOM.

During the eighteen months of Mr. Denham Smith's more serious illness, his sick-room has proved to many a very banqueting house of the King. The beloved patient seemed to be perpetually revelling in the fulness of Christ's love and grace; and for everyone who visited him he invariably had the word most suited to their circumstances and need. Like Samuel Rutherford, he was ever living above this present scene, dwelling in the rapturous love of his Divine Lord. The pourings forth of his heart, at such times as these, if recorded, would fill a volume of considerable size. Many choice utterances have been borne away by those to whom they were spoken, to companies far and near, to whom they have proved words of comfort and refreshing as "showers upon the mown grass." Space forbids our giving more than a few of these recollections, culled, almost at random, from notes jotted down at the time:—

IN SHANKLIN.

When thought to be almost gone, he said, "It is like the going out of the candle—is it not? No more sins, no more judgment for sin. No more sorrow, no more death—all ended, and then I am ready for the white robe."

Afterwards, when he had rallied, he said, "There are four reasons why the Lord did not take me away quickly: (1) That I might have a sweet time of holy happy communion with Himself. (2) That I might tell Him of all my dear ones. (3) That I might tell Him of all his dear ones; all I know; all his Church. (4) That I might see the love of my dear ones—and his dear ones."

"I never saw the Bible so beautiful as I have done on this bed."

Having spoken to his assembled family as though they were remembering the Lord's death, he closed his prayer by these words: "O Lord, this sickness! Thou knowest how many are praying it may be healed. Thou couldest do it very easily; but we want, Lord, to have thy mind about it all, to have no particular will ourselves. Like Paul, thy servant says he would like to go and be with Christ, which is far better, and though it is very simple, it is very solemn. Thou canst give grace for everything. Give us thine answer."

"Truths are precious, because they lead us to Him—it is HIMSELF. If I should be lost, I should still want HIM; therefore I could not be lost."

IN LONDON.

The dear patient was brought home from Shanklin on October 18, 1887. He said in the train, "I have been for weeks lying at the very gates of heaven, the Lord alone knows why He did not let me in."

He loved to look on the Regent's Park facing his residence, which was then in its autumn glory. He would say to his family, "Look at those beautiful trees. I've been watching the leaves fall—some fall so gently with the sunlight on them. 'We all do fade as a leaf,' and I am just like one of those leaves, gently falling, but with the bright sunlight too!"

Speaking of some who neglect the Lord's Supper, he said: "Oh, is it not a little thing to do for Him? Just going to meet Himself at it."

"Faith," he remarked, "is a very wonderful thing, you have nothing else to rest upon when you come to enter the valley of the shadows, as I have. It is all darkness with me as to how this is to end, but it is all light as regards the Lord Himself."

"A long time seems behind me. How triumphant the grace that has borne with, forgiven, and restored, during all this journey in the wilderness. A little while and then no more wilderness; all beyond, clear as crystal and calm as a sea of glass. The years fly, and if we only knew, we should never regret that we have not more of them. They are precursors of a life and of a home, to be kept from which, did we but know, would be only a trial and not a pleasure. Yet, it is well to live on for a work never to be enjoyed in heaven. When He came to be made sin, it was that heaven might be all the sweeter, and saved sinners might be there without sin. How wonderful will be the retrospect when with perfected natures we shall look over both the life passed on earth and the life in our heavenly home, for ever possessed, and for ever progressing."

"You know that in a warehouse, the goods are packed up and often laid aside for some time before they are directed and sent off. I am just like that, a bale of goods ready packed, but I am waiting for the direction; the Lord has not yet shown me whether it is 'to be sent back to earth,' or 'to be taken home,' but it is a grand thing to be ready packed. I think I am getting weaker; but never mind. 'In the sweet fields of Eden, on the other side of Jordan, there is rest for you, there is rest for me.'"

"I have been on the border. I do not know whether He will give me a little margin back to earth, or let me in. It would be better to go in; I do not want to go back."

"Did I tell you of a little vision I had? I thought I was in a large square room—very lofty. There was a gaselier, or something of the sort, in the middle, and the Lord Jesus stood there (pointing to the foot of the bed), I could not see his face for the gaselier came in the way, but I knew it was Himself. He did not say anything, and He did not do anything, but it was as though He had said, 'I have just come to show you I am here. I am with you. I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.' Oh, how often He has said that. You know, I do not build on visions; but was it not beautiful? Now all I want is to fall asleep and see his face. The letters that come are all about me; I suppose that is natural, but I think the sweetest thing in dying is just when we come to the end of all earth-ties, and it is only the Lord Himself. No possibility of anything coming in the way."

"I have many nice little talks with the Lord as I lie here quietly awake and with no pain. I wonder shall I see Him. How sweet if He were to come for me, and you would all know He came. There will be glories on glories by and by, and this earth will be so beautiful—Isa. xli. is so lovely, people say 'no sorrow, no death,' but forget all the glory, yet, the Bible is full of it."

"I am a little brighter to-day. That is all I can boast of, but I am filled with praise. 'Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name.' The Lord has not brought me this way hitherto, it is a path I have never trodden before. 'You remember what you gave us once at St. George's Hall: "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day"?' 'Yes. Is not that beautiful? There is no going out. But now it is as though the Lord had brought me to bay, put me into a corner, and shown me all my life, labour, and service, that it is nothing—nothing but Himself. It is like a little new revelation. We shall all be manifested at the judgment-seat of Christ, and in that day it may be that He will not forget our work and labour of love. But I want nothing but Him.' 'I am sure that in that day you will find many that you have not known of, whom you will have brought to Christ.' 'Perhaps so; but don't you see that it is all Christ. It is nothing till we can say, "Christ for me." If He likes He may hold to my little bits of service; but I am quite sure I shall only want to cling to Him. It is probable that He may remember our service of love; but it is more than probable—it is certain—that we shall not want to remember it. We shall be wholly occupied with Himself, and his beauty and glory. I do not know how long it may be before I see his face. It may be very soon; meanwhile my prayer is, Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly.'"

"We are just waiting till the shadows flee away. When I am gone, there will be no more shadows for me. You will journey on still amidst the shadows, but 'My grace is sufficient for thee.'"

One friend writes:—"I found him, as usual, full of Christ. He said to me, 'They thought I should have passed away in my sleep.' I said I knew one who had wished to go to sleep, and wake in heaven in the glory, and had his wish. He answered, 'Ah, dear S——, and it's not so much the glory. I feel I cannot look beyond, even to the glory, but to the person of the blessed Lord Jesus Himself. Oh, to be gazing up into his face, to see his lovely person, to be for ever with Him. God looks upon Him, and is satisfied. I look at Him, and I am satisfied. God looks at Him, and looks at me, and what He sees wanting in me, He finds in Him for me. "Wait on the Lord, be of good cheer, and He shall strengthen thine heart." This is just what we need when we are under care and trial and pain, to have the heart strengthened. It is the poor heart that gives way, and the Lord knows what to strengthen. But the thing is, Do we wait upon Him, not merely in our moments of special communion, but as the continued attitude of our souls? How helpful, lying upon a bed of pain and weakness, just to wait on the Lord. Sweet and condescending is it in Him to tell us that we may do so. It is as if He had said, "When you are in anguish, trial, or perplexity, come to Me! Look to Me! Wait on Me! and be not disspirited in mind, or low in faith, but be of good courage." Not the courage of mere power, but the courage fed by this very command twice repeated, "Wait, I say, on the Lord."

'Instead of faith, the sight of Him who dwelleth
In love's serene abode;
Instead of hope, the glory that excelleth
The "afterward" of God.'

Soon the waiting time with us all will give way to the eternal fruition."

LEAMINGTON Y.W.C.A.—The Young Dressmakers' Home in connection with this Association has "enlarged its borders" by removing to York House, Clarendon-place, Leamington Spa. It is fourteen years since the Home was established, and from small beginnings it has grown in size and usefulness. There is at present accommodation for thirty inmates, besides rooms for junior classes. During last year, the eleventh in Stanhope House, many deeply interesting cases of blessing through the Home have come under the notice of the workers. All letters respecting the work should be addressed to the hon. lady superintendent, Miss Bagster, 7, Heath-terrace, Leamington Spa.

BEN JONSON MISSION.—A genuine work in a quiet way is being carried on in Ben Jonson-road, Stepney Green, E., by Mr. Jas. Taylor. Engaged in business during the day, Mr. Taylor devotes his evenings and spare time to the amelioration of the bodily, moral, and spiritual welfare of the people around him. Evangelistic meetings are held in his little hall, as well as Band of Hope and crowded children's services. Living amongst those for whom he thus labours he is well acquainted with their needs. Friends who entrust gifts (either provisions, clothes, or money) to Mr. Taylor may be sure they are well distributed. His address is—28, Cressy-place, Stepney Green, E.

LONDON'S WORKING LADS.—A good work among lads has been carried on for the last four years in the neighbourhood of Eagle-street, Holborn. The aim has been to provide for the spiritual, intellectual, and physical training of these lads. The workers who are connected with the Regent-street Polytechnic have had the joy of seeing them confessing Christ. Several of the members are now at Buenos Ayres, where they are carrying on work for their Master in their leisure time. At the Aldersgate-street prayer-meeting Mr. Ewen lately spoke highly of the work being done by them at Buenos Ayres. He stated that a Bible carriage costing £300 was on its way to Buenos Ayres, whither he hoped shortly to proceed to help in the work. Two more of the members will soon join the foreign band. A new Institute at 49, Lamb's Conduit-street, will be opened on April 2.

For the Young.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHILDREN.

By Rev. E. Payson Hammond.

Dear Young Friends,—We have had children's meetings in several cities in Michigan, and I would like to tell you something about them.

The first were in Detroit, where there was a convention of Christian workers from different parts of the country; each day, at four o'clock, they adjourned and came into the children's meeting, or rather the children's meeting came to them. As soon as I had done speaking to the young people, these ministers and earnest Christians went to work among them and led many to Christ.

Twenty-three years ago I was in that city holding meetings. Many boys and girls wept for their sins, but they found that weeping did not save them. Then we told them of Jesus, and the Holy Spirit helped them to see how Jesus had loved them and given Himself for them. When I went back there last fall I was delighted to find many of them who said: "I am so glad that in these meetings I gave my heart to Jesus; He has kept me all these years, and I have been trying to do what I could for Him."

In one of those meetings sat a little boy weeping; at last he came and confessed his sins and believed in Jesus, and the Lord gave him a new heart and made him a happy Christian. One day a nice-looking young minister came to me and said: "I was that boy; ever since then I have been trying to work for Jesus; now I am pastor of a church in this city, I wish you could come and help me hold some meetings;" and he added, "I knew many children who at that time were converted, who are now living useful Christian lives."

A little Catholic girl found her way into one of our meetings, and was deeply affected as she heard the story of Jesus; as the Christians talked and prayed with her she saw the way to be saved was to trust in Jesus who said: "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." When she went home, her mother whipped her very severely, and told her she must not go to such meetings, but she said: "Mother, I must go and hear about Jesus; I want to go and hear about Jesus; it is such a beautiful story; I never heard it before. They sing so sweetly, and I love to sing those hymns; they never sing such hymns in our church; they never tell us about Jesus as I heard it in the meeting yesterday. I never had a new heart before, mother, but I am sure I have got one now, for I love to pray, I love Christians, and I love to hear that man tell about Christ suffering on the cross for us." The child was taken by a neighbour to the meeting the next day, and was again punished very severely for going. Are you not sorry for such children, whose parents punish them because they love to go to meetings where the simple Gospel is preached?

I have lately been hearing from those who about a year ago signed this covenant card: "I believe I have found Jesus to be my precious Saviour, and I promise with his help to live as his loving child and faithful servant all my life." Here is a part of one letter:—

"I signed the covenant card at your meeting held in the First Baptist Church in Denver, Colorado, just a year ago to-day. I wish to let you know that I am still persevering in living a Christian life. I am fourteen now; I have been in Chicago a little over three months. They have made me a Sunday-school teacher at the Union Tabernacle Mission; I have a class of nineteen girls. We need teachers very badly; if you know of any in this city who would be willing to become teachers we should welcome them most heartily."

I should think they did need teachers when they have to get girls of fourteen years of age to teach large classes. It always pleases me to hear that those who have become Christians are working for Christ.

I hope you, my young friends, will not only become Christians, but be active, earnest workers; try to get all your friends to come to Christ. Some of the best workers we had in the meetings around the city of Jackson were boys and girls who went out from the centre of the city with us; they seemed to know just what to say to those who were anxious about their souls. I think it was the Spirit of God that taught them.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., March 31, Luke xviii. 18—30; Mon., April 1, Luke xviii. 31—43; Tues., April 2, Luke xix. 1—10; Wed., April 3, Luke xix. 11—27; Thurs., April 4, Luke xix. 28—38; Fri., April 5, Luke xix. 39—48; Sat., April 6, Luke xx. 1—18.

MR. JOSIAH SPIERS concluded a fortnight's special services for children at Bishop's Stortford, Herts, on Thursday last week. He had large congregations, and much good was accomplished; many young people are now rejoicing in the Saviour as a result of the work. On Sunday last Mr. Spiers commenced a mission at the Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood Green, N., where he will continue to hold meetings nightly (Saturday and Sunday exeepted), at seven o'clock, until Friday, April 5. Prayer is asked that this mission may be greatly blessed to the young people of the neighbourhood. The help at the services of Christian workers of all denominations residing in the district will be much appreciated.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood Green, N., each evening at 7, until April 5 (Sat. and Sun. excepted). Mr. H. Hutchinson, Wickhambrook, Suffolk, April 8—13; St. Bride's, Liverpool (with Rev. W. S. Standen), April 22—27. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Tunbridge Wells, March 30, 31; Beacontree Heath, April 2—4; Congregational Church, Romford, April 7—12. Mr. Martin J. Hall, St. Jude's Iron Room, Mildmay, March 30 to April 5; Southampton, April 5—8. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, Lausanne, April 14—28.

Tenth Anniversary of Children's Scripture Union, Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, Tuesday, April 2, 3 p.m. Rev. E. A. Stuart will preside, and Mrs. Evered Poole will give an address to workers; 6.30 p.m., Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson will preside. Meeting for prayer and praise will be held at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., Monday, April 1, 7 p.m.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.—For a quarter of a century Mr. James Sharpless has been labouring among the poor and needy of Spitalfields, and he continues to see very cheering fruit of his toil. This is the time of the year when the dock and wharf men, with little or no work to do, sadly require to be befriended. Among other efforts for the comfort of these poor fellows, may be named the free teas to which they are invited every Thursday. The repast over, loving words are spoken about the Bread of Life who came down from heaven. These meetings have been blessed by conversions, and there have been a number of cases in which wandering lads have had their hearts so touched that they have arisen and returned repentant to the parental roof. Mr Sharpless's address is 14, Sidney-square, E.

THE UGANDA MISSION.—At the workers' meeting at the Home of Industry last week, Mr. Eugene Stock gave a very interesting account of the Uganda Mission. Speaking of more recent events he said, when the old king died, his son came to the throne, and then the persecution began. Youths and men who had professed their faith in Christ were brutally tortured, many roasted alive. After a short period the king seemed to change his mind, and favoured the Christians, and put many in high office. Suddenly the revolution broke out. The Arab traders rose up and deposed the king, placed another man in his place, sacked the Mission premises, and took the missionaries prisoners. Subsequently, the rebels placed the missionaries in their small boat, and sent them adrift on the lake. They were wrecked on a small island; their boat, though damaged considerably, they managed to patch up, and committed themselves once more to the perils of the water, and to the care of Jehovah.

Mr. F. S. Arnot's Farewell.

ON Tuesday, last week, two meetings were held in Exeter Hall, to take farewell of Mr. F. S. Arnot, and his companions, who are now en route for Africa, as well as various friends destined for other spheres of missionary work. The interest in the proceedings was wide and deep, as shown in a remarkable attendance. In the afternoon the body of the large hall was filled, though it had been intended to meet in the lower and smaller hall. Mr. HENRY GROVES, of Kendal, took a leading part in the guidance of the proceedings.

Dr. NEATBY gave an address setting forth, among other things, the duty of believers in regard to evangelisation, and the principles which should actuate all work for Christ. It is the most God-like work on earth, this taking the Gospel of Jesus to those who have never heard it. Going on to speak on the words "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself," Dr. Neatby pointed out how exceedingly refreshing this statement is. "Reconciling the world unto Himself" is God's choice work. To us God has committed the word of reconciliation, and we are "ambassadors for Christ." May God give the brethren who are going abroad a consciousness in their soul of this high calling. The poor black Africans will, we hope, soon hear from their lips that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself." What a message of grace our brethren have to take! What we desire, as we say good-bye to our brethren is, that the Holy Ghost may be in each one of them in unhindered power; that He may be the minister of Christ to each of their souls, and by their lips speak words of burning power to the hearts of the children of men, such as will lead them to Christ.

Several of the outgoing labourers delivered short addresses. Mr. GEORGE FISHER, from Swansea, who is proceeding to Africa, referred to Isa. xxx. 21, and spoke of the importance of following God's guidance, not going in front nor behind Providence. Mr. FREDERICK LANE, of Hounslow, who also hopes to accompany Mr. Arnot, declared himself confident of God's guidance, and of blessing upon the work in hand. Mr. DANIEL CRAWFORD, of Gourock, also for Africa, quoting Deut. xii. 13, 14, pointed out that God must ever be the chooser for his people. Mr. ARCHIBALD MUNNOCK, of Grangemouth, Falkirk, said that by God's grace he would seek to live for Christ in Africa, and be a light to those sitting in darkness. Mr. WALTER FISHER, of Greenwich, said that for about ten years he had had an earnest desire to serve God in some foreign land, and he felt satisfied that Central Africa was the place which God would have him work in.

Mr. F. S. ARNOT followed with a few words. Some might be apprehensive, he said, of a company of young men going to the foreign field, and we ourselves may well be apprehensive if we in any way depart from the attitude of waiting upon God, and depending upon Him for guidance in leading us forth, and also in guiding us all the way to our destination. It is only when we recognise that our brethren are dependent upon God and responsible to God, and learn to submit ourselves to one another, that God's work can go on by us. On this point we greatly need to be remembered in prayer. Do not start us off, and then leave us; but more earnestly, day by day, bear us up before God. Referring to the long journey across country to the high lands of Garenganze, Mr. Arnot spoke of the narrow paths which have to be trodden, through thick jungles, and along mountain ridges. No beasts of burden, and no ordinary vehicles, can be employed. Some novel trucks, designed by Mr. Edward K. Groves, of Bristol, will, however, be taken out, and it is hoped the native porters will use them. One pattern, designed for carriage of goods, has a single wheel; the other, which will carry two persons, is of peculiar construction: the wheels are so swung that, though two feet apart at the top of the vehicle, they will run on a path six inches wide. These contrivances, with handles at each end, will, it is hoped, prove very useful in the work of transport.*

Messrs. James Moore, of Hackney, and Hills, of Swansea, who are going soon to the Straits Settlements, in a few words gave expression to their confidence in God. A season of prayer followed, several friends presenting to God the desires of the meeting, that the going-forth from England and the work in Africa may be abundantly blessed.

THE EVENING MEETING.

The big Exeter Hall was not big enough comfortably to contain the eager crowd that desired to have a share in this memorable farewell. Galleries and gangways were packed with people glad to get even standing-room, and an overflow meeting had to be held in the hall below. Leading members of the community of Brethren were prominent all along the platform, but there was a goodly sprinkling of other Christians.

The venerable HENRY GROVES was again in the president's chair. In a most animated opening address, the old man eloquent exhorted his hearers to a more real faith in God, and to a more patient expectancy of the return of the Lord of the harvest. He believed the reason why Africa is so much before the world just now is because that nation is the last to be "brought in" before Christ's return; but it has to be brought in. Speaking of the limitless Divine resources out of which the outgoing friends will have to draw, he said that this generation sorely needs to learn that money is not almighty. Mr. Groves launched out at some length into a message of counsel and encouragement, designed to strengthen the hearts of the departing brethren.

The great audience "could scarce forbear to cheer" when Mr. F. S. ARNOT rose to speak, but the platform effectually imposed a wet blanket, and hushed the people to silence. Why the speakers should have unfettered freedom to liberate their souls in glowing speech, and the thousands in front of them should have rigidly to repress their emotions we fail to understand. Can there be anything dishonouring to God in a hearty cheer? Mr. Arnot gave a plain, unvarnished, and condensed account of some of his experiences in Africa. He had much to tell of God's interposing hand in times of difficulty, and his leading hand in circumstances of perplexity and doubt. At one point in his story he made a very warm reference to M. and Mdme. Coillard who are most devotedly sticking to their post among the Barotse tribes, long after most people think they ought to have returned to Europe on furlough. The remarkable readiness with which nearly all the native chiefs welcomed him and his message was illustrated by Mr. Arnot, and the spiritual wants of the dwellers in these regions depicted, with the view that some other workers might be constrained to give their lives to African evangelisation. It is not our civilisation they need, for they are happy enough in their simple industrious life; it is Christ that they need. The sooner we give them the Gospel the better, for the ravages of the slave trader and the European adventurer are making them more inaccessible and more suspicious of the white man. Some very touching instances were given by Mr. Arnot of the way in which these artless peoples had endeared themselves to his heart by their trust and confidence, and he was longing to be back again among them. He lay for a whole month at one time among utter strangers, and they nursed him tenderly, never laying a hand on any of his goods and belongings which might have proved very valuable to them. He said in closing that he did not ask for the pity of those he left behind—the work is glorious; but he asked for prayer that he and his fellow-workers might be sustained in faith and patience while God spared them to take part in his service.

Mr. P. J. HOCQUARD, who has laboured in the Gospel for the last ten years in the Malay Peninsula, said there were there in that region about 1,200,000 souls. Helpers are needed; some are going, but there is room for more. There are a million Malays, for the most part Mohammedans, and for many years there has been no direct work among them. They are in great spiritual darkness, though they observe all the formalities of their so-called religion. Will not the hearts of some English Christians be stirred up to do something on their behalf? There are also 100,000 Chinese at Singapore living in heathen darkness. The whole of the Peninsula is open to the Gospel messenger; workers full of faith and power and of the Holy Ghost are needed who will carry to these people the message of God's mercy and love.

Mr. J. G. MCVICAR, of Clapton Hall, having explained how his objections to the departure for Africa of Mr. T. H. Morris, of Walthamstow, with his wife and family, had been removed, Mr. MORRIS himself briefly recounted the way by which God had led him in thus deciding to leave native land, and kindred, and occupation, that he might witness for Christ in that far-off land. Mr. Morris and his family go forth with a second party in June. A brief word of testimony and exhortation followed from Mr. HONEYWILL, of Devonshire, who, with his wife, expects to go forth about June to labour in Singapore. Mr. W. C. K. TORRE, who goes to the Argentine Republic, to labour with his hands, as well as to testify for Christ there, spoke of the need of South America. We hear very little from the Argentine Republic, though it is twenty times the size of England. Trade is rapidly opening up there, and many are pushing out to make money; should not the servants of the Lord go, too, in order to distribute among the people the bread of life? The call had come to him, and he had been constrained to obey. He asked for earnest prayer for his work, and appealed to others to give themselves to a like service in some foreign land.

Several of the young men who addressed the afternoon meeting stood up and gave a parting text of Scripture. A brother in the prime of life, Mr. SEARLE is giving up his business in this country that he may go to the point of departure at the West Coast of Africa and act as agent in the transmission of goods to the interior for Garenganze. Calico is the great article of barter with the natives, and there will have to be consignments of that commodity to the missionaries as the need arises. Mr. Searle, in a little speech, pathetically told how at first he was in a difficulty as to his future path of service, chiefly because his mother was not a Christian. Now, through the mercy of God, she was a rejoicing believer, and he had taken this as an indication of God's will that he was free to go on foreign service. After an exhortation by Mr. Holiday, the speaking was admirably brought to a close by Mr. T. B. MILLER, of Barnet. One result of the meetings he hoped would be that many hearts would be set on fire to go forth as ambassadors of the Cross to heathen lands. But the point he specially emphasised was the duty of all who stayed at home to see that the needs of those who go to the front are fully met. "As his part is who goeth down to the battle, so should his part be that tarrieth by the stuff." The home friends, therefore, are partners with Mr. Arnot, Mr. Morris, and the others. As there was to be no collection, he urged that each should lay by him in store for this work as the Lord prospered him; let them ever be willing to deny themselves, so that there should be no lack in the Lord's treasury for this blessed work of taking the Gospel to the heathen.

Northern Light.

Sunday, March 24, was mission day in the Glasgow Baptist Churches. Rev. J. J. Fuller, coloured missionary from the West Coast of Africa, addressed three or four of the meetings. Services for young people, well calculated to stimulate their interest in such work, were a feature in these annual gatherings.

The Highland girls connected with the Y.W.C.A., Glasgow, had a social evening lately. Addresses and conversation were in Gaelic. If there is a dearth of Gaelic-speaking divinity students, there is no lack of maidens conversant with what Professor Blackie once called "the language of Eden!"

Arbroath Town Mission continues to do good work. Girls' sewing-meetings, workers' prayer-meetings, and conferences, are all flourishing, but the temperance meetings have meantime been discontinued. It is, however, on the faithful house-to-house visitation that the hope of abiding good to Arbroath is based.

General Booth has had many ministers in his large audiences at Dundee. He believes the Salvation Army has roused up many Aberdonians, and what he considers more marvellous still, nearly converted two newspapers. The modern "prisoner of Chillon" has spoken at many of these Northern meetings, and with much acceptance.

The forty-seventh Glasgow Company of the Boys' Brigade has some clever laddies in the ranks. At a recent social meeting the halls were decorated with veritable works of art in water colour and crayon; models were exhibited, also long rows of hyacinths and tulips reared by the boys. Prizes for these were justly awarded. The ambulance class connected with this and nearly every other company shows a high percentage of passes.

Dr. Pentecost persues his work in Glasgow. He dropped into the Christian policemen's social meeting the other night. Talking seemed to freshen rather than jade him. Miss Campbell, sister of Mr. W. A. There has just died at Stornoway an old lady of 105. Until six years ago she walked regularly to church. She had often sat outside in the churchyard on a communion Sabbath from nine o'clock in the morning until late afternoon service was done. She leaves fifty great-grandchildren. and was one of the few remaining links of the last quaint century.

FRIENDLESS GIRLS IN LONDON.

There is no section of our seething society more in need of being searched out and helped than girls who are either friendless and alone in London, or in circumstances of moral danger. Rescue work is all too sadly needed, but after the first fatal step has been taken on the downward path, recovery is generally difficult, and too often hopeless. In this, as in many other kinds of Christian service, "prevention is better than cure." We, therefore, thankfully hail the beginning of a new preventive effort in connection with the "Ashburton Girls' Home" in Globe-road, Mile-end. The Home, as its name implies, belongs to Lady Ashburton, and it is her earnest desire that it may prove a place of refuge and safety to many a tried and tempted sister. It is situated in a quiet little square at the back of Globe-road, and is under the superintendence of Miss M. L. Okell, who has for some years past been on the working staff of Miss Macpherson's institutions, and who for the last year or so was in charge at the Old Home of Industry. She is assisted in the good work by Miss Scott, who has also worked with Miss Macpherson.

Destitute girls between thirteen and eighteen are eligible for admission. The girls are carefully trained in all branches of domestic work, in needlework, reading, writing, &c. Special care is given to instruction in the Word of God, and direct conversion work is aimed at. There are many more applicants than can be admitted, and the most needy have the first claim. One of the present inmates has spent most nights of the last six months tramping about with her mother; a few days since the police found the mother dead on a door-step, and the girl was happily directed to this haven of rest and safety. Many of the cases must, of necessity, be taken free of charge, and therefore the expenses will be considerable. We cannot imagine a work that calls more loudly for generous support. Besides money help, women's clothing, both old and new, will be very acceptable.

In an adjoining house (separate from the Home) provision is made for the temporary reception of rescue cases. The visits of friends interested in this good work will be welcomed. Parcels, and all communications, should be sent to Miss Mary L. Okell, Ashburton Girls' Home, Hertford-place, Globe-road, Mile End, E.

UNHAPPY CHILDREN.—Under this title, the Countess of Mar gives in The Queen of last week an excellent and touching account of the work of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Some of the details she gives are extremely harrowing.

HYDE PARK.—After several nights' visiting the fallen women in their nightly walks, we gathered nearly forty of them to a good tea. At the meeting a bright Christian young woman arose and said: "Two years ago I was living as you are; but, having received an invitation from Mr. Davidge, I came here to tea, took his advice, and went into a Home. Now I am in good service. Let me press upon you to take encouragement by his kindness." The women listened attentively to the Gospel lovingly and earnestly preached to them. We have had many encouraging cases from this part of our work. Who will help by their prayers and aid?

MR. HENRY COOK, of the Gospel ship Mystery, writes from Trouville, France, on March 21:—Our little mission schooner is still at this port, and continues to prove a great boon to our English and Scandinavian seamen, and to the workmen building the new pier here, likewise to the French people. The French and English have expressed a desire that, as an outcome of our many visits to this port, a House of Rest for mission purposes shall be erected. I have purchased 252 square mètres of ground, in a very promising place, facing the docks, for the sum of £211 10s., and purpose to build at once, as the money is given me, the house, or Sailors' Rest, so long felt needed. The estimated cost is £600; towards this sum I shall be most grateful for help.

AN EXETER HALL RECEPTION.

The social receptions given by the Y.M.C.A. are amongst the most effectual methods of bringing the work of the Association to the notice of young men who are strangers to London. Last week in the rooms at Exeter Hall there was gathered a large and hopeful-looking assembly of young fellows. Mr. F. A. Bevan (who was the host of the evening) presided after the tea. In the course of some very kindly, practical remarks, he uttered an earnest warning against yielding to the first promptings to vice of any kind. He was specially emphatic in his condemnation of the betting mania; he pitied the young man who won his first bet. He assured those who might attach themselves to the Y.M.C.A. that they would not only find wholesome physical and intellectual recreation, but encouragment and sympathy in all that relates to the higher life. Mr. E. J. Kennedy, the secretary, said the Association were anxious to reach new men, and there were a good many present who had only been a very short time in London.

A pleasant and varied selection of music, vocal and instrumental, was first on the programme, but the great attraction of the evening was an address from Rev. John McNeill. It was a combination of wit and wisdom quite characteristic of the man. What we all need, from the oldest to the youngest, he said, is grace more abundant. Let no young man, newly come to London, think he ought to go searching out the seamy side of life. He cannot safely do it, any more than he can safely look for a gas escape with a lighted match. On the words, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," Mr. McNeill based a plea for good, honest hard work. Do not let so-called "secular" work get into arrear, but let the work of the day be done in the day. Then came a rousing and impressive deliverance in favour of total abstinence, not only from intoxicating drink, but gambling, and "a whole lot of other things—smoking, for example." If any were already tempted in the direction of the drink, he adjured them to sign the pledge as for their life: "Let the scratching of the pen be heard in heaven, to let God know He has got you; let it be heard in hell, to let the devil know he has lost you." If a man has to face the current by taking a stand for God and righteousness, he will get the Divine help he needs, and it will go to the making of his true manhood. On the back of this came a strong and affectionate appeal for spiritual decision; the gist of the Gospel was described as putting the hand in the hand of Christ, who will hold us up and stand between us and all kinds of temptation.

TRACT WORK IN PARIS.—Over 200,000 French tracts and leaflets have been forwarded from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, N.B., to Paris, for circulation there by the City Mission and other agencies. Mr. W. J. Lockie writes:—"They will be most valuable to our missionaries for distribution at the Exhibition." Other French booklets are in the press, and it is hoped that generous friends will help to place these also in the hands of many thousands of French readers.

PREVENTIVE WORK IN MANCHESTER.—The Female Strangers' Lodging-house, B 105, Piccadilly, Manchester, for respectable women and girls, is increasingly appreciated by those for whose good it is maintained. The scheme dovetails into every effort for the welfare of women, besides being a protective and vigilance agency. During last year 3293 beds were occupied, to a large extent by utter strangers. Women in straightened circumstances, and young girls needing shelter and advice, have found at the Home just the friend they required, and timely shelter as well. Such institutions as this, and its branch at 53, New Bridge-street, Strangeways, would be sources of blessing in many other large towns. The hon. superintendent and treasurer is Miss Wright, 9, Addison-terrace, Victoria Park, Manchester.

Notes from "Night and Day."

As promised, we make some brief extracts from the very varied contents of the current number of Dr. Barnardo's magazine:—

CARING FOR THE CRIPPLES.

I am receiving a large instalment of cripples, of every age and sort. People are beginning to find out that when no other institution in the kingdom will open its doors for the free reception of a crippled boy or girl, there is one Home, in Stepney Causeway, which never refuses a really destitute case. Some of these cases present, even to me, very great difficulties, because of the advanced age at which they come. However, I do not allow the thought of the difficulties which the future of these boys presents, to paralyse my willingness to help them. Good food and constant care will certainly not make them less able to earn their bread in the days to come, and so I keep my doors wide to the wall for these peculiarly pitiable cases.

A GRATEFUL FATHER.

In one of our East-end streets a co-worker of mine some time ago lit upon a Christian man, who, after the death of his wife, had struggled almost hopelessly to keep starvation from his door for himself and his two children. He had at length fallen fatally ill, and during his illness he was visited by one of our deaconesses, who ministered as far as she could to his wants. She often came from that chamber of the dying man (a poor tenement in a squalid street) with her eyes bedewed with tears at the spectacle of his sufferings, but her face lit up with joy as she recalled the faith in God which the dying Christian evinced. The case was brought before me, and, after careful consultation, it was decided to admit the two little boys, aged five and seven years respectively, whose approaching orphanhood was the father's greatest trial. My helper was able to assure the sufferer that his little ones would be gathered under a Christian roof and watched over with tender solicitude until they were fit to earn their own bread. The poor man's gratitude knew no bounds. Almost his last act was to sit up in bed to indite a letter expressing his gratitude, which reached me after his death. It is, surely, the divinest work on earth to minister to these little orphans in the Saviour's name, to comfort the despairing hearts of dying parents, and to stimulate their failing courage by the promise of such help as shall encompass their offspring when their own feeble arms are cold and helpless in the grave.

"SAVED SO AS BY FIRE."

These were the words that rose irresistibly to my lips when I heard for the first time the story of Eliza Anne. There was literally no hope for her, had she continued as she was when her history reached me, for she was an inmate of one of the vilest dens in a garrison town, and all her companions were women of abandoned life. "If not rescued at once," wrote the Archdeacon of C——, "she must grow up profligate." I may be asked, "Why was this case not dealt with under the Criminal Laws Amendment Act?" Because the garrison town was in a foreign settlement, although over it floated the English flag. This poor child had already served an apprenticeship in evil, the effects of which it will take years of Christian care and teaching to undo. But, as Eliza Anne is only ten years of age, I am told by the lady under whose care she now is that we need not despair of her future. That the grace of God can purify and keep a sinful child is a great truth borne in upon us by a thousand wonderful facts in our rescue work.

A CONTRAST.

"Frank" lived on the streets and by the streets. His mother was a woman of the poorest sort. I afterwards discovered her to be a drunken and immoral creature, who cared little or nothing for her unfortunate son. The latter was clad when I met him in two ragged garments only, and it appeared that he habitually lived the whole day on the streets, faring as best he could (that is, about as badly as possible), and creeping late at night for a shelter into the wretched room his mother occupied. On being sent to Canada after some training, he was admitted to the house of a certain Canadian barrister as a page boy. The family soon grew to like him, and he quickly became a general favourite. Finally his employer was so pleased with him that, after a year's service, he begged to be allowed to enter into articles of adoption, and so Frank became the adopted son of a professional gentleman in a good position. He fulfilled the promise of his boyhood, and profited to the utmost by the opening which was set before him. I have had the pleasure of learning that he has lately been admitted to the office of his adopted father. The latter is also a member of the Canadian House of Commons, so that my boy Frank now mingles constantly with persons in the best class of society. One of these days he expects to be called to the bar himself, and who knows what further distinction may not lie before him?

ROMISH TACTICS.

Upon the streets of London there are great numbers of homeless Roman Catholic children, as likewise in the common lodging-houses, in the casual wards, and in tramps' kitchens. It is a curious and suggestive fact, which can neither be gainsaid or resisted, that no attempt, or only the very feeblest and most desultory, has been organised by Roman Catholicism to rescue from crime, from degradation, and from uttermost poverty, waifs and strays of either sex whom they claim for their community.

Our Homes come upon the scene with their helping hand and their bright opportunities; and, lo! all is changed. These children are no sooner admitted through our portals, than the Roman Catholics grow zealous, almost to slaying, about the salvation of the little ones, and set all possible wheels in motion to invoke the strong arm of the law for their dismissal from our Homes in the sacred names of liberty, parental authority, and religious toleration.

It need hardly be said that we resist to the utmost such encroachments, as we deem them, upon child rights and upon the charter of our Homes. God helping us, we will never willingly surrender a child to the custody of criminal or immoral parents or relatives on the score of religion; and we cannot but believe that when the right moment comes to publish all the facts of the cases, which even as we write are under consideration by the courts, and therefore cannot be more particularly referred to, Christian public opinion will be entirely with us. But, be this as it may, our course is clear, and our line of action determined upon beforehand; we cannot swerve to the right hand or to the left.

MONEY MATTERS.

To close our financial year (which ends on March 31) on the right side of the balance-sheet, I shall require a very considerable sum, and can but entreat those who have joined our Prayer Union to unite afresh and regularly every day in beseeching our Father to touch the hearts of his children everywhere so to respond to the needs of his growing work that the whole of the heavy burdens which still linger may be swept away. With what a light heart I would go to work if I had nothing to do with money-getting, if some body of Christian people would but unite together and say, "We will supply you with so much money every year, and you need have no further anxiety, nor take any steps to seek pecuniary aid! We will see to that. You give yourself entirely to doing the work." I suppose, however, the picture is too fair a one to be realised, and I must be content to plod on slowly, but by God's help surely, spending half my time in seeking for and rescuing homeless children, and the other half in talking about them and writing about them, and endeavouring to stir up and awaken the conscience of the Lord's people on their behalf.

Emigrant Lads.

Dr. Barnardo attended the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting, on Monday, with a band of boys about to sail for Canada. From the strong Labour House lads down to the smallest of the party, the boys presented a smart and healthy appearance. A goodly number of friends assembled to look them in the face and pray that God would take them safely across the water and bless them in the great Dominion of the West. In the course of an address, Dr. Barnardo gave some particulars of the party, 226 in number, and the largest he has ever been permitted to send out. More than half the entire number, 130 in fact, were taken into the Homes from off the streets. The average period of residence in the Institutions reached twelve months and three days, the highest average yet attained, and therefore he had greater hopes of the temporal success of the lads than he could have entertained if they had been less time under his care. Only twenty-two of the number have both parents living; twenty-seven have only a father living, and seventy-nine only a mother; while ninety-eight have neither father nor mother. In some cases the surroundings from which the lads have been rescued were so degraded that nothing better could happen to the lads than that they should be taken right away. On the other hand, some of the lads have had praying mothers, whose prayers are being answered. Inquiries showed that thirty-six counties in the United Kingdom were represented: while there were also boys (one each) from the Channel Islands, Germany, Russia, and India. Over 100 of the whole have professed to find Christ as their Saviour, and will, it is hoped, be missionaries as well as good citizens in Canada. Dr. Barnardo expressed gratitude to God for the blessing which has attended the spiritual teaching imparted in the Homes. There are to-day 3090 children in the Institutions, the largest number that has ever been under his care. The expenses incidental to outfit and voyage have been paid in respect of 126 of the emigrating boys; the older of them cost £11 each, and the younger £9. In conclusion, Dr. Barnardo alluded to the kindly supervision that is exercised over the lads while in Canada, so that the tie with the Rescue Institutions is not broken until that age is reached at which they can look after themselves.

Prayer and testimony followed. Two lads from the Labour Homes confessed Christ, declaring their intention also to confess Him in Canada. God was fervently asked to bless the lads, and also increasingly to bless Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

BRISTOL MEN'S BIBLE-CLASSES.—The membership of these Sunday afternoon classes has now increased to over 800. All the several departments of work show progress during the past year. We are glad to learn, from the report, that the president, Mr. C. R. Parsons, has assisted in the establishment and development of similar classes in several other parts of the country. The Sunday morning class for lads has 146 names on the roll. The general secretary of the work is Mr. C. H. Trezise, Melbourne House, Clark-street, Bristol.

THE BLIND.—Through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. James Armitage, and in connection with the East-end Branch of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, some 430 blind men and women and guides were recently entertained to tea at the Infant School, Redman's-road, Stepney-green. In the Eastern division of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society there are three blind visitors, or rather missionaries, who have under visitation over 230 blind people, the work being very similar to that of the ordinary City missionary—viz., reading the Scriptures, offering prayer, giving religious instruction, and relieving, through the Society, the needy. Great numbers have been helped in the time of need; while many in absolute want and sickness have been assisted.

Women and Temperance.

Like the advocates of every good cause, temperance reformers have had, and still have, an uphill battle to fight. All the more they welcome the tokens of encouragement that now and then cross their path. Such an event was the meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association at the Mansion House last week. To find that regal apartment, the Egyptian Hall, which has so often re-echoed to the clink of the wine-glass, and the convivial song, crammed to overflowing with the friends of the temperance cause, is surely an indication that that cause, like the soul of John Brown, is "marching on." The present chief magistrate of the City of London is a warm friend of the movement, and it is a significant sign of the times that the two most numerously attended meetings at the Mayoral Mansion as yet during his régime have been temperance meetings.

This meeting called by the British Women's Association was an unqualified success. In his presidential speech, the Lord Mayor spoke out right bravely in favour, not only of local option, but of the popular veto. He was also strong in his condemnation of the grocer's licence as an aider and abettor of secret drinking among women. Mrs. Ward Poole spoke well in moving a resolution calling for temperance legislation, and this was seconded by the veteran temperance orator, Mr. J. H. Raper, in his most efficient and convincing style. Then came the silvery tones of Mrs. Ormiston Chant, who pathetically pleaded the cause of the suffering children. Lady Sebright, following in the same strain, told of the many little ones taken to hospitals in London through accidents caused by their having taken drink. She knew of one child taken to the London Hospital whose first words were, "Missy, give me a drop o' gin, please." Formerly it used to be expected that abstainers should apologise for drinking water. Her Ladyship said she once visited a well-known brewer who considered it "an insult to a host to ask for a glass of water." Now we find that the wine drinkers are they who apologise.

Canon Wilberforce was received with a tempest of cheering, which broke out again and again as he proceeded with an eloquent vindication of abstinence principles. In speaking of women's work, he threw a fine scorn on the popular phrase, "the weaker sex." The vials of his satire were also poured out on the current talk as to "the failure of the teetotal movement." At the same time we need more "real business" in this fight. Let us ever remember the words of the Master, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" We must not be content simply to "hold the fort"; we must go forth and attack and rout the enemy. Surely there is no business that can be compared to the tearing off of the shackles that bind humanity. How can we help being earnest in this cause when we are brought face to face with the miseries caused by the drink? Within a mile of the very spot there was an aggregate of inconceivable misery that might drive one mad. The sneers at the blue ribbon, and that which it represents, the fiery Canon declared to be nothing but the crackling of thorns under a pot. What is the mockery of a whole world compared to the saving of a single soul?

There were yet several ladies to address the meeting, which they did briefly, and the splendid demonstration closed with "the temperance doxology":—

> Praise God from whom all blessings flow,
> Praise Him who heals the drunkard's woe,
> Praise Him who leads the temperance host,
> Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

Major Whittle in Edinburgh.

The last two weeks have been the best, and our only regret is that we had not arranged for three months instead of six weeks. A second campaign, beginning about the middle of October and going on to Christmas, would, we believe, be of immense blessing to our city, and especially to our students, who through various causes could not be so easily reached during the last six weeks. The manliness of the Major's style, the solidity of his teaching, and the lovableness of his ways, would infallibly attract the young men; and could his son accompany him, still greater results might be anticipated.

The impression produced on Leith may be gauged by the fact that twenty out of its twenty-three ministers took part in the mission; the three who absented themselves were Scotch Episcopalians. During the last week in the Free Assembly Hall, the Leith ministers have been prominent in the noon meeting, and a large contingent of the overflowing Leith congregations have come up nightly to swell our numbers.

A special feature in the last week has been the troops of boys and young lads with shining faces seated in different parts of the hall. Afterwards they crowd off to Mr. Charles Whittle's young men's after-meeting. Most of these youngsters were captured for the Lord in the circus, on the Sabbath evenings, where about a hundred of them nightly managed to fill the front benches. At first there was a little restlessness, and one or two would leave; but latterly no more intent listeners could be found. They all seemed to remain to the after-meeting, and when we came to deal with them, it was often to discover that they had "found Him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth," while the good news was being preached. When we got to Leith, a fresh contingent joined the ranks in the shape of the telegraph boys. Some godly postmen and devoted young ladies had been ministering to them and praying for them, and now great was their joy in this blessed season of reaping.

A similar preparatory work had been going on among the Edinburgh boys, and many of them also turned to the Lord. These lads, as, one after another, they received Christ, became young Andrews and Philips. Nor were they content with one Peter and one Nathanael, but some of them would bring in two and three, and even six, at a time. Mr. C. Whittle's great aim in his after-meetings was to obtain confession of Christ. His own manly, straightforward testimony, and his indignant protests against the shame of denial, which non-confession meant, greatly helped to open coward lips; but the fearless outspoken testimony of little fellows of ten or twelve years of age often compelled confessions that had withstood all other promptings.

Dr. Alexander Whyte, in the midst of his manifold labours, managed to be present at one of these meetings. It was by no means one of the most striking of these gatherings, yet, on the following Tuesday, as he discoursed on Bunyan's "Grace Abounding," he referred to it in the following terms: "I do not know whether any of you have been to hear Major Whittle; you have missed a great deal if you have not. Last week I was present; it was a grand meeting; I never got my heart so warmed in my life as I did at the meeting of young men. It was a testimony meeting. Perhaps you are too proper to attend such. Ah! you have been in more improper places. It was a grand sight to see those young men, lads of from seventeen to twenty—students, clerks, rich men's sons, and poor lads from the country—standing up, like the Psalmist, to tell what God had done for their souls.' 'This was the stepping-stone I got my feet on.' 'This was the verse.' 'This is my own peculiar Scripture.' It would have done you heart good to have heard them. I wish my boy had been old enough to have gone. I wanted to give them a verse; but I was too old, so I sat in a corner regretting my years, as one after another rose. Oh, if you had just heard them! There is hope for Edinburgh and for Scotland when her sons gather in that way and tell of the stepping-stones, piers, and bulwarks, on which were planted their gliding feet."

From beginning to end our beloved evangelist has kept himself in the back ground, and has held up Christ. Beginning with man's inborn sinful nature, and his helplessness to alter it, and with his own actual sins and his inability to atone for them, he pointed us away to God's way of salvation through the death of his beloved Son. He showed us how this salvation became ours, by trusting the Saviour and confessing Him. Then he pointed to the proof of the new birth, which would be seen in the changed aims and motives, and desires and loves of the believer. Lastly, he threw the responsibility of acceptance on all who heard and gave them an opportunity of rising in their places to indicate their willingness to submit to God. Thereafter the hearty band of workers got among the anxious, and individual difficulties were solved over the Word of God. That father and son may come back to us in October is our earnest prayer.

We pray that at Dundee, Aberdeen, and elsewhere, they may be used more abundantly even than among ourselves. D. M.

OUR YOUNG SHOP-GIRLS.

Some years ago your readers kindly assisted in establishing a little Home for sick shop-women on the borders of Epping Forest. Since that time many hundreds have revelled in the sweet air, the rest, and the love, that provided all, and returned to their toiling work in the hot City, cheered, soothed, and re-established in health, utterly different in appearance from the wan and almost despairing girls who begged for a short respite from this struggle for life. The surroundings in this peaceful little Home, too, work a great change in their spiritual condition. The daily prayer and Bible reading, texts on the walls, kind and gentle voices trying to soothe and comfort them, all so delight the weary strugglers that one of them thought it must be "just like heaven."

But this little Paradise is closed now, because the funds have all run out. The young ladies who arranged it will not go into debt, and it must remain closed until the kind friends of these poor workers are again able to spare the needful sum for the simple cottage life. Miss Reynolds begs attention to this now, as she is expecting many applications for Easter, and entreaties that she will allow the applicants another week in the Forest, and help to save the fading life of those in whom disease has already begun its mournful work. Many of us are talking of summer plans; can we not lend a moment to think of those to whom no plans for rest, health, and "pleasure" are possible? The chief worker at the Home is Miss Helen Reynolds, Epping New-road, Buckhurst-hill, Essex, who will gladly give full particulars and receive help.

Tower Hamlets Mission.—The Artisan Y.M.C.A. has very nearly two hundred members, all workingmen in the East-end of London, and as such they are not admitted into any of the seaside Homes of the Y.M.C.A. Will anyone lend us a cottage for a few months, during which time evangelistic services would be held, or help us to enable our working-men to have a well-earned rest at some seaside place? Sydney B. Russell.

CHILDREN FOR CANADA.

FROM THE LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

MRS. BIRT has sailed for Canada with the thirty-second band of little ones from the Institution which she superintends. With the high purpose and excellent working of the Liverpool Sheltering Homes our readers are familiar. Every year about 300 orphan and destitute children are admitted and cared for, and of these from 150 to 200 are annually introduced into Christian homes in Canada. In the Homes they are trained for work and given an elementary education; in the Dominion across the water they are provided for as to their material needs, and have opportunities of continuing their education. Moreover, they find themselves in a land with room for millions, and not a few of them have in these circumstances made their way to positions of respectability and influence.

For the six months' training, maintenance, clothing, outfit, and travelling expenses, it takes £15 for each child. Having seen to the placing of the children under her care, Mrs. Birt hopes to return and furnish the new Home in Myrtle-street, Liverpool, and rescue and train another band of little ones for a happier and holier life. We trust that Mrs. Birt will be greatly cheered by what she will see and hear in Canada of the success of the boys and girls once under her care, and also stimulated to continue to wage battle against ignorance and misery among the poor of Liverpool.

FROM MR. QUARRIER'S HOMES.

A few days ago a farewell meeting was held in the church amidst the Cottage Homes at Bridge of Weir, when 130 boys, bound for Canada, were commended to the protection of the Lord. Sympathisers attended from all parts of the West of Scotland, and Mr. Quarrier beautifully testified to God's loving care of the little ones. He produced two hundred letters received this year from his children already in Canada, all of whom expressed gratitude to God for past mercies. Some were studying for the ministry, some going into business, some getting married, and so on. Mr. Quarrier gave an account of the manner in which the children are dealt with in Canada, where the Brockville Distributing Home is a very interesting centre of operations. Both boys and girls are carefully watched over until they are eighteen years of age. For the last six years an average of 250 children per annum have been sent from the Homes.

Mr. Quarrier went on to say that he hoped by and by to be able to send as many as 400 a year across the water. To do this ten additional houses will be required. The work is greatly needed, for from all parts of Scotland the cry comes, "Cannot you help us with the orphans?" In conclusion, he said he had resolved, the Lord helping him, to do the Scottish poorhouses out of the orphans. At present there are some 5000 fatherless children in the poorhouses of Scotland, and he wishes to be called upon to save the little ones from ever going there. A party of 120 girls will be ready to start about the middle of May.

ROME.—A meeting was lately held on behalf of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, Bishop Cheetham in the chair. It was addressed by Miss Wanton, of Amritsar, who has laboured for fifteen years in the Punjaub, and has come to Europe to recruit her health, hoping to return to her mission work in the autumn. The Mohammedans, she said, are more ready to receive the truth than the Punjaubi. The medical mission at Amritsar had 31,000 patients in one year. Miss Clay's village mission has been much blessed; also the work of Miss Tucker (better known as A.L.O.E.) at Peshawur. Miss Wanton pressed home the need of workers; in Peshawur there is one worker to a population of 15,000 people. A liberal collection was made at the close of this interesting meeting.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has held a seven days' mission at Soho-hill Chapel, Birmingham, with very encouraging results; there were 150 inquirers from the Sunday-schools alone.

Mr. S. T. Crocker, evangelist, has brought to a close a successful mission at the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Totterdown. The services were largely attended, and numbers professed conversion.

Mr. Walter Notman has completed three weeks' services at Bonvilstone and Trehill, South Wales. He is about to conduct a united mission at Pontypridd, S. Wales, for which prayer is asked.

Worksop.—Mrs. W. E. Legg, of Hampstead, has completed a week's mission in connection with St. John's Church in this town. The meetings were well attended, and numbers testified to blessing received, both at the Bible-readings, and at the evangelistic services.

Mr. E. P. Telford has conducted recently a twelve days' mission, prior to his leaving for "a tour round the world," in Scotland-street Chapel, Sheffield, with much power and acceptance. Great blessing has been realised, believers have been quickened, and many conversions. Mr. Telford is now in the second week of a successful mission near Bournemouth.

North London.—A successful eight days' mission has been held at Highbury Corner Gospel Mission Hall, conducted by the North London Evangelists' Association. Some few conversions have come to the knowledge of the workers, while believers have been stirred up to more zeal in the Master's cause.

Hotwells, Clifton.—An interesting series of evangelistic addresses has closed here, conducted by Messrs. Newby and Beckley. Much prayer preceded, and the services are believed to have been owned of God, to saint and sinner. An interesting feature of them has been the many requests for prayer for relatives and friends.

Rewington, Warwick.—In this sequestered hamlet we have experienced a blessed time. Mr. J. McAuliffe spoke the word in faithfulness and power, and at every mission service there have been conversions. On Monday night, at a thanksgiving service, many Christians testified to blessing received, as well as those who have just been converted. F. M. B.

Evangelistic Mission.—Messrs. Newell and Hall have recently held missions at Eynsham and Charlton (Oxfordshire), visiting from house to house, circulating Gospel papers, and addressing numerous meetings. Several persons testified to the blessing they had received. Mr. Routledge has also been visiting Bodicote, and neighbouring villages, holding special meetings, with most encouraging results.

Rev. Sam P. Jones (writes a correspondent) has been at work in California since January 13, and the great good which, under God, has attended his efforts is wonderful. Los Angeles was stirred during his stay there, and in Sacramento even more wonderful results were obtained. It is a regular centre for gambling. After Mr. Jones's sermon to men only, the Mayor and chief of police of the city had all the gambling-hells closed. The prospects of a grand work under his ministry at San Francisco are very encouraging.

Bible Carriage Work.—The Liverpool carriage worked by Messrs. Taylor and Fellows, has been scattering the "good seed" during the past few weeks in Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire. The weather has been very rough for outdoor work, nevertheless a goodly number of Scriptures and Gospel books have been circulated, and many have listened to the story of the Cross, told out from the carriage. They purpose working for a time in the Potteries. The Bethany Bible-van is being worked in Yorkshire. NORTHCOTE WILLY.

Cambridge-avenue, Chapeltown-road, Leeds.

The united churches of Ottery St. Mary, Devon (Congregationalists, Baptists, Wesleyans, "Brethren," and Salvationists), have held a Gospel mission in the town and neighbourhood during five successive weeks past, conducted by Mr. Oscar Owers, of the Evangelisation Society. Very marked clearness and soundness of Gospel teaching, with great power of argument and appeal, characterised the services throughout, with the blessed result that many were turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. The afternoon "Bible talks," by Mr. Owers were also well attended by Christian people, who have received great stimulus in the service of their Master.

Mr. George King has been evangelising lately at East Grinstead and Tunbridge Wells.

West Brighton.—A seven days' mission has been conducted at Clarendon-villas mission-hall by Mr. John M. McAuliffe. Much power and blessing accompanied the preaching of the Word. The afternoon Bible-readings were helpful to many Christians, and the Gospel meetings were attended by hundreds of the working classes.

Rev. J. Compston, of Upper Tooting, has been spending some weeks in evangelistic labours with the Baptist Church, York-road, Leeds. He then proceeded to Barnsley for a ten days' Gospel mission at the Baptist Mission Chapel, Parker-street, where a very promising commencement has been made.

Messrs. Hyde and Stevenson.—These evangelists have held a successful mission in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. Some very hopeful cases of conversion took place. Mr. Hyde's addresses were earnest and to the point; Mr. Stevenson's singing was greatly appreciated. Many prayers will follow these brethren in their future labours.

Mr. George Clarke's mission at Belfast has been attended by many tokens of Divine blessing. Classes that have never been reached before have been attending the meetings, and the workers are full of rejoicing. There have been after-meetings for men only, lads only, and women only, in three different churches. Mr. Clarke has secured the ear of young men of athletic inclinations; and, what is better, Christ has revealed Himself to many of them. The Y.M.C.A. is doing a wonderfully good work, and the Y.W.C.A. is also pushing ahead. It is hoped that both these agencies will receive great and lasting help from this mission.

Mr. Charles Inglis has just concluded a mission at Brighton, under the auspices of the Young Women's Christian Association. A very deep interest was taken in the mission—so much so, that three meetings were held daily, and every service was greatly owned and blessed of God. The afternoon meetings for Bible talks have not only been crowded by Christians of all positions in life, but very many workers have confessed how greatly they have been helped by the points and jottings they have received. Twice every night meetings have been held to reach all classes; and the solemn searching addresses which have been given have led numbers to a decision for Christ.

Stornoway, Lewis, N.B.—During the last fortnight evangelistic meetings have been held in the Free English Church (Rev. D. J. Martin's), conducted by Mr. S. Mackenzie, evangelist, from Campbeltown. The meetings have been largely attended, and many cases of spiritual decision have been the result. An interesting feature of the work has been that many have been calling at the Manse during the day to see Mr. Mackenzie concerning their difficulties. The interest taken in the meetings throughout the town is very perceptible, and is shared by all classes of the community. The work is still going on in a very encouraging manner, Mr. Mackenzie having decided to remain another week. THOMAS RUSSELL.

Stornoway, March 18.

Mr. H. S. Bryson is open for engagements to conduct evangelistic services. In past time he has laboured with much blessing in various parts of the country. His address is 9, Athol-street, Dunston-on-Tyne.

VAUDOIS OF THE UPPER ALPS.—A cry of bitter anguish comes from these poor people. M. Réveillaud, in Le Signal, introducing an urgent appeal on their behalf from an influential committee in Paris, refers to the lamentably miserable condition of the population of the hamlets of Dormillouse, Les Violins, and Les Mensals. He points out that, in the opinion of the pastors of the people, extinction through the ravages of disease and want of sustenance, or emigration by the assistance of benevolent friends, are inevitable alternatives. This opinion he himself confirms, after personal observation. The proposal is that more of the inhabitants shall be helped to join their brethren already planted (and doing well) in the colony of Trois Marabouts, in the province of Oran, Algeria. All whose pity is stirred by the unhappy condition of these villagers are asked to assist in this merciful movement. Baron Gustave de Turckheim, 7, Rue des Batignolles, Paris, is secretary of the Protestant Committee of Colonisation, which has charge of the matter.

OBITUARY.

REV. LUKE TYERMAN.

REV. LUKE TYERMAN, one of the foremost ministers of the Wesleyan Methodists, died last week at his residence, Clapham Park, after a lingering illness. The deceased entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1844. After twenty years in active circuit work in Newcastle, Bristol, Sheffield, Manchester, and Liverpool, where his ministry drew crowds, he came to the Metropolis, and since that time had devoted himself almost wholly to literature. He is known throughout Methodism as the biographer of Wesley, Whitfield, and John Fletcher.

REV. DR. EDERSHEIM.

Rev. Alfred Edersheim, the well-known writer on Jewish history and the life and times of our Lord, expired at Mentone, a few days ago, after only a brief illness, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. Born in Austria, and educated in the Jewish religion, he graduated at Kiel and Giessen, and finished his theological course in Scotland. Holding foreign and British degrees in Arts, Philosophy, and Divinity, he entered the ministry of the Church of England, and was for some time Vicar of Loders, in Dorset. During recent years he had resided at Oxford, where he discharged important duties in connection with the University. To the world at large he was known by his very useful magazine articles and numerous theological works, including "The Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah," "The Temple and its Ministry," and "A Bible History." He was an earnest and strong defender of the faith of the Gospel, and his writings have been blessed to many. He was, moreover, a man of singularly amiable disposition, and will be missed by a large circle of friends.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

BERLIN has sadly too few places of worship. One parish has 80,000 souls to one church; another has 50,000 to a building hardly capable of holding 500 persons; the parish of St. John has a church to seat 450, with a surrounding population of 70,000! Sion parish, with 105,000 souls, has but one church and three pastors.

L'ASILE DE LA MUETTE, a Protestant Home for aged poor, situate at No. 9, Rue des Boulets, Paris, has been recognised by the President of the Republic as an institution of public utility, and therefore entitled to certain privileges. Under the control of the Reformed Church, the Asylum shelters Protestants of both sexes and divers nationalities and forms of faith. At present there are 25 male and 38 female inmates.

SPAIN.—M. Vila, pastor at Malaga, condemned to imprisonment for two years for having written and published a tract on the superstitions of the Roman Church, has been pardoned. This act of justice on the part of the Government is reassuring for the prospects of the Gospel in Spain. Protestant chapels are, says a Spanish correspondent, being multiplied in all parts of the country, and old Romish churches have, in some cases been transformed into evangelical places of worship.

KABYLIA.—Pastor Th. Hocart, writing from Il-Maten, reports that a lady friend from Jersey has opened a sewing-class for girls in association with his mission. The Mohammedan priests are in every way possible opposing the work, but they are unable to dismay those who, under God, have at heart the eternal welfare of the people. The fact that the Gospels of Luke and John are now translated into Kabyle is an indication of substantial progress in this part of the mission field.

SWITZERLAND.—The long-continued exertions of the Swiss Society for the Observance of Sunday have been fruitful of very gratifying results, among the most important of which must be reckoned the proposed legislation on behalf of railway employés, at present before the Chambers, with the support of the Federal Council. The Society's efforts have been directed to securing weekly rest for other classes of workmen, and it is hoped that beneficent legislation will in due course be extended to postmen, tramway-men, and others. The Society's memorial to the members of the Federal Chambers sets forth many and strong reasons, patriotic, humane, and moral, for the proposed social amelioration.

SYRIA.—The Turkish authorities seem resolved to close all mission schools in Syria. Schools of the Irish Presbyterian Mission, of the American Mission, of the Church Missionary Society, and of the Jesuits have been closed, notwithstanding the spontaneous desire of the people for teachers and educational facilities.—During an outburst of fanaticism in Syria some years ago, one of the missionaries of the Irish Presbyterian Church was massacred in the streets of Damascus. Recently, at Antioch, another martyrdom has taken place in connection with the mission of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Ireland in that city. The telegram which reached Belfast said: "Member murdered for religion by Greek Churchmen; religious liberty departed; ask the prayers of the Church." The great success of Rev. Dr. Martin in this mission field has roused the fierce persecution which has produced this sad outrage.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. F. S. Webster, late of the Church Army, was a few days ago inducted to the living of St. Thomas's, Birmingham.

The proposal to hold a large public gathering of evangelical clergy and laity at Exeter Hall in June next, has been dropped. A private conference is still, however, in contemplation.

The Church Missionary Society has of late been receiving an unprecedented number of offers of service from clergymen and others, not a week passing without at least one such offer being made. Amongst the most striking of these is that of a young medical man of high promise, a professor, who will probably be sent to China to train men for medical mission work there.

BAPTIST.

The church at St. George's-place, Canterbury, lately celebrated their twenty-fifth anniversary. Rev. W. Townsend has had the oversight of the church for five years, during which time a good and growing work has been done, congregations have been good, and the various agencies of the church have been well maintained in constant and progressive activity. During his pastorate 150 have been baptized, and 205 received into fellowship by him.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John McNeill's intimation to his people, "Shut your shops and come to the Thursday evening service, and the Lord will make it up to you," has had the desired effect—the attendance at his first Thursday evening meeting being so large as to necessitate an adjournment from the lecture hall to the church.

An interesting wedding took place at St. Mark's Church, Sheffield, on Wednesday week, when Mr. Thomas McCubbin Young, son of Rev. J. Young, of Greenock, was married to Miss Florence M. Benson, of Sheffield. Mr. Young has been appointed medical missionary to Moukden, Manchuria, China, in succession to Dr. Dugald Christie, and in connection with the Mission of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland.

METHODIST.

A great Home Mission Convention has been held at Sheffield. It was attended by most of the ministers in the Sheffield Wesleyan "district," and the influence of meetings, says The Methodist Times, will unquestionably be great in that important centre.

A convention of the various branches of the Methodist Church at Penzance was held in the Wesleyan Chapel the other day. Rev. E. Workman (Wesleyan), who presided, said that Methodism, as a whole, was never so powerful and progressive as in the present day, and so long as it kept to its great work of spreading Spiritural holiness it would continue to grow.

Rev. Thomas Champness's Joyful News Mission is doing good work in Radnorshire, Worcestershire, and Shropshire, as well as in other parts of the country. In some parts of the counties named chapels had been closed, sometimes because preachers could not be found to take the services, and sometimes because money to carry them on could not be obtained. In several cases closed chapels have been re-opened by Mr. Champness's men, and they are now well attended, and are often the birthplace of souls.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Joseph Cosand reports Friends' work in Japan as now "in a fair condition of prosperity."

Margaret W. Haines, of Pennsylvania, appeals earnestly for a lady missionary teacher for Japan.

Murray Shipley and wife have just paid a visit to Metamoras, Mexico, and Elkanah Beard has laboured in Ohio.

Mary Ann Marriage Allen, of Dublin, is devotedly at work among coloured people and others in North Carolina.

The Society of Christian Endeavour, Glens Falls, New York, is inviting young Friends to meet them during yearly meeting there.

Josiah Dillon, of Marchioneale, Jamaica, appeals to American Friends for a successor there, as he must return home in spring.

"It is plainly observable," says The Christian Worker, "that the Lord is working with remarkable power this winter in evangelistic service in our Church."

President J. J. Mills gives a very interesting account of his travels in Palestine and France, and Professor J. Rendel Harris writes glowingly from Jerusalem.

The Christian Worker of the 28th ult. strongly advocates the continuance of separate women's church meetings as a training school for women's talents.

There will be widespread sorrow and sympathy at the death of Arthur John Naish, of Birmingham, which took place, after a lingering illness, on the 21st inst. As an earnest evangelical minister of wide sympathies, he will be greatly missed.

John T. Dorland has recently been at Reigate, in Surrey, and at Bunhill Fields, London, and much blessing has resulted. The noonday Bible-readings at the former place were very favoured times, and at nights there was not even standing-room for those wishing to attend; while at Bunhill meetings fifty professed conversion. After attending Kent quarterly meeting last week, Mr. Dorland was joined by his wife from Canada.

SALVATION ARMY.

Less than three months ago the Army celebrated the commissioning of the 7000th officer. Since then, another thousand have been added, making 8000. The number is still increasing.

General Booth's sixtieth birthday (April 10) is to be celebrated in the Congress Hall, at Clapton, and by the Salvation Army generally, with a great effort to raise an Ebenezer Fund of £6000 for the further extension of the work.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The church at Stroud Green, of which Rev. E. D. Braimbridge is minister, has completed the first year of its existence. On Wednesday evening last week this event was commemorated by a special meeting of the members, when a digest of the work accomplished during the past year was given. The different organisations connected with it each furnished ground to "thank God and take courage."

Lyndhurst-road Church, Hampstead, of which Mr. R. F. Horton is pastor, was only formed on October 27, 1880, when fifty-nine entered into fellowship; the present number of members is 878, and the amount raised for various purposes last year was £3677. Among the successful church institutions are a young men's guild, a bi-monthly Wednesday evening service for men, men's Bible-classes on Saturday and Sunday, a church poor fund that raised £2.5 last year, and an invalid dinner fund.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Meetings for special prayer for Ireland were held last week in various cities and towns of Ireland.

Mr. C. W. Horne has held a series of Gospel meetings in Victoria Hall, Belfast, during the past week.

There are now 780 orphans under the care of the Protestant Orphan Society of Antrim and Down.

An eight days' evangelistic mission ha been conducted, with gratifying results, in Holywood, co. Down, by Rev. W. E. Burroughs.

Revs. J. Coulter and William Addy have held a fortnight s series of Gospel services in the Methodist Church, Springfield, at which many souls received much blessing.

Dr. Maurice Eustace, son of Dr. Eustace, of Elmhurst, Glasnevin, co. Dublin, is going out to Julfa, Persia, as a medical missionary, under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society.

The Ulster Institution for the deaf, dumb, and blind is still continuing its career of benefit and usefulness. During the year 132 pupils, of whom 106 were deaf and dumb, and twenty-six blind, received the benefit of the Institution.

This is to be the last week of Mr. George Clarke's mission in Belfast, and as the meetings approach their close the interest and attendance increase. The services last week in Fisherwick-place Church were times of refreshing to many souls.

Mr. R. Clarke, formerly connected with the Irish Evangelisation Society, but now an evangelist connected with the Baptist Church in Dublin, has been holding during the past fortnight Gospel services, with encouraging results, in the Baptist Church, Banbridge.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Mr. M. Ferguson, Lanarkshire Christian Union evangelist, is conducting special meetings at Newbigging Public School.

Gospel meetings were held last week at Bolton-street Mission, Glasgow, conducted by ex-Bailie George and others; much blessing followed.

Evangelistic services have been held during the past week in Brandon-street U.P. Church, Hamilton. They were well attended and much blessed.

The Y.M.C.A., Paisley, are conducting special services in the Clark Hall every Sabbath evening, which are attended by nearly 2000. Much good is being done.

Miss Tyson has been addressing children's meetings at Cowcaddens' Free Church Hall, Glasgow. They have been largely attended. Miss Tyson's interesting work has been greatly blessed here.

Miss Christie, daughter of Professor Christie, of Aberdeen, has received an appointment as missionary to Domasi, East Africa, from the Ladies' Association of the Church of Scotland. Miss Christie, with two other missionaries—Mrs. Fenwick and Rev. A. Hetherwick—will leave for the mission field early in May.

The U.P. Church at Bathgate (Rev. J. Lindsay, pastor) has witnessed a glorious work of grace during the last three weeks. Both in the prayer and evangelistic meetings, the Holy Spirit was powerfully present, and God's children were gladdened by seeing between thirty-five and forty persons yielding themselves to the Lord. All of these, excepting two, are young women and young men. A stranger, on entering, would possibly have been astonished at seeing the brethren of the Salvation Army (which is doing a good work here) present night after night.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Mr. Richard Vynne, Swaffham, a devoted worker and most liberal supporter of the cause of Christ.—Rev. Ishmael Jones, a Wesleyan minister for very many years.—Rev. T. H. Nock, rector of Bressingham, Norfolk.—Dr. Holland Nimmons McTyeire, senior bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, U.S.A..—Mrs. Lakin, wife of Mr. Henry Lakin, evangelist.—Rev. R. H. Groome, rector of Monk Soham, formerly for some years Archdeacon of Suffolk.—Rev. Asugo Kenjiro, of Fukuoka, Nagasaki district, an honoured pastor of the American Methodist Episcopal Church in Japan.—Rev. W. H. Finnimore, United Methodist Free Churches minister of Liskeard, Cornwall.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and. Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, MARCH 31.—Exodus XXIV.

In xx. 21 we learn that Moses remained in communion with God whilst receiving the regulations detailed in xxi., xxii., xxiii. On the following day, this covenant between God and the people was solemnly ratified. The altar built under the hill (4) probably represented God; and the twelve pillars the tribes of Israel. The young men (5) did the work of the priests according to xiii. 2, until the tribe of Levi was set definitely apart for this work. It must have been a very solemn scene, when Israel and its King thus entered into holy compact, and the copious sprinkling of blood intimated that they could not have stood as parties to that covenant with God, unless by virtue of shed life. This scene is specially referred to in Heb. ix. 18—20. There were three ascents of Sinai.

First, Moses went up with the elders (9).—Of course they did not really see God (1 Tim. vi. 16 and Deut. iv. 15). But, doubtless, there was some symbol or emblem of the Divine Presence, like the Shechinah of after days. The azure blue tesselated pavement is very suggestive of the purity and beauty of the outward surroundings of this Theophany. But the glory did not smite them dead, they were even able to eat and drink with equanimity (11), because they stood on the basis of shed life. This feasting on the flesh of slain victims was the precursor of the peace-offerings, and has its counterpart in the Lord's Supper.

Second, Moses went up with Joshua (14—16).—These tables of stone were evidently of Divine workmanship (xxxi. 18). At an elevated spot, within the circle of the illuminated cloud, Moses waited for six days, and this must have greatly tested his patience and faith. How often God keeps us waiting thus. Some cannot endure it (1 Sam. xiii. 12).

Third, Moses went up alone (18).—On the day of rest, he went into the heart of the devouring glory. But where God bids us come, we need not fear to go.

MONDAY, APRIL 1.—Exodus XXV.

We now begin a distinct section of this book, which tells of the construction of the Tabernacle, beginning with the ark of the covenant of the manifested presence of God, and working outwards to the brazen altar at which He met man. This is the pathway trodden once by Christ, from the throne to the cross. The Tabernacle signifies two things: first, it is a pattern of things in the heavens, and gives material representations of the spiritual realities of our worship and service (Heb. ix.); secondly, it is a type of the body of Christ (Heb. x.).

The materials were drawn from the presents made on leaving Egypt, and the spoils of the Egyptian host washed on shore, or were derived from barter with commercial caravans passing through the peninsula. There were mines in the neighbourhood for metals, and the Israelites themselves must have acquired many arts during their sojourn in Egypt.

The plan was given by God.—This was repeatedly insisted on (xxv. 9, 40, xxvi. 30, xxvii. 8; Heb. viii. 5). Well would it be for us did we obey this heavenly injunction, and construct the fabric of our lives only on God's plan as revealed to us by his Word and providence. The vessels of the Tabernacle have been lately described in the series of papers on the Epistle to the Hebrews, in The Christian, to which we refer our readers for greater details.

The Ark was the throne of God (22); it contained the law (1 Kings viii. 9), covered by the mercy-seat or propitiatory (Rom. iii. 25), which was sprinkled with blood once each year. It was meant to travel (14), until 1 Kings viii. 6—8, and Ps. cxxxii. 8. As to the cherubim, see 1 Peter i. 12.

The shewbread table held the bread of the priests (Lev. xxiv. 5—9), which was called presence bread, because it was constantly exhibited before the Lord. It consisted of twelves loaves, made of fine flour, setting forth the provision made in Jesus for our nourishment.

The candlestick had seven branches, three on each side, and one in the centre. The bowls were like the calix of a flower; the knops were round balls or bosses; the flowers were lilies. The light was of pure olive oil, probably always burning (Lev. xxiv. 2). It cost £7000 (39). Is not this a type of Christ, our Light, and of the Church's work in the world?

Oh for more of that willing offering (Rom. xii. 1).

TUESDAY, APRIL 2.—Exodus XXVI.

The Tabernacle consisted of upright boards, over which were thrown curtains, here described, and which probably prefigure certain aspects of Christ's character and work; because, in a mystical sense, the Tabernacle and Temple prefigured his nature (John ii. 21; Heb. x. 5, &c.). Each curtain was fifteen yards long and two yards broad, and they were coupled together lengthways, making a vast awning.

The first set of curtains was a splendid piece of tapestry, embroidered with cherubim in various colours of blue, scarlet, and purple—the cunning work of a damask weaver. The texture setting forth Christ's matchless manhood; his heavenly nature; his royalty; and his death.

The second set of curtains, flung over the first, was made of goats' hair, but they were longer and broader, so as to protect those beneath. How few saw the inner beauty of Jesus (Isa. liii. 3).

The third and fourth sets were of rams' and badgers' skins, respectively. How splendid even these were; the one dyed red, recalling the precious blood-shedding; the other dyed blue, (probably) pointing heavenwards.

The boards of shittim wood (18) were the walls of the Tabernacle. Twenty on the north side, twenty on the south, six on the west; knit by five cross bars. They stood in silver sockets, buried in the sand.

The veil was of the same materials as the inner curtains, and divided the holy from the most holy place. The high priest passed it alone once every year, not without blood (see Heb. ix. 8). How minute are God's directions in all these matters; surely it becomes us to study them minutely; and to remember how microscopic God's interest is in all the details of our lives.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 3.—Exodus XXVII.

The brazen altar here claims our attention. It was about three yards square, and one yard and a half high, made of shittim wood, like the golden altar of incense, but overlaid, not with gold, but with brass, because there sin was to be dealt with by fire. The shittim wood in each case represents Christ's humanity; but, while in the golden altar He is the medium of our praise, in the brazen altar He bears our sins in his own body on the tree, and bears the penalty of sin. "The horns of the altar" were angular projections, in the form of horns. Animals to be sacrificed were bound to these (Ps. cxviii. 27), and part of the blood was applied to them (xxix. 12; Lev. iv. 25).

The court of the Tabernacle (9, &c.) was fifty yards long by twenty-five broad, and was formed by a connected series of curtains, made of fine twined linen yarn, woven in an open network, so that the people could see through; the curtains were suspended on sixty brazen pillars, standing on brazen sockets, with silver filets and hooks. Brazen pins were used to fix the curtains in the sand, so that they might not be swayed about by the wind.

The oil for the light.—This was specially prepared; no one might imitate its mixture. It was pure and beaten. None shine so well in this dark world as those who are pure in heart and poor in spirit. McCheyne used to say, "Beaten oil for the sanctuary," referring to the care with which ministers and others should prepare for their work. The lamp was never to go out, but was constantly ordered. We too shall shine under his care who tends his candlesticks still, sometimes using snuffers, which, however, are of gold (Rev. i. 20). But we derive our oil direct (Zech. iv. 2, 3). A statute for ever (xxx. 21; Lev. iii. 17, vi. 8, &c.).

THURSDAY, APRIL 4.—Exodus XXVIII.

We have here a description of the robes of the high priest, "for glory and beauty."

The ephod was very gorgeous; it was short, reaching from the breast below the loins, and was kept in position by straps, called shoulder-pieces, and which united on the shoulder by two onyx stones (9), set in gold (11), and engraven with names. "The government shall be upon his shoulder" (Isa. ix. 6). The girdle was wrought with golden thread, wound twice round the upper part of the waist (Rev. i. 13).

The breastplate (15, &c.) bore twelve precious stones, containing each the name of a tribe, and arranged in four rows of three in each. These same stones lie at the foundation of the New Jerusalem (Rev. xxi. 19). Thus are our names written on the heart of Jesus, and none can tear us thence. In the breastplate were the Urim and Thummim (30), which were probably large and lustrous stones, which flashed with the Divine "Yes," and dimmed with "No" (Deut. xxxiii. 8), and probably referred to in the white stone of Rev. ii. 17.

The robe of the ephod was worn under it. It was of blue (31), and had a hole through which the head was thrust (32); so that it was carefully formed of one piece (John xix. 23). It ended in a fringe, in which bells and pomegranates of gold were alternated.

The headplate bore an inscription such as each of us should wear always on our fore-front, and should write on our commonest duties (Zech. xiv. 20, 21).

The clothing for the ordinary priests (40, &c.) was very simple, pure white linen. This is the garb in which we should all be attired (Rev. xix. 8). And if there should be any stain or spot, go at once to the laver of the blood of Christ.

FRIDAY, APRIL 5.—Exodus XXIX.

The consecration of priests was an elaborate and impressive ceremony. They were first washed in water (4), intimating the necessity of personal purity on the part of God's priests (Heb. x. 22). Then they were attired in their official robes. All God's priests should be clad in the beauties of holiness (Ps. cx. 3). The anointing oil (7) is the emblem of the Holy Spirit, whose unction is essential to the right performance of all priestly service (Ps. cxxxii., and 1 John ii. 27). It is not enough to have the Holy Spirit within for character; He must be upon us for ministry.

The sacrifices appointed for the occasion were significant. The bullock for sin (Heb. vii. 27). One ram as a burnt-offering, indicating the willingness to be only God's (Rom. xii. 1). A second ram, yielding blood for sprinkled ear, and hand, and foot, in token of the necessity of dedicating all the powers to God. Part of the flesh was waved up and down in token of its being offered to God, it was then burnt; the rest was eaten by the priest, and thus it seemed as if God and man met together, and feasted on the same flesh, in token of peace and fellowship.

The very altar must be cleansed and sanctified (36), for it was made of materials which were under the contagion of sin (Matt. xxiii. 19).

Daily sacrifices were instituted which were to last throughout all the history of the chosen people till the Lamb of God was given; they were presented in the name of the whole people (Numb. xxviii.).

The assurance with which this chapter closes is precious indeed, and yet there is a sense in which each one of us may share in it (John xiv. 23; Gal. ii. 20).

SATURDAY, APRIL 6.—Exodus XXX.

Here, at last, is the altar of incense, 3 ft. 6 in. high by 21 in. broad. It was overlaid with gold, and stood immediately before the veil; indeed, it belonged to the most holy place (Heb. ix. 3, 4). It symbolises our life of prayer, accepted for Christ's sake (Rev. viii. 3). The priest who officiated there was, therefore, like Christ in a very special sense (Luke i. 10). It needed blood (10), and all our prayers need to be cleansed in the blood of Jesus ere they can be acceptable.

The atonement money (11—16) was paid by all alike. In the matter of atonement there can be no distinctions. This is referred to in Matt. xvii. 24—27. The changers of money gathered about the Temple in after days to give the holy shekel in exchange for common or heathen coins.

The laver (18) reminds us of our need of constant daily washing. We need the putting away of sin, not only once when we come to the cross, but always (John xiii.). It is very necessary to keep constantly in the cleansing efficacy of the grace of Christ (1 John i. 6, 7). The laver was made out of the brazen looking-glasses of the women (xxxviii. 8). It was a good use for them. Is there not some allusion to the Word of God, which is as a mirror and as water?

The composition of the oil is a matter of very careful direction. Surely here is a type of the varied graces of the Holy Ghost, which were found in Jesus Christ (Ps. xlv. 8), and will reveal themselves also in us (Gal. v. 22). There must be no imitation of those graces (32, 38). And they must be put to no common use, because all that is fair and lovely in character is for God alone (37).

The Triumphal Entry.

Mark xi. 1—11. Golden Text: Zech. ix. 9.

In this incident our Lord's popularity reached its height. The multitude was increased by the numbers of pilgrims who were journeying to Jerusalem to keep the Passover Feast. The miracles of Jesus, and especially the raising of Lazarus, had spread his fame abroad. The enthusiasm of the people was extreme, and it seemed as though He was now to be welcomed as their Messiah. Yet, strange as it appears, this triumph was the prelude to his sufferings. The meridian of his popularity was followed by the midnight gloom of his passion. He knows, though the people do not, to what that procession leads. It is significant that this entry should take place on the first day of the Passion Week—the 10th of the month Nisan. Upon that day the Passover lamb was to be chosen (Exod. xii. 3). "On that day, therefore, Christ our Passover, who was to be sacrificed for us, was publicly showed."—Matthew Henry. How accurately God fulfils his types! We ought not to forget, also, that in the whole incident prophecy receives a very literal fulfilment (see Matt. xxi. 4, and Golden Text). An incident so fully described in all the Gospels, and so accurately foretold by the prophet, must be worthy of careful study. Parallel passages will be found in Matt. xxi., Luke xix., and John xii.

Preparations for the Triumph (ver. 1).—The villages of Bethphage (House of Figs), and Bethany (House of Dates) lay on the road to Jerusalem from the east. Authorities are not decided as to the site of the former, yet it probably lay between Bethany and Jerusalem. The site of Bethany is marked by the modern village of that name, and is described by Robinson as "a poor village of some twenty families." "The Mount of Olives rises to the east of Jerusalem, and affords a magnificent and most commanding view of the city and the surrounding country."—Morison. "At the time of the Passover, the many trains of pilgrims, and the tents on the sides of the Mount of Olives (in which many pilgrims lodged) made the road look like a festal and excited encampment."—Lange.

A remarkable commission (2—6).—The two disciples were probably Peter and John (Luke xxii. 8); the village to which they were sent was no doubt Bethphage; the man whose colt they were to borrow was either a secret disciple of Jesus, who had not yet begun to follow Him, or was one so fully in sympathy with the popular expectation concerning Jesus, that he was ready to grant any demand from Him; the commission was to borrow the colt. R.V., "Straightway He will send him back hither" (3). The words are the Saviour's promise to return the colt.

It was a strange request; strange, that Jesus should be in such need; that, while they were anticipating his Messiahship, He should be willing to make known his need; and that these apparent signs of humiliation should accompany such indications of power and glory. He knew where the colt was; to whom it belonged; that it would be tied; and that He had but to demand the use of it, and it would be granted (see John ii. 24, 25).

The disciples needed the spirit of unquestioning obedience. The questioning spirit would have said—"We may find no colt tied; and, if we do, is it likely the owner will let it go?" It would seem like a fool's errand. Only those who had confidence in the Saviour would do it. It required "the obedience of faith." To obey without asking any questions is what our Lord demands and deserves. In yielding such obedience the disciples found as He had said (4, 5). His word as to finding the colt and getting the consent of the owners proved true. So all will find who set forth to obey his commands, however unlikely they may be. The event will prove the truth and the wisdom of his word, and so strengthen for future obedience.

The Triumphal Procession (7—10).—It was the only time during our Lord's life that He consented to occupy such a position. No doubt one reason was that prophecy might be fulfilled; but He saw in it a symbol of his future real triumph. Matt. xxiii. 39 predicts another coming to Jerusalem, when He is to have a more sincere welcome. Never, except on this occasion, do we read that the Saviour rode. "He mounted that He might enter the holy city with all the significance of a triumph. He would not enter it, indeed, like a haughty warrior on his steed; He was the Prince of peace. Neither would He enter it in a bedazzlement of purple and pomp and pageantry; He was the meek and lowly One, and yet He was a Conqueror and a King."—Morison. There is no more beautiful proof of his majesty and his meekness than in his equanimity during this season of excitement. The enthusiasm of the multitude did not elate Him. While they were exulting, He was moved to tears and lamentations, because of the impending doom of Jerusalem (Luke xix. 41—44).

The enthusiasm of the multitude was unbounded. Their garments provided a saddle (7), or were spread upon the way for Him to pass over (8). Some cut down branches of the trees (John says palm branches), and these served as decorations for the procession. The people who followed, and the people coming out of the city to meet the Saviour, formed one great multitude, and sang their welcome in words taken from Ps. cxviii. 25, 26. Their first word, "Hosanna," means "Oh, save." And this is repeated at the close of their song (9, 10). How much more was in it than they understood! He had come "in the name of the Lord." He was the sent of Jehovah. And his work was salvation in its fullest and highest sense. But they did not understand this. An earthly kingdom and a temporal salvation were what they expected. How worthless may be even the greatest enthusiasm! Jesus as the Saviour comes to us. He still preserves the same character, "meek and lowly" (Matt. xi. 29), and He comes to save from sin. Let us not sing words of welcome while we do not in our hearts receive Him.

How strangely the day closed! In Matt. xxi. 10—11, note the continued enthusiasm of the people. Yet He only looked round about the city and the Temple, and at eventide "went out to Bethany with the twelve" (11). Was this only because the city was too full? or had the enthusiasm of the morning so soon died away that there was not enough left to detain Him for the night? or did He, by his departure, thus solemnly witness against the sins of the city?

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Ready obedience.—In reply to the question, "How do the angels do God's will in heaven?" a scholar said, "They obey without asking any questions."

Spreading their garments.—When Queen Elizabeth hesitated before crossing a miry part of the road, Sir Walter Raleigh took off his new plush mantle, and spread it on the ground for Her Majesty to tread over.

Branches off the trees.—At the close of the Franco-German War, when the victorious German troops made their triumphal entry into Berlin, on each side of the way were placed gilt pedestals, and between each pedestal hung a festoon of laurel and fir.

THE POOLE COLPORTEUR.—Mr. W. Lloyd reports that his labours last year were encouraging in more ways than one. The work at Corfe Mullen Chapel has been blessed; the Sunday-school is increasing in membership, and the other agencies are in a flourishing condition. The tract society also is a means of great good, and the visitation work is well kept up by devoted ladies. Mr. J. P. Godwin, Perry-gardens, Poole, is superintendent of the Mission.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.—From the seventeenth report, it would appear that last year's work enjoyed the Divine blessing. Dr. John Latchford has undertaken the superintendence, and it has been decided, on the expiry of the lease of the premises in Endell-street, to carry on the work at 33 and 34, Short's-gardens, which are the freehold of the Mission. Should funds be forthcoming, the Council is disposed to open a branch in another needy locality.

"THE THRESHING FLOOR OF BETHLEHEM."—On Tuesday evening, March 19, Mrs. C. F. Allison gave her popular lecture on this subject, the proceeds being given to the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East. The materials for Mrs. Allison's lecture were gathered during a tour in the Holy Land; and as this is constantly being given each winter without any honorarium, many charitable objects are thereby aided. The references made to missions and education in the East show that the work is progressing, the school at Nazareth being in a most flourishing state. As an illustrated lecture on the manners and customs of the country, the whole was most striking. Mrs. Allison receives more applications than can be accepted for the delivery of her lecture, but it is given about once a week during the season.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

Q.—Phil. iii. 11.—What is the correct meaning of this text? "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."—C. B.

A.—"The resurrection of the dead" is literally "the resurrection from among the dead," and points to the first resurrection (Rev. xx. 5), or that of those "who are Christ's at his coming" (1 Cor. xv. 23). The words, "if by any means," do not in the Greek express doubt, but aim. "An expression not so much of doubt as of humility, indicating the object contemplated, in 'being made conformable unto his death.'"—Bishop Ellicott. "'If by any means' expresses, not doubt, but rather the eagerness that strives by all ways to reach its end."—Speaker's Commentary.

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.—A goodly number of sailors, bargemen, and others of the crew occupied the platform of Mr. Charrington's large Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, on Thursday, 21st inst. After Miss Child had explained the object of the Crew, one after another bore testimony to the power of God to save and keep. At the close a number came forward to sign the pledge, and others remained to be spoken with.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE will hold the next annual Conference at Cheltenham, in the third week of October. The central position which this town occupies leads the Council to believe that a large number of members and friends of the Alliance will attend from various parts of the country. Mr. A. J. Arnold, secretary of the Alliance, has left England, on a deputation tour to the Riviera, where he is to hold meetings for furthering the objects of the Alliance; also to Spain and Portugal for the formation of a branch.

IRELAND.—Those who are interested in the welfare of the sister island will be glad to learn from a return recently prepared by the Registrar General for Ireland that there has been an increase of £1,208,600 in the deposits in Joint Stock Banks in that country during the year 1888. This fact, however, has not so much bearing upon the condition of the general body of the people as the corresponding fact has that there has been a steady increase in the deposits in the Post-office Savings Banks. The trustees' Savings Banks report an increase almost as large.

BIRKENHEAD Y.M.C.A.—The scheme for the erection of a Y.M.C.A. Literary Institute and Gymnasium, on a scale commensurate with the requirements of the borough, has considerably advanced. The requisite site, on Grange-road, has been purchased, and it is hoped that subscriptions in sufficient volume, will soon come in to justify building without further delay. At present the work of the Association is carried on under many disadvantages in premises at 42, Conway-street, the membership being over 250. Mr. C. J. Procter, president of the Association, is treasurer of the building fund.

NURSING FOR THE POOR.—We referred recently to the comparative economy with which arrangements could be made in crowded districts of large towns, and in smaller towns without hospitals, for the employment of nurses for the sick poor. A few days ago, at the annual meeting of the North London Nursing Association for the Poor, it was stated that in the district during the past year 1319 cases had been nursed at a cost of 17s. 6d. each, and 27,960 visits paid at a cost of 9½d. each. In this way the skilled aid of educated women trained in hospital and district nursing was provided for a great number of people, whose means were too limited to enable them to obtain paid professional nurses.

THE FARNINGHAM AND SWANLEY HOMES for Little Boys celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their existence on Tuesday evening of last week, when their supporters were entertained at the Hôtel Métropole. These excellent institutions are founded on the principle that it is better to train and care for orphan boys before they become criminals, than to allow them to do so and take them in hand afterwards. Very encouraging reports are constantly reaching the committee of the success in life of "old boys," which amply justifies the efforts put forth in their behalf. Mr. Benjamin Clarke, who took the secretaryship upon the lamented death of Rev. A. O. Charles last year, announced subscriptions to the amount of £1500, but it is sad to find that two of the Homes are now closed for lack of funds to carry them on. This good work should not be allowed to stand still.

"An Exceeding Bitter Cry" from Ireland

THERE is a famine in the land, and our little ones are perishing; "A famine not of bread, but of hearing the words of the Lord."

We found our Protestant little ones being brought up under the influence and surroundings of one of the darkest phases of Roman Catholicism.

We dared not leave it so; and therefore opened a School and gathered in the children. For a year we have struggled on, but we cannot continue if unsupported. We have sought to tell our need, but comparatively so few have responded that we are almost in despair. Our children are helpless, for they know not their danger, but the voice of the tender Shepherd is raised on their behalf, "Feed My lambs." Can they die when He asks your aid and identifies Himself with them in their need?

THE BISHOP OF KILLALOE is most anxious for the establishment of similar Schools throughout his diocese, and writes as follows:—"I can most confidently recommend the School recently opened in Lorrha parish. I have reason to think it is very effectively worked, and believe it to be not only desirable but essential for the best interests of the young in the locality. (Signed), WM. B. KILLALOE."

We have received and acknowledged nearly £300 towards the £800 needed to establish the School. A Report and Balance Sheet will be forwarded to any who will help us in our sore need.

Donations may be sent to any of the following, who will at once acknowledge them:—

RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF KILLALOE, Clarisford, Killaloe, Ireland.

REV. H. J. KITCHIN, The Manor House, Hampton, Middlesex.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

NINE Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year over 6,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

A PLAIN OFFER.

THERE are numbers of people in every country who are continually suffering in one way or another, and a large percentage of these sufferers are without hope, not so much because they are incurable as because they are so tired of putting forth vain efforts to regain health. Who could help sympathising with such folks? No one can tell what bitterness they have felt when one cause after another has failed to help them, and often the pecuniary considerations involved have been very great. All such sufferers Mr. B. Copson Garratt cordially invites to correspond with him about themselves. He will give them full advice gratis, and no treatment will be urged upon them. Mr. Garratt believes heartily in "Natural Healing," without physic, and will be pleased to point out the way of relief to all sufferers who will only lay their cases before him. His pamphlet on this subject will be forwarded on request, post free, to any enquirer. The following is interesting:—

Mrs. HARRY, 2, St. George's Road, Truro.

"I am certainly improving in health, if only slowly, the irritability of the nervous system is much lessened and the general tone of health improved. I am not of course equal to much exertion, but can still go about certain domestic duties with comparative ease. You know from what you saw that this means much in a case like mine. Another boon is that I sleep much better; in fact, since wearing my Vest and using the Gloves, I have enjoyed nights of unbroken sleep. So thankful am I for this relief that you are at perfect liberty to make what use you like of this statement."

A later report.—"I consider your Treatment with such grateful feelings, contrasting my present health, amid so many advantages (having so much to try me from morning till night with domestic affairs and the tuition of my children), with what it was when under the doctor's care taking bromides, chloric and sulphuric ether, being unable to rest for weeks together after a bad attack. Life was then a misery and a dread—nights worse than days—never lying properly down, always propped up with bolster and four pillows. I often now think of my kind doctor and his frequent exclamation, 'If I could only cause a suffusion,' &c. The very thing I needed, your Treatment supplied. Before I applied to you I was taking ether every hour to quiet my nervous system, now I never take any."

MARCH 12, 1889.—"While I possess any powers of persuasion they shall be employed in proclaiming the merits of Magnetism. Thanks for kind enquiries concerning my own health: always a delicate although strong-willed woman, I am a marvel to myself and others, having had to do the whole of our household work, without any help other than that of my daughter, a girl of sixteen, far from strong. When I suffer at times from exhaustion, and almost feel passing away, an extra use of your Friction Gloves brings me round again. My only source of life, with God's blessing on it, is Odo-Magnetism. How glad I should be to send this testimony to some poor sufferer in similarly trying circumstances!"

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

In New Zealand no married woman can legally keep a public-house.

The King of Italy, a total abstainer, has recently given up tobacco, with marked benefit to his health.

The Bishop of London will preach a sermon on temperance in St. Paul's Cathedral on Sunday evening at 7 o'clock.

The National Temperance Advocate, from recent cases, concludes that temperance work is much needed among college young men.

Kinross-shire has resolved to close the public-houses at 10 p.m. Last year it was the only county in Scotland that did not adopt this regulation.

The brewery of Messrs. Bass & Co., Burton, uses daily as much barley as sixty thousand acres of land will produce, besides the hops grown on two thousand acres.

THE PARIS SOCIETY OF MISSIONS has bid Godspeed to M. Adolphe Jalla, who hopes soon to be at work on the Zambezi. MM. Allégret and Teisserès have also left for the Congo. M. Coillard reports with joy the conversion of a young man, the firstfruits of his work for Christ on the Zambezi.

ITALY.—Hundreds of thousands are starving in Italy, and the Socialists have got up demonstrations in the large towns, resulting in collisions with the civil authority. Let us pray for peace among the nations, as the preparations for war are causing taxation, a burden which the people are unable to bear. Scarcely a day but some destitute person comes to the Sailors' Rest for help of some kind, and it is hard to send any of God's creatures away. The beginning of this month grave disorders appeared among the shipping. Drink was got freely and cheaply in the harbour. Two seamen being drunk fought in a small boat, fell into the water, and were saved from drowning by other seamen. On Sunday, the 3rd, several tipsy seamen behaved rudely at the service in the Rest. Next day these men were changed, and requested another meeting on Monday night. The two men saved from drowning were there, and one said, "I will never drink again." This man's face seemed as if eternity was stamped upon it (Rom. i. 16). Seven of the men took the pledge. All came into our private room to prayers, and it was glorious to see men turned from rude drunkards to serious and courteous seamen in one day. We have had no such disorders in this port for nine years. Since that precious meeting we have not seen a tipsy seaman here.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, MARCH 25, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of REV. AARON SMITH, of RAMSGATE.

The patient, who is a Primitive Methodist minister, came to me first between three and four years ago. He had been ailing for several years with cough and shortness of breath, which had grown upon him, and loss of flesh was now apparent, with other symptoms of general decline. He was then located at Halifax. The cough had now become chronic, and there was extreme weakness of the lungs. Undoubtedly if he had not then commenced my treatment his disease would have developed into Consumption, as other means had failed to relieve.

He saw me again in the summer, when there was a marked improvement manifest. Correspondence continued at intervals. He entirely recovered his health and strength. He is now minister at Ramsgate.

And writing me from 5, Arthur-terrace, Ramsgate, Jan. 21st of this year, he says:—"I have much grateful pleasure in informing you that through the use of your medicine my health has been so benefited that I am now fairly well. I have been recommending others to use it, to their special advantage."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

BY AND BY.

A STARTLING STORY FOR THESE CRITICAL TIMES.

BY FRANK BRITTON.

Read the following letter from Father Chiniquy :—

"I must say that I consider 'By and By' as one of the best works written against Rome I ever read. Surely the God of Truth was inspiring you when you were telling us what the Priests were plotting against their fair penitents, or what they were saying to each other about their dark schemes, &c., &c.

"Far from having exaggerated anything, you have not said the tenth part of what my ears have heard, my eyes seen, my intelligence known, and my memory retained, of the abominations practised by the young and old Confessors with their female penitents.

"Read the Memoirs of the Bishop Scipio de Ricci, in Italy, and you will know from the very testimony of a Bishop of Rome. Yes, read that book, which was published by the authority and at the expense of the Roman Catholic Government of Italy, and you will see.

"Read also the book written by the Princess Henrietta Caracciolo, who is still living. The title of that book is 'Mysteries of Neapolitan Nunneries,' and you will have the same evidence from that noble lady, who, after having spent several years in the nunneries of Italy as a Nun, left them with indignation and disgust.

"These are hard words; I know it. But they are the words of Truth, as the 25 years of my Priesthood in the Church of Rome have taught me.

"I tell you the Truth, my dear sir, when I tell you those sad things. I am in my 80th year of age; I have no reason, no interest to deceive you on such a grave subject. Why should I lie before the whole world and damn my soul when I am so near my grave?

"After being 25 years Father Confessor not only of the common people, but of many Bishops, many Priests, and many Nuns, I solemnly tell you that auricular confession is the most diabolical and powerful invention coming from Hell to corrupt, degrade, and damn the body and the soul of the Priest and his penitents.

"Surely there are some Priests and penitents who escape from the snares laid to them by the Devil in the confessional box; but those exceptions are rare and few. They are as rare and few as the apples which remain in the orchard after they have been picked by the gardener. They are as few and rare as the bunches of grapes which remain in the vine after the vintage. They are as rare and few as the houses which as by a miracle stood uninjured in the midst of the ocean of fire which destroyed the 16,000 houses of the city of Chicago a few years ago. Let those who refuse to believe me, and say that I am exaggerating, read in Dens, Liguori, Kenrick, &c., &c., the questions which the Father Confessors must put to their female penitents, and they will understand, they will feel that I say the truth.

If the legislators of England, France, Italy, &c., would understand the protection they owe to their sisters, their daughters, and to the wives of their people, they would forbid auricular confession with more severity than they forbid the public selling of poison by the apothecary. The permission of selling arsenic to everyone who asks for it from the apothecary would be less imprudent and criminal than to allow every priest to put the deadly poison of those infamous questions into the memory, the heart, and the soul of all their male or female penitents.

"I know that there are many Roman Catholics who bravely deny that such questions are put to them. But 99 per cent. of them say a lie when they deny it. It is because, as a general thing, they are already secretly lost to every sense of truth and honesty that they deny it; or it is because their confessors have made them promise that they would deny it; or it is because, having been persuaded by their confessor that there is no impropriety, no dishonesty in conversing on those subjects that they deny it.

"The eloquent 'Escaped Nun,' Edith O'Gorman, now Mrs. Auffray, is now lecturing somewhere in England I think. Please consult her—is now lecturing somewhere in England I think. Please consult her—ask her what kind of honesty does exist in the nunneries, and she will tell you the same tale which thousands and thousands of escaped Nuns have said before her.

"'By and By': I wish that your book should be read by everyone in Great Britain; then your noble English people might understand, before it is too late, how they are betrayed into the hands of popery, not only by the High Church Party and Gladstone, but even by your present Prime Minister (Lord Salisbury).

"If the schemes of those traitors are not soon stopped, before long there will be rivers of tears and blood shed in England, Scotland, and Ireland. For there are millions and millions in your grand country who will prefer to die than to submit again to the yoke of the Pope.

"The rapid and deplorable progress of Popery in England, through the treachery of the many Bishops and Ministers of the Church of England, who are nothing but disguised Jesuits, means the most terrible and bloody civil war your country has ever seen. May God grant that my humble books, with your 'By and By,' will open the eyes of the disciples of the Gospel soon enough to stop the impending and terrible conflict which is so rapidly coming between the children of God and the slaves of the Pope."

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES:

The Living Word and the Written Word.

Cloth Boards, 3s.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

CHEAP EDITION: Paper covers, 1s.; Cloth, neat, 1s. 6d.

"We thank God with a full heart for this fresh, powerful, living utterance of great—and some of them forgotten—truths, which commend themselves to one's mind as the Spirit-guided expressions of the convictions of a Christ-filled soul."
British Herald.

"It is a book emphatically of the living Christ, a claim that the Bible is only a book of power as the living Christ is in it. To all disciples of Jesus this work commends itself at once by its grasp of truth, its insight, its profound simplicity, the life which is in it, and its spiritual force."
Christian Work.

"The book is full of thought, and palpitates with life. It is the work of a Christian, a scholar, and a man of genius; while none have ever brought to the theme a larger measure of love and reverence. It is not only admirably adapted for the mature and thoughtful, but is also peculiarly fitted to give a right direction to the thoughts and lives of young, earnest, and inquiring persons."
Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

"A book marked by freshness of thought along with firm adherence to old truths, indicating a mind awake to the great vital questions of the present day, and viewing these with a most intelligent eye from the standpoint of established faith. It is very suggestive."—British Messenger.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Pastor G. E. Beskow, of Stockholm, Sweden.

The writer of the papers on "The Question of the Hour" having on two occasions quoted the name of Dr. R. N. Cust, that gentleman desires us to state that he does not agree with the views of "A Missionary," but is opposed to them. Dr. Cust recognises certain weaknesses in the present system, but his object is to reform, not to destroy. In his "Notes on Missionary Subjects," part iv., p. 112, he has thus recorded his opinion:—

> What is required is not the faith mission, or the brotherhood, or the common fund, or the haphazard, or the "Root, Hog, or die" systems, which I have described, but a stern, economic, and fearless administration of our sacred funds, reminding the missionaries, that the committee will not tolerate luxuries, or indulgences, or pride, or waste, and expects self-sacrifice, and self-consecration, and self-control on their part. This would set free large sums for the entertainment of additional agents. In the present state of English feeling it is throwing words away: perhaps a new generation of a sterner type will succeed us. I am glad to chronicle symptoms of this feeling in the field. Instances occur, where the missionary has, in the presence of the parent-committee, offered to share his subsistence allowance with another, assuring us that his expenses fell short of his supply: invitations have come home to send out men on sixty rupees per mensem, or £70 per annum: all missionaries should contribute as much as they can from their private means to their own support, and draw as little as possible on the sacred funds.

The discussion on missionary work raised by Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., continues in some of our contemporaries, and will no doubt do good in the end. Mr. Caine has made many statements that appear to be of a damaging character; most of them, however, are evidently not the result of personal observation, but have been discovered by diligent search into the annual reports issued by missionary societies for several years past. This does not, of course, make the statements themselves less true, but still we cannot help thinking that a little inquiry and observation made in the places to which the statements refer might have led the critic to see that they did not warrant his bold and serious indictment. A diminishing membership such as he has discovered in seven mission stations in India, may be capable of perfectly intelligible explanation by those who know the circumstances of the work.

Than Mr. Baynes, who comes in for a large share of the criticism, there can be no warmer friend of mission work. This has been proved, not only by the long years of faithful and efficient service he has rendered to the Baptist Missionary Society, but also by his recent refusal of an appointment which would have brought him a salary just five times what he at present receives. We are thankful to note the spirit in which he meets Mr. Caine's strictures. Our hope is that, during the present crisis of missions, the friends and subscribers of the various societies will not allow the work to suffer in any degree. The obligation to do the work remains the same, and until better methods have been adopted, it is wise to use such as already exist.

The second reading of Mr. J. C. Stevenson's English Sunday Closing Bill is matter for sincere congratulation and thankfulness on the part of all friends of temperance. To urge any arguments in its favour here would be superfluous. Let it suffice to note two points in the debate in the House of Commons. Firstly, in moving the rejection of the measure, it was asked why it was not sought to close the luxurious clubs on Sunday. This, it may be answered, is precisely what Mr. Stevenson and his friends would wish to see: it is high time that clubs of all kinds, and under whatever names, were brought into line with the public-houses, and it is hoped that the proposal to include them within the operation of the Bill will be accepted in committee. Secondly, Sir George Trevelyan made a good point when he said that those who pleaded that the working man could not be expected to spend his Sunday in a wretched home forgot that but for the Sunday drinking his home might not be a poor one. It is for the temperance party in and out of Parliament to strain every nerve, not only to ensure the passing of this Bill, but to protect it from emasculation in committee.

It is remarkable, especially in its bearing upon the question which has been raised with respect to the success of Sunday closing in Wales, that twenty-two Welsh members voted for the measure. A similar number of Irish members voted in favour of the Bill, and it should not be overlooked that the latter have had a considerable experience now of the working of a too-limited measure of the kind in the Irish cities.

It is high time a caveat was raised against the cold and one-sided treatment which Scripture receives from the professed Biblical scholars of our times; against their verbal dissection of the human authorship of separate books of the Bible; and their mode of isolating these from the organic unity of the whole. This is done by Rev. C. H. Waller, Principal of St. John's College, Highbury, in the April Theological Monthly. Several examples are given of this modern "Partial Exegesis." Among them is one from Canon Cheyne's work on Isaiah. The Canon says on Isa. vi. that it was a stone which one of the seraphs took from "the never-extinguished fire of the altar of incense," and laid on the prophet's lips. The writer of the article contends that there was no such thing as a never-extinguished fire on the altar of incense, and that the idea of a cold paving-stone brought to Isaiah arises from partial and not complete learning. This partial knowledge is bewildering on all sides just now.

Mr. Waller further argues that the chief reason why men deny that Paul wrote the Epistle to the Hebrews is that one or two prominent writers have spoken contemptuously of this view. We cannot enter on the argument, but we could wish that Dr. Moses Stuart's book in defence of the Pauline authorship were better known in these days. This is what we are coming to: men save themselves thought, either by accepting the authority of a leading scholar, or they listen to the voice that says, "Come and believe in the Church, and your peace will be settled." So people are being beguiled from that deep searching of the Scriptures as the supreme authority which is a condition of discipleship.

M. Henri Lasserre has now been in Rome four months, and continues to hope that his famous version of the Gospels into French, first blessed and then banned by the Pope, may have a renewed lease of life and usefulness under the sanction of the Roman Catholic Church. It is expected that the authorities of the Index will shortly announce their decision. M. Lasserre has been greatly supported in his trial by the interest which Protestants have shown in his praiseworthy endeavour. In a letter to an English correspondent he says:—

> I ask you to continue to pray that the great trial through which the new translation of the Gospels is at this moment passing may issue in a happy result, and in a greater diffusion of God's Word among us.

Not only is the result of the appeal being awaited with anxiety by those who desire the spread of the Gospel light in France, but many are looking on with great interest to see whether M. Lasserre will not show himself to be made of the same material as many religious reformers whose names stand out prominently in the glorious history of French Protestantism.

During the month of March the different districts discuss the fitness of local candidates for the Wesleyan ministry. The Methodist Recorder argues against the acceptance of men of merely average ability. The Christian minister of the future ought to be a man whose qualification rises much higher than that he has creditably passed certain humanly devised examinations. He ought to have Christ's mark upon him in some noticeable way. Few utterances go more directly to the very heart of a great question than this. The Puritans believed in a Divine call to the ministry. Are evidences of this call sought now? Instead of a sphere for the bearing of God's messages, the ministry has become a profession, and there is no more solemn duty which missionary, college, and other committees owe to the age, than to see to it that the door is closed against young men who have no other thought of the ministry than a profession.

A controversy, chiefly among Northern Congregationalists, has been carried on for some time in The Northern Advance, on the Doctrine of the Atonement. We notice two letters of a writer who does not give his name, but who has manifestly occupied important positions. He speaks of hundreds of persons who have come to him as inquirers after salvation, and whose subsequent course has been marked in almost all cases by Christian consistency and usefulness.

He attributes this to the blessing which has been given to full and clear teaching at the beginning respecting Christ's sacrifice for sin, whereby the accusations of conscience have been silenced, and a transcendent motive furnished. He remarks further upon the fact that many who accept the Old Testament teaching that there was no other way whereby man could find acceptance with God than through atoning blood, habitually pass over this truth in their free prayers, and the omission, he contends, is followed by immense loss to their congregations.

Charles Kingsley, in one of the volumes in which he dealt with the social evils of forty years ago, gives a graphic description of a death through infection conveyed by a garment from a sweater's den. It would appear that in the risk of such infection another horror has been added to the already sufficiently dark catalogue of cases at the door of "cruel cheapness." At the St. James's Vestry, Westminster, last week, Dr. Edmunds, the Medical Officer of Health, stated that the infectious dens in that parish were chiefly occupied by persons engaged in tailoring work. Most of them, he said, were foreigners, of whom sixty frequently worked in one room. In one instance within his knowledge clothing was being made in a house in which small-pox was raging, three deaths having occurred before the garments were completed. Surely there is not a political economist living who would insist that such a state of things as this is the necessary basis of a system of supply and demand?

The question of interference between employer and workman, dealer and purchaser, may be surrounded by difficulties, but there is no reason why the State should find any insurmountable obstacles in the way of fair and righteous dealing. The money to be expended is the nation's, and the nation will not cry out if the sweater is not permitted to intervene between the labourer and the real employer, the Government. Unfortunately, however, some of our Public Departments seem to be only too careless in these matters, for a few days ago before the House of Lords' Committee, Mr. James Smith produced a soldier's belt which had been made for a sweater for a payment of twopence, the work having occupied over an hour. Mr. Smith added that it was a common thing for these sweaters to advance money to the workpeople, and to charge for it a penny per shilling interest.

A seizure by the police in Dublin of immoral books exposed for sale has given rise again to the vexed question as to the inability of magistrates to grant orders for the destruction of obscene and indecent works in the French language. Unfortunately, after a remand and much consideration of the case, the presiding Justice was compelled to decide that he was powerless unless the publications were in English, and the owner of the French immoralities was, therefore, sent out to pursue his calling.

We cannot urge that this was not quite in keeping with the present state of the law on the subject, but we must take strong exception to the pronouncement from the Bench that "the Act was made to prevent the defilement of the young, and he did not see how books in another language could do so," for, as a matter of fact, thanks to Intermediate Education and other schemes, a very large proportion of our young people are now grounded in French and other Continental languages; and, unfortunately, it is no longer an unusual sight to see quite young lads in our city trains reading that filth which has done so much to degrade and demoralise the French race. By-and-by a little common sense may be imparted into the consideration of this important case, and our legislators may become able to grasp the fact that if a book is vile in a translation, in all probability it is still more so in the original.

We are extremely glad to publish the following letter, received from Dr. Blaikie, with reference to a note which we inserted last week:—

In your Notes and Comments of last week I find a paragraph in which you quote a passage from the Scottish correspondent of The Nonconformist and Independent to the effect "that it is notorious that in the Free Church a number of the younger men have become disciples of the broad school of Biblical critics, and are also preaching in a way that would almost satisfy Dean Stanley." I desire, with all respect, to ask whether such statements ought to be circulated, and commented on as if undoubted, without reference to a single name proving their veracity?

I have from time to time heard such statements, and have begged to be furnished with the names of the men thus accused. I have never succeeded in getting any. I myself do not know any minister of the Free Church whose preaching corresponds to the description here given. I am quite certain there is not one in Edinburgh. If you would furnish me with the names of half-a-dozen, I should be much obliged. And if the fact be "notorious," this ought not to be difficult. That some scholarly men in the Free Church are in the same position as Delitzsch with regard to Old Testament criticism, is true; what I wholly impugn is, that "a number are preaching in a way that would almost satisfy Dean Stanley."

We have anxieties not a few with reference to our young men and the present outlook; but of the 160 students at the New College during the present session, I can say that during the twenty-one years in which I have been a professor, I have never known a more promising set.

A truly noble cause is that championed by Rev. Benjamin Waugh on behalf of ill-treated and destitute children. For four and a half years the London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has been striving to prevent the starvation and cruel injury of little children. It has dealt with upwards of 1000 cases, in 800 of which proceedings were instituted against the offenders. Says Mr. Waugh:—

Drunkenness is the cause of much of the cruelty, and he mentions one case in which a man who received 35s. a week, spent it all upon himself, leaving his children locked up in the house or begging in the streets, no clothing, no food, and when they came home at night constantly whipped by the man who was full of drink. This is a sample of thousands of always-suffering children. The Society's great object is to prevent cruelty without prosecution. To this end they have sent out a warning notice in six hundred cases where complaints have been made, and this warning, which hints at legal proceedings, is accompanied by a list of one hundred and twenty convictions for similar offences.

Many important legal provisions in the interest of the young have been embodied in a Bill for the Better Prevention of Cruelty to Children, which will be introduced into Parliament without delay. The measure will, we understand, be favourably received by the Government. Our readers are urged to write to Mr. Waugh, 7, Harpur-street, Theobald's-road, London, for petition forms in favour of the Bill.

We regret extremely to read the following in the Indian telegraphic news in The Times of Monday:—

The High Court's judgment in the Patna Mission case upholds the magistrate's decision on the merits, but finds him technically wrong in construing the unlawful detention in fact of the girl in the mission-house as identical in law with a detention for an unlawful purpose. The judges refuse to deprive the mother and husband of the lawful guardianship in order to make over the girl to the custody of the missionaries.

So far as we understand the facts of the case, this decision seems like a miscarriage of justice; we hope the venue will now be changed to the House of Commons.

Some time ago, on the authority of newspaper reports from Australia, we commented on certain adverse criticisms that Dr. Hannay was stated to have made on the evangelistic missions in London of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. In his recent address at a welcome meeting in the Memorial Hall, Dr. Hannay said he had no recollection of having passed such criticisms; we are glad to give this disavowal the same publicity as we gave to the report.

There is a sad commentary upon the discussion as to appointing a chaplain to Monte Carlo in the terrible fact, noted by the Nice correspondent of The Daily News, March 28, that from Christmas to the end of February no less than twenty-seven persons committed suicide there, and that during March the number was increased by several more. It is stated that the administration have profited during the present season to the extent of £150,000, yet the fatal spirit of gambling does not appear to receive any check.

The Jesuits in Canada may well ask to be saved from their friends, for it appears that the Pope has directed that of the £80,000 worth of property which the Canadian Government has handed back to that body, the Roman Catholic bishops shall receive £20,000, and the Roman Catholic University £28,000. The Pope seems to think the Jesuits are becoming too rich, a fact which has been apparent to outsiders for years back. In Italy, however, there is no hesitation in taking a similar view as to the Pope himself.

PROGRESS IN NATAL.

Dear Sir,—The Christian reaches us regularly. It is a great source of pleasure, and instruction, and encouragement to hear how the Lord leads and blesses his servants in different parts of the world. We feel the Master's presence with us in our work. The day school, the workshops, &c., are well attended, and in regular operation; the Sabbath services are well kept up here and in the other three centres.

We are hoping soon to erect another school, amongst a tribe near the Pavdo border. The Chief is most anxious to have a teacher placed amongst his people. Many Christians could easily send the £36 per annum needed for this.—Yours sincerely, S. Aitchison.

AUSTRIA.—Total abstinence has long been regarded in Galicia as the remedy for intemperance. Among the Ruthenians, servants, mechanics, and workmen who have given way to drink are compelled by their employers to abstain henceforth, on pain of losing their situations. The priests are in the habit of exhorting and instructing such erring people, to whom in due course they solemnly administer an oath of total abstinence, which, a recent resident in the country says, is never violated.

John Bright.

"The angel of death has been abroad throughout the land: you may almost hear the beating of his wings: he takes his victims from the castle of the noble, the mansion of the wealthy, and the cottage of the poor and lowly." So spoke John Bright thirty years ago in one of his most eloquent speeches before the House of Commons. That silvery voice, vibrating with all the fervour of intense conviction, which has so often thrilled an attentive Senate and swayed vast popular audiences, is now hushed in death.

With the political opinions of the gifted tribune of the people we have not here to do, but we would fain pay a brief tribute to the sincerity, the uprightness, and the consistency which marked the career of one whose death removes from us a statesman of a type all too rare. His voice was ever on the side of truth, justice, and peace; his words came not only from the tongue, but from the heart, and his one aim was the true welfare of his country. Preferring, in his own characteristic words, to "dwell among his own people," he declined the higher honours of the State, and his life teaches the lesson that a busy political career is not incompatible with a simple, manly religion; and that, in the words of the poet, "God may be feared amidst the busiest scenes." Well would it be for England had she more public men of like character.

Professor Huxley's Latest.

In the April Nineteenth Century Professor Huxley returns to a defence of his Agnosticism in a rejoinder of twenty-three pages to the Bishop of Peterborough and Dr. Wace. He has been led on to positions where he cannot abide, and to admissions which must prove fatal to his negations. He unhesitatingly accepts now the results of modern scholarship as to the Epistle to the Galations having been written by Paul twenty or twenty-five years after the crucifixion; and, altogether against former assumptions, he admits the early appearance of at least the Gospel of Mark. His theory that the silence of one evangelist on any point discredits another, will have no weight whatever with those who have traced out the specific object any one evangelist had in view; much less can his revival of the German theory stand, that Jesus was not dead but inanimate when He was deposited in a rock chamber. Such a notion raises a hundred difficulties in laying one, and many of them insuperable. Equally will the Professor be held to fail in his account of "the defiant sarcasms" which Paul hurled at Peter and James, with whom he says the Apostle had a "bitter quarrel."

Altogether, it is a matter of great satisfaction, and must prove a powerful gain to the Christian cause, that scientific scepticism abandons its attitude of sneers, and its attacks in ambush, and is compelled to come into close quarters with the firmest and most reasoned conclusions of the Christian faith. To recede from the position or to maintain it will prove alike impossible.

JAPAN.—Rev. Gideon F. Draper writes from Yokohama, on Feb. 15:—"There is great cause for rejoicing at the prosperity of God's cause here, and especially in view of the fact that the new constitution granted by His Majesty the Emperor provides religious freedom to the people, within due bounds.

"Which is Right?"

We have received many communications in reply to this question, some taking a very lenient view of Ritualistic and Romanising error, and others sternly rebuking it. Our question, however, was specially this, Which is right—the union, in evangelistic missions, of evangelical men with men on the borders of Rome, or the avoidance of such union? Let the Scripture answer by another question: "Can two walk together except they be agreed?"

Evangelical men condemn the confessional as an unclean institution, invented by the father of lies to corrupt morals and to destroy souls. If they are seen co-operating in evangelistic work with those who set up the confessional, and who are otherwise labouring to foster Popish deceptions, what can the people think of the consistency of their denunciation of those delusions?

In all unions of good and evil the good gets the worst of it. When the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair, and took them wives of all whom they chose, the resulting progeny was evil and not good. They became giants in the earth, men of the earth, and they destroyed the earth, for they filled it with violence and brought on the Flood. When Lot went down to Sodom he lost all his influence, while Abraham in his tent on the plain of Mamre had fellowship with God.

According to the showing of our correspondent who advocated the union which we deprecate, the Romanising clergyman "referred to confession, but in a very guarded way, that could hardly be described as going beyond the Prayer-book." This suggests, at least, that though very guarded he went a little beyond the Prayer-book. When he is not speaking in a very guarded way, does he not go a long way beyond the Prayer-book, at least as understood and expounded by evangelical clergymen?

What is the result of his preaching? "A very evangelical clergyman thanked him cordially....And evangelicals on the whole attend his gatherings for the clergy better than do High Churchmen."

Exactly. The evangelical preaching feathers the arrow of Romish error, and these evangelical men will in all likelihood become more Ritualistic than the High Churchmen whom they outnumber at these clergymen's gatherings.

Earl Nelson, a very High Churchman, in an article on Christian union for the removal of all social evils, with much of which we heartily sympathise, says:—

> I am perfectly convinced that we must leave outside our proposed co-operate action all which would in any way interfere with the distinctly religious work of the different denominations. We must not hamper it with the knotty question of interchange of pulpits or united missionary action, though these things may subsequently come about; and we must by no means endeavour to come nearer together by agreeing to sink, as unessential, truths which many would in their consciences consider to be of vital importance. The effect would only be to hinder the full and perfect witness for Christ, which, whether it comes from individuals or from different combinations of Christians, must be, to have any power over the world, essentially real.

These are honest and faithful words, which we respect; and we equally endorse, with qualification, the next sentence:—

> We must desire to cultivate a truly loving spirit, and, while trying by personal intercourse to understand one another more, we must strive to check bitter attacks one against another, knowing that, however much we differ, we are sincere in our different beliefs, so far as present lights lead us.

The qualification is this: Truly evangelical men, Protestants, must attack Romish error, because the Romish apostasy is the enemy of God and man. And they must protest against professedly Protestant clergymen and others who are Romanists at heart, and who feather their Romish darts with evangelical truths.

There can be no substantial union which is not based upon the truth of God. In order to true unity there must be an agreed foundation. That foundation can for Christians only be the Bible. Unity in the things of God can go no further than we are prepared to bring our views, our ecclesiastical position, our doctrine, and our practice, to the absolute test of the Scriptures of truth.

A LETTER FROM POONA.

Dear Sir,—I really cannot tell you how very grateful we are at the receipt of The Christian week by week. It comes into our lives as a bright ray of sunlight, enlivening, bearing up, building our strength for the great work before us. We are a large band of workers together in the mission field, and after devouring all there is to be read in them, the copies are passed round to friends, and then again go into the hospital wards to comfort the sick and weak. The lives of God's saints, as they come before us week by week, help us to realise that we can aim after perfection, and that it is by walking in the footsteps of our beloved Lord and Saviour that we too shall attain to great heights of nearness to Him.

It may interest you to hear that, besides the work of three schools in which we are engaged, we have zenana (house) visiting, district visiting, and general mission work. Our large school is called the Victoria High School; in it we have 140 children—Europeans, Eurasians, Jews, Parsees, and Brahmins. The second is a small school, of 16 children, purely native. The third, a Ragged School, holding from 120 to 130 children. This last began with a view to meet the need of waifs and strays, but it has grown into a very large and useful branch of our work, and one which is doing real good, leavening and preparing the way for great things hereafter. Pray that we may be blessed, and may be the means of bringing many to the fold of Christ Jesus our Lord.

We have, in Poona, many and great privileges. We have a branch of the Y.W.C.A., numbering 88 members, besides a children's Scripture Union, which enrolls 200 names. My sister is Secretary of the Children's Scripture Union, and I of the Y.W.C.A.

With Christian regards, and many grateful thanks, yours affectionately in Him, 80, Civil Lines, Poona. Jane Sorabji.

RIO BAPTIST MISSION.—Mr. E. H. Soper writes on February 25, telling of many and sore domestic trials by sickness, and adds: "Our work goes on and souls are saved. The way is opening up for the Gospel, but we need more workers for this field. Why is Brazil forgotten by the many who seem anxious to go forth and preach the Gospel to those who know it not?" Mrs. Soper, who had been obliged to return to England invalided, will be pleased to hear from any friends interested in Brazilian Missions. She may be addressed at 179, Cattell-road, Small Heath, Birmingham.

HIBERNIAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The committee of this old and valuable Society, at their meeting on Tuesday, the 26th ult., granted the sum of £500 to the British and Foreign Bible Society, to aid that great Society in its noble work of circulating the Holy Scriptures throughout the world. The Hibernian Bible Society has many difficulties to contend with in its endeavours to circulate the Word of God in Ireland; more especially in the South and West. The aim of the Society is to place a copy of the Word that giveth light and life in the hands and homes of every man, woman, and child in Ireland.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Some Remarks on the Papers of "A Missionary."

I.—Introductory.

I HAVE been requested by the Editor to contribute to The Christian some comments on the important series of articles by "A Missionary," which has lately appeared in its pages. I do so under a deep sense of responsibility. Those articles have well deserved attention for the power of the writing, as well as for the true spirit of love to the Master, and of loyalty to his Word, which they have manifested. It is a serious, and by no means a welcome task, to point out what I believe to be fallacies in argument and misstatements in regard to fact.

I am so heartily in accord with the writer in the general spirit that actuates him, that I desire to consider with the utmost candour all his reasonings, and to emphasise every point of agreement. I am not under any temptation to indulge in mere controversial devices in order to win a dialectical victory. I believe that the writer and myself are at one in desiring to know the will of the Lord in regard to what, indeed, is most emphatically the Question of the Hour. If Foreign Missions are being conducted in ways that are unscriptural, and not such as can rightly expect the blessing of God, the sooner we know it the better. Neither individuals nor societies should ever be too old to learn. On the other hand, if an inquiry into the matter shows that Missions are being conducted in accordance with Scripture, and that the criticisms upon them are unfounded, it is of no less importance to be guarded against rash and reckless changes of method.

Let me say distinctly, however, that I do not come forward as a professional advocate of existing methods, bound to defend them against all comers. Nor must my articles be understood as deriving any official authority from my connection with one of the great missionary societies. I write as a private individual, and for myself alone.

"A Missionary" lays down for us one great principle, and warns us against one great danger. The principle is that the Word of God is to be the basis of all our missionary plans and methods. This I heartily accept. The danger is our natural tendency to accommodate our plans and methods to the ways of the world. This is most true. But when we go on to read our instructor's application of these maxims to the actual facts of the case, the question arises, Does he know the actual facts of the case? Now, the plain answer to this question must be, There is abundant evidence that he does not. No one who knows anything of modern missions and missionary societies can read these articles carefully without being continually "taken aback," so to speak, by statements which reveal the writer's absolute unconsciousness of much that is going on, both at home and abroad. In national affairs, reform is always preceded by inquiry. We may lay down right principles, but before we can apply them we must know facts. Whatever may be the value of the principles enunciated by "A Missionary," it is quite certain that the ordinary reader must gather from his articles ideas regarding modern missionaries and missionary societies which are totally inconsistent with actual fact.

And yet our critic uses Apostolic language to enforce his authority. He says (art. No. 6), "We feel an inward admonition that many godly men will fail to see [the matter] in the light in which we feel constrained to put it....We would say, 'If any man think himself to be spiritual...let him acknowledge that the things that I write (as far as they are found confirmed by the New Testament) are the commandments of the Lord.'" If the qualifying parenthetical clause saves this quotation from the apparent assumption of Apostolic authority, it follows that any one of us, I myself included, might say the same thing. In that case, I do not see the purpose of the quotation.

I shall by and by give abundant evidence to illustrate the divergence of "A Missionary's" statements from the actualities of modern missions; but this will not in natural order come first. I must first deal with his Scriptural arguments. My plan will be as follows:—

First, I shall discuss our Lord Jesus Christ's life and teaching as bearing on the subject. I shall show (1) that the faithful following of His example does not involve the asceticism advocated by "A Missionary"; (2) that His teachings in Matt. x. and elsewhere lay down general principles for our guidance, and not detailed rules; and (3) that missionaries do act upon those principles now. In other words, that what is true in the articles before us is not new, and that what is new is not true.

Secondly, I shall consider the missionary practice of the Apostles and the Early Church. I shall show (1) that "A Missionary's" account of it is partly incorrect, and partly imaginary; (2) that, so far as we are able to judge, and subject to differences of age and country, it confirms our modern missionary methods, and gives no warrant for the changes suggested; (3) that the progress of the Gospel in the early centuries was not as is described, and that the results achieved are greatly over-estimated.

Thirdly, having thus shown the fallacy of "A Missionary's" arguments from Scripture, I shall turn to Modern Missions. I shall first discuss the question of Home Machinery and Funds, respecting which "A Missionary" says much that is invidious, and much that is incorrect; and I shall show that missionary societies (quite apart from their direct work abroad) are a blessing to the Church at home by providing channels for the very gifts to God's service which are most pleasing in his sight.

Fourthly, I shall review the position of Missions in the Church at home more generally, mentioning many facts which will probably be new to "A Missionary" and to many of his readers, and showing that, while it is true that the Christian circles represented by him have but lately waked up to a sense of their responsibility for the Evangelisation of the World, other Christian circles, of whose existence he is apparently unconscious, have been awake and at work a long time.

Fifthly, then proceeding to the foreign field, I shall show that, however modestly one may estimate the results of Missions, those results have been achieved, under God, not by the pioneers and free-lances for whom alone "A Missionary" has a good word to say, but by the very men who, throughout his articles, are disparaged and depreciated.

Sixthly, I shall vindicate the actual methods of our modern missions, not speculating what sorts of work I think God ought to bless, and probably will bless, but showing what sorts, as a matter of fact, He has blessed and does bless. Especially I shall show that no one method of evangelisation has any claim to exclusive adoption, but that in the mission field, as in the Church at home, there are "diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit." And I shall conclude by briefly pointing out what are the real deficiencies and needs of our missions.

It will be seen, therefore, that I am compelled to traverse "A Missionary's" opinions at almost every point. I did not expect to do so when I began to study them. But, having now read his articles several times over, I am deeply convinced that, with much that is good and true in spirit and motive and purpose, they are not a safe guide for us if we desire to follow the will of the Lord in our work for the Evangelisation of the World.

Two further introductory remarks may be now made.

(1) I earnestly combat the idea that "prudential foresight" is necessarily opposed to "living faith." Prudential foresight without faith is mere worldliness, but faith without prudential foresight is little better than fatalism. I suppose I may safely claim the Book of Proverbs as part of the written Word of God, though I fear it is not much studied by modern Christians. Certainly, if one thing more than another is inculcated in that book, it is prudential foresight. But I can come to the New Testament. Prudential foresight and faith are brought together in a remarkable way in one verse, 1 Tim. v. 8: "If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel" [R.V., "unbeliever"; literally, one without faith]. I say, therefore, that, while it is true that "foreign missions are largely founded and conducted on the principle of prudential foresight," the sentence should go on, not "rather than living faith," but "combined with living faith."

(2) I confess to being indignant at the allusions to "the average missionary." It is inexcusable to use an invidious phrase like that of the great body of devoted men and women belonging to all churches and denominations scattered over the world. The "average missionary" is not perfect; but the modern free-lance might do worse than sit at his feet and walk in his steps. The "average missionary," at all events, does not do this: he does not decry the appliances of modern civilisation (see the third and fifth articles), and then use one of the most potent of them, the printing press, to disparage his brethren, and to proclaim the exclusive virtue of a new method he has just begun to try.

"A Missionary" alludes in one place (eleventh article) to "the wily North American Indian" as "unreached" by the salvation of the Gospel. He is evidently quite unconscious that through the work of "average missionaries" the Red Indian Missions have been among the most successful on the face of the earth.

Let me just mention four of these "average missionaries" to the Red Indians. (1) William Cockran laboured amongst them for forty years, in the country now known as Manitoba. He never once came home; and he died at his post in 1865, three years before that excellent Methodist missionary first went out, whose portrait THE CHRISTIAN gave lately. (2) Abraham Cowley laboured in the same district forty-six years, during which he paid two visits home; and he died at his post in 1887. (3) John Horden has laboured thirty-eight years on the inhospitable shores of Hudson's Bay. Just now he is in England, but he is going back shortly to finish (D.V.) his forty years at all events. (4) William Carpenter Bompas has laboured twenty-four years (with one visit home of five months) in the most northerly mission district in the world, a large part of it within the Arctic Circle. During all that time he has had literally no home, but has been constantly travelling from station to station, over an area of two thousand miles square. All these four "average missionaries" have slept hundreds of times in holes dug out of the snow. They have certainly transgressed the literal meaning of Matt. x., for they have had the "prudential foresight" to provide themselves with gigantic Indian snow-shoes! The two former, after many years of humble service, happen to have been made archdeacons, and the two latter (also after years of humble work), happen to have been made bishops. Whether on that account they have forfeited their claims to our sympathy, I leave others to judge. But this one thing is a fact: through their labours, and the labours of their fellow-workers, the "wily North American Indian" has been "reached," and many thousands have been gathered into the Church of Christ.

In all sad seriousness I ask, Why are men like these to be disparaged? It seems to me that it is such as they who could justly take up the words of St. Paul which "A Missionary" quotes (art. No. 6), and say, "We are fools for Christ's sake, but ye are wise in Christ; we are weak, but ye are strong: ye are honourable, but we are despised." And why, I ask again, is their work, upon which God's gracious blessing has so signally rested, to be absolutely ignored, and the uninformed reader to be left under the impression that the Red Indian is unreached by the Gospel, because "the average missionary settles down safely and comfortably upon the edge of civilisation"?

But our "average missionaries" do not seek human applause. They work for the Lord who bought them, and whose smile they do covet. But the question for us is, whether we are not losing a blessing for ourselves while we are failing to follow them with our watchful sympathy, our ready liberality, and our loving intercession.

THE BOLTON WORKING MEN'S MISSION, since its establishment three years ago, has been attended with much blessing. Outdoor services have attracted many who were not in the habit of attending religious worship, and a number of men who were formerly drunkards, gamblers, infidels, and pigeon-flyers, are now living for the glory of God. The affairs of the Mission are directed by a committee. The evangelist is Mr. H. G. Harris, B.A., 32, Abbey-grove, Bolton.

Euodia and Syntyche.—4.

How strange it seems that a people so dear to the Apostle, his dearly beloved and longed for, his joy and crown, should need to be warned of the profane and the impure; the false apostles; the mutilators—"Beware of the dogs; beware of the evil workers; beware of the concision." These were the Judaizers, the most dangerous and mischievous antagonists of Gospel and Apostolic truth. They were those who went from Judea to Antioch and taught the brethren, "Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved." Whom Peter rebuked by asking, "Why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear? But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they." They were the inexcusable ones of Rom. ii., who made their boast of the law, yet through breaking the law dishonoured God. They were the false apostles of 2 Cor. xi., deceitful workers, ministers of Satan, transforming themselves into apostles of Christ. They were the troublers of the Galatians, who perverted the Gospel, and turned them from the grace of Christ unto another gospel, which is not another; who bewitched the Galatians so that having begun in the Spirit they sought to be perfected in the flesh; and against whom the Apostle pronounced his indignant and vehement anathema. They were those among the Hebrews who were once enlightened, and had tasted the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and yet had fallen away, and trodden under foot the Son of God, and done despite to the Spirit of grace. They were those who at Smyrna said they were Jews, but were not, but were the synagogue of Satan (Rev. ii. 9).

No wonder that the Apostle, held by his chain at Rome, writhed in spirit as he thought of his beloved Philippians exposed to these false apostles. He remembered that the Holy Ghost had forbidden him to preach the word in Asia, and that when he had essayed to go into Bithynia the Spirit suffered him not. But in a vision of the night there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying: "Come over into Macedonia and help us!" He remembered how he had been convinced that this was the will of God, and how the winds had carried them with a straight course to Neapolis and Philippi. Then all the thrilling scenes at Philippi must surely have come back to his mind—the prayer by the river side; the opened heart and house of Lydia; the pythoness and the prison; their feet fast in stocks, and their free souls pouring themselves forth in song; the gaoler's suicidal terror lest they had escaped, and his resurrection joy in believing in God with all his house. This and much more than this made the city, where first in Europe he had preached Christ's Gospel, inexpressibly dear to Paul. And now, like guileful serpents, like wolves in sheep's clothing, these dogs, these evil workers, these Jews in flesh but not in spirit, whose circumcision was outward and not of the heart, were preaching their other gospel among his dearly beloved children in Christ at Philippi.

Why was Judaism so incompatible with the truth of the Gospel? It was the endeavour to build again the things which faith in Jesus had destroyed. The whole Jewish dispensation had for its purpose to prove man in his fallen nature utterly and absolutely sinful. The law made the offence abound. It proved that righteousness could not come by law. That dispensation ended in the death by wicked hands of God's incarnate Son. The new age began with his resurrection by the power of God. The Apostolic Gospel was "Jesus and the Resurrection." Judaism ignored this, and supposed that there was still virtue in the flesh, and that if its filth could only be put away, man could please God. Paul rejected with loathing this attempted rehabilitation of sinful flesh, and by his term "concision" showed that the old rite had lost its Divine sanction, and had become an operation in the flesh and nothing more. For we, Jews inwardly, whether Jews or Gentiles in the flesh—we are the circumcision, we who worship not in carnal ordinances, but by the Spirit of God, and exult in Christ Jesus, and put no confidence in the flesh.

Satan's apostles did not begin with profane or filthy teachings, nor with outward evil works. All they asked was some degree of confidence in the flesh; all the rest would follow in due time. Those two gracious women, Euodia and Syntyche, Paul's former fellow-labourers in the Gospel, could not have been ensnared by the grosser forms of sin, but Euodia, perhaps had imbibed the error that, having begun in the Spirit, she could be perfected in the flesh; and possibly Syntyche, in her zeal for God, opposed her sister with an energy which itself was of the flesh, forgetting that the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. Just as Barnabas would trust his nephew Mark a second time, but Paul, with excess of righteous jealousy for the Gospel, would not so soon again commit the work to unreliable hands. Perhaps the memory of that sharp contention, which had sundered Paul from Barnabas, brought tears into the Apostle's eyes, and a tremor into his voice, as he dictated the message, "I beseech Euodia and I beseech Syntyche that they be of the same mind IN THE LORD."

That is the antidote to confidence in the flesh; and the Apostle goes on to show that while no man had so much excuse for trusting in the flesh as he, yet he counted all his advantages, whether natural or acquired, loss and refuse for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord, that he might gain Christ and be found IN HIM.

Clearly the subject of which his mind was full was similar to, if not identical with, that of Eph. iv. 13—"Till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect [or full-grown] man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." But confidence in the flesh undermined this conception of the Gospel, and if he whose advantages were so great repudiated all such confidence, it was certain that no other could attain perfection in the flesh.

In the previous chapter God's Perfect Man had been held forth as our pattern and example; here the Apostle manifests the lowliness of mind which he had there pointed to in Christ, and declares that all he desires is to be conformed to Him in his death and risen life. He and some at Philippi were perfect or mature, in that they had learned the utter worthlessness of the flesh, and the excellency of Christ, and took up their cross daily and followed Him; but neither he nor they were perfected; nor would they be until they had reached the goal. Let all the perfect ones at Philippi be of the same mind with Paul and the true circumcision, who worship by the Spirit of God, and glory in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh; and who, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, press on toward the goal, unto the prize of the high, the heavenly, calling of God in Christ Jesus.

What is that prize? Is it not to be clothed upon with the house which is from heaven? "For our country, our citizenship, our commonwealth, is in heaven, from whence also we wait for a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory, according to the working, whereby he is able even to subject all things to Himself." Therefore he exhorts his beloved Philippian brethren, putting no confidence in the flesh, so to stand fast IN THE LORD.

And now, having come by the way of the lowly incarnation, cross, and resurrection of the Son of God; and of his own repudiation of the flesh, and hope alone in Christ; perfect, but not perfected; pressing onward for the prize: he entreats Euodia, and he entreats Syntyche, to be of the same mind in the Lord; not only of the same mind with one another, but of the same mind with himself and all the perfect ones, who, like him, are pressing on, yet waiting, for the prize, the body conformed to the body of the Saviour's glory, not by effort of their own, but according to his working, whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself. Is not this the reason for the mention of the Book of Life? It is those whose names are there who shall receive the prize, the glorious body, like that of Jesus Christ. Therefore, he entreats his true yokefellow and Clement and all his fellow-workers, whose names are enrolled in heaven, to help these women, whose labour with him in the Gospel he lovingly remembers, to be of the same mind IN THE LORD.

This is the great antithesis of the Epistle —"Put no confidence in the flesh: REJOICE IN THE LORD." This is the antidote for the primeval religion of Cain; for Legalism, Pharisaism, Judaism; for Romanism and Ritualism; for Buddhism and the Religion of Humanity; for Perfectionism and Sacramentarianism; and for every error or idolatry which is based upon confidence in the flesh. MR. GEORGE RAWSON, the well-known hymnologist, recently died at Clifton, at the age of eighty-two years. In earlier life he was member of a firm of Leeds solicitors, but forty years ago he became known as a writer of sacred lyrics. Amongst many well-known hymns written by Mr. Rawson are those beginning "Father, in high heaven dwelling," "Come to our poor Nature's night," and "In the dark and cloudy day."

PURE LITERATURE SOCIETY.—Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., has written a letter commending this Society to the support of the benevolent public. He urges the importance of counteracting the evil attending the dissemination of poisonous literature, by circulating that which is undoubtedly pure. This Society, he says, supplies on easy terms well-selected literature, wholesome yet lively and entertaining; and, if adequate means were subscribed, it would become a powerful competitor with the purveyors of trash. As indicating the amount of good effected by the Society, it may be mentioned that it has granted over £63,000 worth of books at half price to 7762 libraries throughout the kingdom. Its agents have visited nearly 22,000 newsvenders' shops in the lowest neighbourhoods of 228 towns in Great Britain. It has over 100 magazine associations at work in various parts, and requires an addition of £1000 to its annual subscriptions to enable it to sustain its grants, &c.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXIV.—AN ANCIENT HEBREW CUSTOM.

HEBREWS x. 5.

IN that old Hebrew world that lies now so far back in the dim twilight of the past, there were several customs, of more than transient interest, one of which claims our thought as it glistens for a moment beneath the touch of this Epistle, as a wave far out to sea, when smitten for a moment by the sunlight.

It appears that if an Israelite, through the stress of bad seasons and disappointing harvests, were to fall into deep arrears to some rich neighbouring creditor, so much so that he owed him more than even the land of his inheritance was worth, he was permitted, not only to alienate his land till the year of jubilee, but to sell his own service so as to work out his debt. It must have been a very painful thing for the peasant proprietor to say farewell to his humble home and endeared possessions, in which his forefathers had lived and thriven, and to go forth into the service of another. Very affecting must have been the farewell walk around the tiny plot, which he and his might not live to revisit. And yet the bitterness of the separation must have been greatly mitigated and lessened by the instant freedom from anxiety which ensued. No more dark forebodings for the future; no eager questioning of how to keep the wolf from the door; no unequal struggle with the adverse seasons. All responsibility, from henceforth, for the payment of other creditors, for supplies of food and clothing for himself and his wife and children must henceforth rest on the shoulders of another.

So the appointed six years passed away, and at their close the master would call the labourer into his presence, to give him his discharge. But at that moment he might, if he chose, bind himself to that master's service for ever. If he shrank from facing the storms of poverty and difficulty; if he preferred the shelter and plenty of his master's home to the struggle for existence from which he had been so happily shielded; if, above all, he loved his master, and desired not to be separated from him again, he was at liberty to say so—"I love my master, I will not go out free." Then, solemnly and before the judges, that the choice was deliberately ratified, his master bored his ear through with an awl to the doorpost, leaving a permanent and indelible impression of the relationship into which they had entered. "And he shall serve him for ever" (Exod. xxi. 6). This custom was—

I. ALLUDED TO BY THE PSALMIST (Ps. xl. 6).—Living amid the routine of daily, monthly, and yearly sacrifices, this saint felt deeply their inability to take away sin, and saw that the true offering to God must be of another kind. What could he do adequately to express his sense of the wonderful works and countless thoughts of God! Surely the offered sacrifice of flour or blood, the burnt-offering or sin-offering could not be the highest expression of human love and devotion, and then he bethought him of a more excellent way. He will come to God, bearing in his hand the volume of the book of his will; his heart shall dote upon that holy transcript of his Father's character; yea, he will translate its precepts into prompt and loving obedience. "I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart." "This shall please the Lord better than an ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs."

Nor is this all, recalling the ancient usage to which we have alluded, he imagines himself repeating the vow of the Hebrew bond-servant, and standing meekly and voluntarily at God's door, while his ear is bored to it for ever. Henceforth he may almost cry with the Apostle, "From henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear branded on my body the marks of Jesus." "Mine ears hast Thou bored." "Truly I am thy servant, Thou hast loosed my bonds."

We need not wonder at the glad outburst which succeeds (10). As with emphatic and repeated phrase the Psalmist avows his intention of telling the great congregation his discoveries of the love of God, we can well understand the reason of his exultation. There is no life so free as that which has escaped all other masters in becoming the bond-slave of Jesus. There is no nature so exuberant with joy and peace unspeakable as that which has felt the stab of the awl, has been tinged with the blood of self-sacrifice for his dear sake, and has passed through the open doorway to go out never more. There is no rest so unutterable as that which knows no further care, since all care has been once and for ever laid on Him who can alone bear the pressure of sorrow and sin, responsibility and need.

II. APPROPRIATED BY THE LORD JESUS.—In his incarnation our blessed Lord has realised all the noblest aspirations and assertions which had ever been spoken by the lips of his most illustrious saints. The very words used by them can, therefore, be literally appropriated by Him, without exaggeration, save where they falter with the broken confessions of sin and mortal weakness. Amongst others, when He came into the world He could take up those olden words of the fortieth Psalm, and, through them, fulfil the meaning of the ancient Hebrew custom.

The sacrifices of Leviticus had served a very necessary purpose in familiarising men with the thoughts of God as to the true aspect in which our Saviour's death was to be viewed; but it was evident that they could not exhaust his idea, or fill up the measure of his redeeming purpose. His will went far beyond them all, and, therefore, they could not be other than incomplete; and, on account of their very incompleteness, they needed incessant repetition; and even then, though repeated for centuries, they could not accomplish the purposes on which the Divine nature was set. As well fill up the ocean with cartloads of soil as accomplish the measure of God's will by the blood of bulls and goats.

But when Jesus came into the world He at once set Himself to accomplish that holy will. This was his constant cry: "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." And He not only essayed to do God's will in every minute particular and detail of his life, but especially where it touched the removal of sin, the redemption of men, the sanctification and perfecting of those who believe. It was to accomplish God's will in these respects that the Saviour died on the cross. And it is because He perfectly succeeded, cutting out the entire pattern of the Divine mind in the cloth of his obedience, that the ineffective sacrifices of Judaism have been put an end to, whilst his own sacrifice has not required the addition of a single sigh, or tear, or hour of darkness, or thrill of agony. By the offering of his body once for all we have been sanctified (i.e., our judicial standing before God is completely satisfactory). And by one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are being sanctified (i.e., He has accomplished all the objective work of our redemption in such wise as that in Him we stand before God as accepted saints, though much more has yet to be done in our subjective inward experience). See vv. 10 and 14.

The entire submission of our Lord to his Father's will comes out very sweetly in a slight change here made in quoting the ancient Psalm. It may be that some older version, or various reading, is given, with the sanction of the Divine Spirit. Instead of saying, "Mine ear hast Thou opened," the Lord is represented as saying, "A body hast thou prepared for Me." In point of fact, though the ear carried the body with it, because it is notoriously difficult to move hand or foot so long as the ear is a captive, yet the Hebrew slave only gave his ear to the piercing awl in token of his surrender. But our Lord Jesus gave, not his ear only, but his whole body, in every faculty and power. He held nothing back, but yielded to God the Father the entirety of that body which was prepared for Him by the Holy Ghost in the mystery of the holy incarnation. Ah! Blessed is our lot, that God's Holy redemptive purpose has been so utterly, and so efficiently fulfilled, through the offering of that body once for all, nailed not to the doorpost, but to the cross.

III. Applicable to Ourselves.—There is a strong demand amongst God's people in the present day for that "more abundant life" which the Good Shepherd came to bestow. Out of this demand is springing a mighty movement, which, if it obey the following rules and conditions, will surely be a blessing to the Church.

It must be natural.—The saintliness that cannot romp and laugh with little children, and looks askance on the great movements in the world around, and shuts itself up in cloistered seclusion, is not the ideal of Jesus Christ, who watched the children playing in the market places, and called them to his arms, and mingled freely at the dinner tables of the rich. It is easier, perhaps, than his, but it is a profound mistake to suppose that it will satisfy his heart. No, the saintliness of the true saint must find its home in the ordinary homes and haunts of men.

It must be humble.—Directly a man begins to boast of what he has attained, you may be sure that he makes up in talk for what he lacks in vital experience. The tone with which some speak of perfection indicates how far they are from it. To brag of sinlessness is to yield to pride, the worst of sins. No face truly shines so long as its owner wists it. No heart is childlike which is conscious of itself.

It must lay stress on the objective side of Christ's work.—There must be introspection for the detection and removal of anything that lies between the soul and God; just as there must be sometimes a discharge of gunpowder to dislodge the accumulated soot of a foul chimney. But when the necessary work of introspection and confession is over, there should be an instant return to God, with the devout outlook of the soul on the person and work of the Lord Jesus. We must never encourage the introspection, except with the view of a more uninterrupted vision of Jesus.

If these three conditions are complied with, the movement now afoot cannot but be fraught with blessing to the Universal Church; and it will probably have the effect of leading multitudes to pass through an experience like that indicated in the Psalm. Previously they may have acted merely from a sense of Legalism and Duty, giving sacrifices and offerings as appointed by the law. But from the glad hour that they realise all the claims of Jesus on their emancipated and surrendered natures, they will exclaim, "We love our Master; we will not go out free; bore our ears to his door, that we may serve Him for ever; we delight to do his will; his law is within our hearts; we are eager to do all things written in the roll of the book of his will."

Have you ever uttered words like these? Has your life been only a monotonous round of unavoidable service, of which the key word has been "must." Alas! you have not as yet tasted how easy is his yoke, how light his burden. But if only from this moment you would open your whole heart to the work of the Holy Spirit, yielding fully to him, He would shed the love of God abroad within you, kindling your love to Him; and, at once, you would do from love what you have done from law: you would be so knit to Christ that you would not be free from Him, even though you could do without Him; you would have for ever the scar of the slavery of Jesus wrought into your very nature.

There is nothing in the world that gives so much rest to the soul as to do the will of God, whether it speaks on the page of Scripture or through the inspirations of the Holy Spirit within the shrine of the heart, or in the daily routine of ordinary or extraordinary Providence. If only we could always say "I delight to do thy will, I come, I come." If only we could offer up to God, as Jesus did, the bodies which He has prepared for us, though to the very bitterness of the cross. If only we were as intent on finishing the work given us to do by Him, as men are in achieving the ends of personal ambition. Then the spirit of heaven, where the will of God is done, would engird our barren, weary lives, as the Gulf Stream some wintry shore, dispelling the frost and mantling the soil with flowers of fairest texture and fruits of Paradise. Do not try to feel the will of God; will it, choose it, obey it; and as time goes on, what you commenced by choosing you will end by loving with ardent and even vehement affection.

BRIXTON.—The Countess Compton presided last week at the opening of the new premises of the Shaftesbury Ragged-school Mission and Infant Nursery in Railton-road, Brixton. This philanthropic movement is the direct outcome of the efforts of Mrs. A. W. Cunningham, who some years ago opened in this neighbourhood an infant nursery, where mothers could leave their little ones during the day, and after their daily work was over could take the children home again. There was shortly afterwards undertaken in addition the rescue of young women from evil ways, and later a ragged school, for lads only, was established in a stable loft. All these beneficent efforts have outgrown the original humble accommodation, and the new premises, close to Brixton Railway Station. have been acquired. Here will be carried on, upon a more extended scale, an infant nursery, rescue work, boys' and girls' classes, religious services, temperance and mothers' meetings, soup kitchens, and sewing classes. The work is entirely unsectarian; a debt of £200 remains upon the premises. The Countess Compton pointed out that everywhere there were openings for much beneficent work, if there were only workers to undertake it. Mr. Richard Stapley moved a resolution approving of the work of the mission and ragged school. Rev. Dr. Stephenson seconded the motion, which was supported by Rev. A. Mursell. Others who took part in the proceedings were Rev. Walter Horne, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Mr. John Kirk, and Mr. R. J. Curtis, of the Ragged School Union.

CONTENTMENT.

"I have learned to be content."—Phil. iv. 11.

I am content to trust Him
In gladness or distress,
My Father's hand is only laid
Upon his child to bless.
Through all the past his gracious care
Has kept me safely still;
Shall I not trust for future days
The wisdom of his will?

I am content to follow
The pathway that He shows,
Although it be not what I choose,
But what is best He knows:
And o'er the darkest, roughest road
I walk with fearless feet;
For a pierced hand enclasps mine own
In union tried and sweet.

I am content to serve Him,
However He may please;
Better to win his kind "Well done!"
Than earthly fame or ease;
And whatsoever present joy
For his dear sake I miss,
I know in heaven He keeps for me
An endless weight of bliss.

I am content to praise Him.
I may not understand
The splendour of his purposes,
The love which moves his hand;
Yet faith will sing through prison gloom,
And though my words be weak,
He reads the secrets of my heart—
The praise I cannot speak.

I am content to trust Him,
To have no will beside
His will to whom my life belongs,
Because for me He died;
For Him let all my time and strength
And all my powers be spent,
To serve Him till He calls me home
I shall be well content.

A NORTH LONDON MISSION.

A work successful in the best sense, and in some points unique, is being carried on at Belle Isle Mission Chapel, situated in Brewery-road, Caledonian-road, N. Taking its rise as a branch work of the Camden-road Baptist Chapel in 1870, it so developed that, in 1877, with a membership of eighty-three, it was launched as a separate church, and Mr. Joseph Benson, who had been acting as hon. superintendent, was unanimously chosen as honorary pastor.

From that time the work has grown, till now there is a membership of 314, no fewer than 507 having joined the church since its formation. A branch work is vigorously maintained at the Blundell-street Hall, a place capable of seating 300. Both the chapel and mission-hall services are well attended, the seating capacity (for 550) of the former being so taxed from time to time as to render an enlargement very desirable. The members of the church and congregation chiefly comprise railway employés and their families. The preaching is fraught with much evident blessing; the prayer-meetings are well sustained; and the young men's work is strikingly successful. Recently a gracious revival, unaroused by an specific effort, has taken place. The manual for 1889, obtainable of the church secretary, Mr. A. Stevenson, 7, Brecknock-road, N., will supply further information to any interested to know more of this good work.

GIBRALTAR AND TANGIER.—Rev. Walter Bradbury sails this week on a mission tour to the soldiers and sailors of Gibraltar, also visiting the Kabyle Mission (D.V.). Should any desire him to visit friends there, Mr. Bradbury's address will be Soldiers' Institute, Gibraltar.

The New Balolo Mission.

On Thursday evening last week a large congregation assembled in Exeter Hall to take leave of, and commend to God in prayer, the party of eight missionaries about to start for Central Africa under the leadership of Mr. John McKittrick. As is well known, this new mission to the great Balolo nation on the Upper Congo, is a branch of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions, the important agencies of which had many warm friends and hearty supporters among the enthusiastic audience. Lord Radstock having led in prayer, Mr. E. H. Glenny read 2 Cor. v. 9—21, pointing out that we here have three things: A great motive for missionary work: "The love of Christ constraineth us"; a ministry: "He hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation"; and a message: "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him."

The Chairman, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, in the course of an address full of sympathy with missionary effort, said that it is well that Africa, so long sealed against the Gospel, should now occupy so large a place in the affections and interest of the Church of God. Having remarked upon the manner in which the older missionary societies have of late been stimulated by the methods of the younger, he said that it is an open secret that the former are now willing to take on workers who have not gone through a college curriculum, but who can show the one essential qualification of having engaged in effort upon which God has placed the impress of his blessing. Addressing a word to the missionaries, the Chairman said that Mr. Arnot, in his book, "Garenganze," tells of the veteran Robert Moffat having given him advice in this form: "Patience, patience, patience." May God, said Mr. Mathieson, impart that virtue to each member of the party going to the land of the Balolos!

followed with a graphic description of Africa, its needs, and the attempts already made to supply them. He showed that a new world has been discovered by the exploration of the Dark Continent, and, having enlarged upon the work of Livingstone and Stanley, he referred to the important part played by Leopold, King of the Belgians, in the founding of the Congo Free State. Passing on to give an account of mission work in Central Africa, Dr. Guinness told of the starting of the Livingstone Inland Mission. He said he was very much inclined to think that it is to the death of so many missionaries in the country that the recent marvellous revival on the Lower Congo must be attributed. The people rightly say, "These men are not traders; they get nothing for their work; they are living here, and dying here, and there must be something in their message." In one station a man from the East London Institute, who was formerly a carriage painter, actually had no fewer than twelve hundred inquirers in the course of three weeks. The place was, in fact, turned into an inquiry-room, and some 250 persons have been received into church fellowship. Five of them have suffered martyrdom in the name of Christ. They are, moreover, Christians who put many at home to the blush. They have set apart two of their number to preach the Gospel to outsiders, thus setting us an excellent example of the way to solve the missionary problem.

Speaking of the Balolos, Dr. Guinness said: There, on the Upper Congo, 800 miles in the interior, is a nation which at the lowest computation numbers ten millions of souls, speaking one language, and with only two Christian teachers among them. They are not only willing but waiting to hear the Gospel. The language has been reduced to writing; also a portion of Holy Writ and some hymns have been translated into it. Dr. Guinness proceeded to show how, after prayerful expectation, the way towards founding the new Mission has been very remarkably opened. Without soliciting a penny, sufficient money has been subscribed, and volunteer workers have come forward. The Y.M.C.A.'s of Ireland are providing a steam launch for the Upper Congo, and so a country which has only recently been providentially opened to the Gospel, is now being providentially entered by ambassadors of Christ. When Dr. Guinness concluded by saying that the occasion was one of great interest, and ought to call forth deep sympathy and fervent prayer, he evidently carried the meeting with him.

REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES

delivered a vigorous address. Alluding to the romantic character of foreign missions, he maintained that an active interest in them would fully meet the present-day demand for exciting occupation. If Christians in general could be induced right heartily to take up the subject, the mouth of the blasphemer would be effectually stopped. Nothing would impress unbelievers so much as to see the Church of Christ really in earnest, and its members denying themselves of comforts in order to send the Gospel abroad. When did anyone hear of infidels going to China for the purpose of doing good? When did anyone hear of men going to the heart of Africa, ready to die there, out of enthusiasm for humanity? Except by the constraining influence of the love of Christ, this enthusiasm does not exist. Having said it was well that attention had of late been directed to the fact that, although nineteen centuries have passed since the death and resurrection of Christ, two-thirds of the human race are not even nominal Christians, Mr. Hughes maintained that the reason so little progress has been made is that missionary endeavour has been relaxed. All through the generations in which English and Scottish Protestants have been spending their time in quarrelling one with another, the Roman Catholics, who never ceased to be missionary, have been going to the ends of the earth. The only safe policy for any Christian Church is to be aggressive; the only way to maintain prosperity at home is to attack the devil abroad.

Continuing, Mr. Hughes said: God never created a Christian to be on the defensive. Our duty is to move onward, continually onward. The principle of the German army in the Franco-German War was to carry on war in the enemy's country, and at the enemy's expense. So we must do with the devil. As young David snatched Goliath's sword from his hand and therewith cut off the giant's head, so we must lay hold of all the resources of civilisation to destroy the powers of evil. We English people are under very special responsibilities. First of all, consider the enormous crimes which we have perpetrated in all parts of the world—we have taken strong drink, lust and the diseases of lust, and war, everywhere. Secondly, in spite of our wickedness, God has given us the greatest empire under heaven. Why? So that we may crush and make money out of the people, selling them gin and gunpowder? No, a thousand times no; but that we may take them the Bible and the Gospel which has made us free. There is no nation in the world which is so bound to be a truly missionary nation as we. Mr. Hughes expressed a hope that the outgoing missionaries would not only show patience, but Christian audacity—great boldness in God. He said he saw a thousand signs in all parts of the world that if we are only faithful to do our duty, God will give us such a blessing as neither we nor our fathers have known. He was quite in favour of the Gospel being preached to Europeans, but he thought that, as they had never yet heard the name of Christ, the Africans now have the first claim. He proceeded: I have long felt, taking to heart the misery and sin of mankind, that we need something like a revolution in our efforts with respect to foreign missions. I believe we have been making a great mistake, by putting the pastor first and the evangelist second. Exactly the reverse seems to me to have been the Apostolic order. While we have far too few ministers abroad, we have far too many at home. In conclusion, Mr. Hughes referred in kindly terms to the good work done by the East London Institute. He invoked God's blessing upon it, and upon the men who are educated in it. He also congratulated the missionaries to Bolololand upon the great privilege which God had conferred upon them in giving them such a ministry.

also maintained that, in view of the urgent needs of the regions beyond, the Christian workers at home are far too numerous. Now, as the dispensation draws to its close, God has opened up Africa. But a short time now lies before us, and yet two-thirds of the task which Christ gave to his disciples remains undone! Within the last fifty years God has given us a new world to evangelise. If we are living for the sake of living, and without any regard to the great work of God in the world, let us remember "the world passeth away, but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." The only thing worth living for, is to seek to carry out the purposes of God, to take part in his work, and to do his will—especially when He indicates it by such remarkable facts as those connected with this undertaking. Addressing the young men and young women present, Mrs. Guinness urged them to ask themselves whether they were doing their utmost for the glory of Him who redeemed them. Many would escape city temptations, and be on the way to a truly useful life, by deciding to consecrate themselves to God. To this life Mrs. Guinness called her young hearers, reminding them of the great commission given by the Lord to his disciples.

Dr. Grattan Guinness intimated that the missionaries were from different countries and positions in life, also associated with various evangelical denominations. He called upon who gave some account of his work in Africa. He began by mentioning the drink abomination, and its ravages on the Lower Congo. He was glad, however, to say that it had not, so far, reached the Balolo people. For four years he laboured on the Congo, and saw much to cheer him. There are living churches on the Lower Congo, Banza Manteke being a very promising centre. If the country is to be evangelised, it must, he said, be by native agency, and it is gladdening to know that this fact is not lost sight of on the spot. Mr. McKittrick said that the Balolos treated him with much kindness. One chief sent a messenger a long distance to invite the white teacher to settle in his territory, and there were many evidences of the willingness of the people to hear the Gospel.

As our readers are aware, Mr. McKittrick recently married Miss F. T. Fooks, for five years a valued worker in connection with the British Syrian Schools at Beyrout and Damascus. Introduced to the audience after her husband had spoken, Mrs. McKittrick said a few words. Why, she asked, has God given us a knowledge of the Gospel? Is it that we may keep it to ourselves? No, but rather that we may give it to others. Pray for us, she added, that we may have power from on high, to show forth the love of Christ—to live for Him who died for us.

OTHER MISSIONARIES

said a few words. Miss Hailes, who goes out with medical qualifications, gave out the Scripture text, "Pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified."

Bompole, a little boy whom Mr. McKittrick brought home with him, belonging to the Bankundu tribe, an offshoot of the Balolos, also spoke. The lad has shown fruit of the grace of God, and it is hoped that he will prove a Christian in deed as well as name. He said:

My people want to hear of Jesus. They have never heard the Gospel. What a shame it is that you have kept it all this time!

Mr. Peter Whytock, for some years missionary to sailors at Port Said, gave some details of the way in which he had been led to join the party. The other members could not be called upon individually, for lack of time. They were asked to stand up, however, and, having been looked in the face by the audience, not a few lips told of a heart response to Dr. Guinness's appeal to remember one and all before the Lord continually.

Mr. D. A. Black, secretary of the Y.M.C.A. of Belfast, in a warm-hearted and thoroughly characteristic address, said that the Mission has many warm friends in Ireland. He referred to the leader of the Mission as a gift from Ireland, as well as the steam launch.

The entire party having been commended to the Lord in prayer by Mr. R. C. Morgan, the proceedings terminated with a hymn of praise.

At the close a donation of £100 was handed to Mr. Black by a lady who wishes to remain anonymous. The gift is in aid of the fund for providing the steam launch.

Dr. Saphir on the Old Testament.

Rev. Dr. Saphir delivered the last but one of his course of lectures on the Old Testament, in St. John's Presbyterian church, Allen-street, Kensington, on Thursday morning last week. At the outset he spoke of Genesis as the Alpha of Scripture; and because Jesus Christ is the Alpha, Genesis is full of Christ. Before the first chapter of Genesis, with its "In the beginning," there is the first chapter of the Gospel of John, which reveals unto us the eternal beginning; and in the light of that chapter and many declarations of the Apostle Paul, who can fail to see in Genesis a revelation of the Blessed Trinity? Ten times it is written "And God said," for by the Word of the Lord all things were made, when the Spirit of God was moving upon the face of the waters. Who, moreover, can fail to see, in the light of teaching given in the Epistles to the Corinthians and Romans, that Adam the first was a type of the Last Adam, and that, as by the disobedience of the first many were constituted sinners, so by the obedience of Christ, the Everlasting Father, many are constituted righteous in the sight of God? The formation of Eve out of Adam, we are told in the Epistle to the Ephesians is a type of the creation of the Church of Jesus Christ out of Him who was crucified but rose again, the First-Born from the dead. The meaning of God's resting upon the seventh day is explained in the Epistle to the Hebrews, as showing that God, in his great love, wishes that we should enter into his rest, and thus find our blessedness in Him. Again, the victory that it is said shall be achieved over the serpent, what is it but that victory which spiritually was achieved when Christ died upon the cross, and the prince of this world was cast out, and which shall be actually achieved, as written in Rev. xx., when Satan shall be chained for a thousand years, and which, further, shall be finally accomplished when Satan shall be "bruised under our feet?"

After pointing out the typical significance of other events in Genesis, Dr. Saphir maintained that God revealed Himself as a God of mercy to the patriarchs, who pleased Him by the exercise of faith. It was by faith that they served God, and the very first time the word "righteousness" occurs in Scripture is when we are told that "Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness." The very first time, too, that the word "priest" is mentioned in Scripture is in connection with Melchizedek, who had in himself the right of priesthood, and was a type of Him who is now seated on the throne of glory, and dispensing the blessings of the New Covenant unto his people.

While in sore bondage in Egypt, as recorded in the Book of Exodus, although contaminated to some extent by the idolatry of the Egyptians, the children of Israel worshipped the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. They believed the promises which had been made of God unto their fathers, and looked forward to the time when God would bring them back to their own land. Dr. Saphir expounded at length the typical character of the Passover. The deliverance from Egypt was the beginning of the history of Israel. All the prophets allude to the fact that God brought the people out of Egypt, and we cannot but remember that the Lord Himself said, "With desire have I desired to eat this passover." Not until the greater event shall happen, when Jehovah shall make Israel again his manifest and glorified people, shall that memorable night be forgotten, or the ordinance of that great exodus be eclipsed.

Mount Sinai is generally regarded as the place where God revealed his justice and majesty. It was also the place where He betrothed his people unto Himself. "To Israel pertaineth the adoption." God revealed Himself to Abram, and according to his covenant, redeemed Israel, to be their God. There is no trace of monotheism until we come to the time of Abraham, and, with the exception of the Jews, all the Semitic tribes were idolaters. Israel could never have known God apart from revelation. To conclude, as philosophers have done, that there is one supreme cause of all things, is not to know God. Man has never been known to worship an abstraction. The one small nation which from antiquity alone worshipped God, believed in Him as a personal being. Since, however, Israel has forsaken God, and only prides himself in the unicity of God, he is approaching the idea of an abstraction, and doing nothing to convert the heathen nations, as was his recognised duty in ages gone by. We Christians, however, who believe in Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and have the name of Jesus standing out as a personal name, as Israel of old had the name Jehovah, have gone forth, and at our teaching many have turned from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for the coming of the Lord Jesus from heaven.

Proceeding, Dr. Saphir spoke of the holiness of the Covenant God. The holiness of God, as revealed in Scripture, is not one of his many attributes, but that out of which all the attributes of God flow, and in which they are all connected. God is holy; He only is holy; the holiness of God is, so to speak, the infinite self-containedness of God. In one aspect holiness removes God to an infinite distance from all that is sinful: "He is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity." In another it separates unto Himself a people, to bring them into communion with Him. God is "the Holy One of Israel," not to condemn Israel, but to be his "Redeemer." By election and bringing near unto Himself, God makes any thing or person holy. The covenant of God on Mount Sinai was next examined. In one respect it was a covenant of works, or a law of condemnation and curse; but that is only a very limited, secondary, or, so to speak, negative attribute of the dispensation commenced on Mount Sinai. It was shown that the law did not set aside the unconditional promises made to the fathers. Proof was then adduced to make it clear that those in Israel who walked in the commandments of the Lord blameless, did so because they were spiritually minded, and relied by faith upon the promises of God. The law has been divided into moral, ceremonial, and political parts. As a fact, it is one—an organism. The Ten Commandments do not teach what is implied by "morality," but rather our relation to God. By that which is ceremonial, people imagine something which strikes the senses, and is wanting in reality. There was nothing like this in Israel; all that is called "ceremonial" had regard to eternal truths, and was a transaction between God and his people. As for the national law, it was the expression and application to the nation of Israel of all the truths and relationships expressed in the spiritual law, and the preparatory evangelical law, which God had given unto his people.

Having dwelt upon the law, as "holy, just, and good," in its various enactments, Dr. Saphir spoke of sacrifices. "Without shedding of blood there is no remission." David wrote the 51st Psalm, although his Scripture was confined to the law. There was in Israel no co-operative idea as to salvation. The people were continually taught, "I, even I, am He that sanctifieth thee;" and to pray: "Incline my heart, that I may keep Thy commandments." With all its beauty, and glory, and loving kindness, "the law was weak through the flesh." It made nothing perfect; and "the way into the holiest was not yet made manifest." The true Sacrifice having not yet been offered, the conscience was not made perfect; the Father was not yet revealed by the Son; and the indwelling Spirit was not yet given. After explaining the typical meaning of the Priesthood, the Tabernacle, and the Sacrifices, Dr. Saphir remarked that the whole history of the Old Testament may be described as a failure, because weak through the flesh, but it may also be written "Yea and amen" in Christ Jesus, who is the Alpha and Omega, the Root and the Offspring of David, the Son of Abraham, and yet the "I am" before Abraham. He will bring the Kingdom to Israel.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY.

From a distant part of the north-east of Manchuria comes the following:—"One of our new Bible colporteurs came marching home with a convert along with him, and a glorious account of a movement in his district far away, near the imperial hunting forests. He says there is a number of inquirers. The report from which this extract is taken tells of progress, and is strongly indicative of the vitality of Christian life and of Bible work in the Chinese empire. During the past twelve months 110,000 copies of different books of the Bible have been printed, and this large number is amply required by the sales. These have been some 85,000, that is, 8000 more than last year. Free grants have also been made when it seemed desirable. The colporteurs are a hard-working body of men."

"Affairs in Corea," the same report says, "are in anything but a settled condition; nevertheless, the Christian work there is progressing. Let us continue our prayer that the country may soon be opened for the unrestricted dissemination of the Scriptures among the people, and for the free proclamation of the Gospel to the multitudes who are at present in gross darkness." One of the Corean colporteurs had a pleasant testimony recently borne to him: "He is the first Corean I have met with who proclaims his faith from the house-tops; and because I like the bold way in which he goes at his work, I want to know more of him." This is the day of beginnings in Corea.

CAGE-LANE MISSION, PLUMSTEAD.—The annual report of work states that Miss Russell's hearty helpers, to the number of thirty-six, continue constant in their zeal, and are privileged to see much which encourages them in their labours. During last year more work was done, and larger audiences were gathered together, than in any previous year, and there were not wanting cases of changed lives among those who came under the sound of the Gospel. The Sunday-school and other agencies are in a flourishing condition. There is, however, still a considerable debt on the Mission Hall. Had not kind friends come to the rescue from time to time, this mission to the poor would long since have collapsed; as things are, there is a continual struggle for existence, which sadly weighs and embarrasses the workers. Communications may be addressed to Miss Russell, 1, Thames View Terrace, Plumstead, S.E.

Northern Light.

The British Women's Temperance Association has a flourishing branch at Forfar. The work is a pure and womanly one.

Two Free Churches in and near Glasgow, and one Baptist, have abolished seat rents, free-will offerings meeting their expenses. The incomes do not seem to suffer.

Major Whittle's Bible-readings at Dundee are characterised as treats of no ordinary kind. The interesting and forcible manner in which he expounds the Scriptures wins large audiences for the evening meetings. This week he will be joined by Dr. Moxey, of Edinburgh, who is already a Dundee favourite. Several afternoons have been set aside for children's services, Dr. Moxey giving the readings and Major Whittle the illustrations. The evening adult meetings are to be conducted in St. Mark's Established Church, in order to give the West-end an opportunity of hearing these two earnest evangelists.

It may interest readers in the South to know that Annie Swan, the Northern authoress, whose talents are conspicuously devoted to the Master's service, was in youth a Sabbath-school scholar in the Evangelical Union Church, Eyemouth. Her father was at that time a farmer at Templehall, near Coldingham, and one of her latest works, "The Pearl of Orr's Haven," is founded, it is said, upon life at Coldingham Shore.

Mrs. Woyka, a well-known Glasgow lecturer on temperance, was very realistic last week in her address at Dundee. She exhibited a half gill measure, and showed how little it contained for 3½d. She then humorously explained that for the same sum a good single breakfast could be obtained. Her bill of fare was a generous one, including porridge and milk; tea, sugar, and cream; bread, butter, and an egg; sticks and coals for the fire! Her audience was deeply impressed.

Dr. Pentecost continues his work with much success in Glasgow suburbs. The Bible-readings are given in Camphill U.P. Church every afternoon, and the evening evangelistic meetings are held in Pollokshields' Free Church (Mr. Wells'), a church which has always been closely identified with revival work.

A series of evangelistic meetings have been held in the Art Galleries, Kilmarnock. In the second week, Mr. Richard Hill, the evangelist, took up what proved to be a blessed work. On the fair and race day at Cumnock, March 7, the Gospel was preached outside the course from 11 a.m. until 6 p.m. A lorry was used as a platform, and a harmonium aided the music. Many will remember the fair at Cumnock.

The fact that one of Mr. Quarrier's old boys has been accepted by Mr. Hudson Taylor for mission work in China has induced the founder of Scotland's Orphan Homes at Bridge of Weir to ask for £1000, to form a fund from which to assist some older boys and girls to enter the ministry, or mission or educational work.

It is to be regretted that because a majority of the ministers did not sign a requisition, Major Whittle has declined to visit Ayr. The local committee were urgent in their request, and The Reaper thinks that no one can blame these friends, if, in connection with any future work they may undertake, they should avoid consulting these ministers.

BRIDGE OF HOPE MISSION.—An excellent account of Miss Steer's rescue and preventive work in Ratcliff finds a place in last week's Queen. The writer says: "Those who have the welfare of East London women and girl-children at heart cannot help them better than by assisting Miss Steer and her fellow-workers in their noble enterprise."

THE OLD BEEHIVE.

By Miss ANNIE MACPHERSON.

The door of this historic rendezvous in Commercial-street for the poor and needy has now been closed as a "Home of Industry." Many a precious memory springs up as we recall the work of the past twenty years carried on within its walls. The chief events have been recorded in the pages of The Christian as they have occurred. The names of the Editor, Messrs. H. A. Maude, W.F. A. Archibald, and C. Dobbin, might be mentioned, out of many, as among those who have greatly helped us by their counsel and their co-operation. We could enumerate a long muster-roll of revered helpers, donors, and sharers with us of the spoil; all of whom will shortly, "when He cometh," receive their due reward, and the smile of our loving Father's approbation. Unitedly we shall join in songs of praise with those poor but rich in faith who have found the Saviour in that old cholera warehouse, as we ascribe the glory "unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood."

Many noble workers whose training began there are now in full harness in different quarters of the globe, wise in winning souls. Through these workers many a blessedly "fresh departure" for the glory of our God and the good of our fellow-men, has sprung into existence. This life in touch with the poor, devoted to a relief of their dire necessities, is not a miserable existence, as some imagine. We allow that it took us a little time to become reconciled to the loss of the sweet home-life, and to use all our powers for Jesus in every hour of every day; but where is the regret now? It is swallowed up in adoring praise to God for the privilege permitted us of trying day by day to follow in his steps.

Three hundred widows used to meet with us in the old Home after the scourge of cholera. Two hundred of these have passed away, many of them as triumphant conquerors now with the King. Those widowed recipients of the weekly well-earned pittances, teas and garments, have met in the Father's house, to go no more out. Those who pray for and think of the widows and their constant need, hear the Man of Sorrows still say to his disciples, "Behold thy mother." This work goes on, with its gifts of gowns and garments, sixpences for the weekly sewing class, tea, bread and butter, &c.

The match-box makers were our first love in this great East-end, and under another name they are with us still. They are now the women who "earn mother's bread," or cheer father's heart in helping to pay the rent; yea, they often keep together the little sacred spot called "home." They toil in all kinds of factories immediately around us from dawn till dark; too often it is with them "all work and no play." We sorrow to see them pale and worn; they frequently get sick, and die of consumption. Others pine away in hospitals. The home life of many is dreary; they have no sympathy, and little knowledge to fall back upon. Their associates are too often not of the best. They go to no place of worship; sleep, wash up, and roam down Whitechapel-road on Sundays, making the thoroughfare hideous with their unwomanly jests and laughter. Such are the circumstances surrounding many of the young girls growing up around us.

But we are not discouraged; patient toil has ever its reward. Many, we thankfully record, are now our sisters in Christ Jesus, refined by the Gospel, grateful for every lesson, whether it be a touch to brighten home, or a light thrown on some portion of Holy Scripture. Their sweet singing "in the Spirit" is one of our cheers, and their heartfelt praise ascends to God's throne as the odour of precious ointment. Nearly a hundred of these young girls spend several evenings a week with us, and the new Home of Industry has a whole floor devoted to them in their spare hours. Bright young lady workers are watching for their souls here, and in the half-hour services in the places where they work.

The door of the old Home was ever open by night and by day to the waifs and strays, and, thank God, through the kindness of friends, the new door is open still for such as they. In our present premises we are both brighter and cleaner, and not so cramped for space. Economy of every sixpence is our principle—educating all around to diligent industry, both in temporal and in spiritual things. Self-help and self-respect, constantly enjoined both by precept and example, are, with God's blessing, seen in over 4000 whose lives are now woven in among the industrious Canadian communities of Ontario. All these were outfitted for their fresh start in life in the old Beehive.

The closed door changes somewhat the work among the Jewesses, which is transferred to the Gospel Hall of the "Victoria Home" for Working Men, which is almost in the centre of the Jewish colony in Whitechapel. Mr. P. Ashkenazie, the evangelist whom we employed for over a year, has become a Church of England curate, and is now at work in Deptford.

The soup dinners for the poor children have been transferred to our new Home, 29, Bethnal Green-road, which is in the midst of a densely populated parish. Knowing the pressing poverty that prevails, we hope to give the dinners free during the winter time. The work for telegraph boys is also transferred to the new Home, a place for which we shall never cease to be deeply grateful to God.

THE GOSPEL AROUND LIVERPOOL.

During last year the Gospel was preached with encouraging results, under the auspices of the Evangelisation Society for Liverpool and neighbourhood. Some sixteen special missions were held, involving a large amount of work, and tent meetings were blessed to many in places surrounding the city.

Mr. T. Lydiatt, the agent of the Society, was assisted by a willing band of evangelists. A large congregation of about 1500 of the very poorest of the people still attend the Sunday evening services in the Rotunda Lecture Hall. The amount of good done by this preaching of the Cross cannot be estimated, but there are constant tokens of blessing in this as well as other departments of the effort. On the sands at New Brighton the workers were engaged as usual in the excursion season. Copies of the thirteenth annual report may be had from the office of the Society, 3, Hackin's Hey, Liverpool.

PARBOLD, LANCASHIRE.—There is certainly much spiritual darkness in our country villages, but it seems to be mainly because the Gospel is not taken to the people. In September last a family of Christians from Southport took lodgings in the scattered village of Parbold, Lancashire, and spent their holiday in earnest evangelical effort. Cottage Bible-class meetings led to regular Gospel and temperance work, carried on in course of time with the co-operation of a number of Southport friends. Throughout the winter services have been held every Sunday, and many of the villagers have decided for Christ. The need of a commodious room has been much felt, and, after waiting upon the Lord, the workers have decided to erect a building capable of holding 250 people. The Mission will continue to be conducted on undenominational lines, under the direction of a committee of lay preachers. The people are mostly very poor, walking miles to attend the services. The remarkable blessing which has so far been realised is evidence of the pressing need. Mr. F. Kaye, 145, Sefton-street, Southport, is the hon. secretary of the Mission.

THE LADS OF LISSON GROVE.

Miss Meredith Brown writes to us from the Shaftesbury Institute, Harrow-street, Lisson Grove :—

Some months ago, the following urgent appeal reached us:—"We lads round about here have nowhere to go to but the corners of the streets and the public-houses. The police orders us to move on; if we don't, we gets run in for idle loiterin'. We should much like that you would grant us the use of some rooms in your Institute."

"Miss," said one of our resident girls, "you'll never get them low, drinkin' girls until you 'ave the lads in. We often wanted to come in the Institute, but they would say, 'Don't go in that old religious place, come and 'ave a drink instead;' and if we don't do as they wish, they 'pay us out,' they do, till we're black and blue."

Living in this neighbourhood, surrounded by the deepest depths of sin, seeing from day to day sights of degraded womanhood, and hearing from night to night vile and corrupt language, we discovered that if ever we were to do permanent good amongst these our sisters their surroundings must be reached. Accordingly, in November last, we opened, for the working lads, a part of the Institute, wholly shut off from the girls. Over a hundred lads (from seventeen to twenty-five years of age) have joined our club, and there is an average attendance of about sixty. They are employed at games, gymnastics, &c., and on two evenings in the week night school is held. Each evening is closed by some hymns, a short Bible-talk, and prayer.

How can we manage this work along with our girls' classes? Through the kindness of Lady Howard de Walden, we have gained two additional class-rooms upstairs, and we can now employ three rooms in the basement hitherto damp and unfit for use. After the girls are dismissed, the lads are brought into the hall by another entrance, and by this arrangement the streets—once besieged by lads waiting for our girls, to draw them away to the public-houses—are now quiet and quite clear. Numbers of lads are waiting to join, but we cannot receive any more. What is needed is a Working Lads' Institute, with coffee-house, gymnasium, class-rooms, &c. £3000 would be required for the purchase of additional premises, including alterations and furnishing; of this sum we have received £250. "You'll never do any good amongst the lads," said a policeman; "they are mostly all known to us. You think this is a good place to put down an Institute? It isn't; it's too low, it's far worse than the East-end; they are steeped in vice." In reply we quote our neighbour, the publican: "I wish I could put down the 'Shaftesbury' by law: it's a regular nuisance; it's spoiling my business." "As long as you live," replied one of our lads, "you'll never bust the 'Shaftesbury;' it's stronger than ever."

A few Sundays back, nine of the lads remained behind unasked after our meeting closed. As we watch the earnest interest which some take in the Bible—quite a new book to them—and the hearty singing of their favourite hymn—

> Christ receiveth sinful men,
> Even me with all my sin, can we doubt that from amongst these the Lord of the harvest will gather in some of his sheaves? We should be grateful if any gentleman could help us one evening in the week.

MR. GEORGE ANDREW, of the China Inland Mission, writing from Kevei-Yang-Fu, says:—"During the past year I have been called out to seventy-four cases of opium-poisoning, in fifty of which I was successful in saving life. Opium is smoked by high and low, rich and poor, even by beggars in the streets. Children learn to smoke and love the drug, and it follows them with a curse." Mr. Andrew is expected in England shortly, on a visit to his friends.

MRS. SPURGEON'S BOOK FUND.

The record for the past year, sent out by the devoted wife of the Tabernacle pastor, is full of the sunshine of good works. The only cloud is in the preface, which speaks of the sickness of the chief worker herself, and the sorrow she feels at not having been able to do all she would, in rendering help to her special clients. She says:—"For the first time for thirteen years the ledgers were closed, letters were unopened, applications unaccepted, appeals disregarded. Severe physical suffering deprived me of all thought or care for the service, always so dear to me. As soon as God gave me back a little strength, the old love asserted itself; I resumed work by slow and painful degrees, and have been graciously helped ever since to 'keep inching along,' just getting through the day's duties in time to bear the pain which the shadows of evening still bring to my wearied mind and body."

Work carried on under such stress of personal suffering must be doubly precious to the Master, and also to those who are the recipients of the book fund's bounty. We are glad to see, by the report, that the gifts of friends did not cease throughout the year, the total amount subscribed being close on £900, in addition to 1500 volumes sent by friends. There were nearly 8000 helpful volumes distributed during the year to 582 poor pastors of various churches, one of them being a Swedenborgian. That means an access of stimulus and working power to the ministry of the Gospel that cannot be tabulated or reckoned. A new feature of this effort is the extension of the fund's operations to poor "lay" workers; that branch, in response to an appeal from Mrs. Spurgeon, was heartily undertaken by Mr. S. S. Bagster, of the Conference Hall, Mildmay, and during 1888 he was enabled to supply 126 humble workers with 1142 volumes. The year's record, therefore, notwithstanding the unwelcome part of it, is still a noble and satisfactory one. Mr. Spurgeon's writings are, of course, "a leading line" in the parcels sent out, and we may be sure they are not the least welcome.

We are entertained, as well as delighted, with the lively little account headed "Bonnets besides Books." The giving of an occasional new bonnet to the wives of poor pastors is, indeed, a happy thought, and the outcome of this department, as it is brightly recorded in these pages, shows how much can be done, and yet remains to be done, in scattering happiness throughout a world that has not too much of it, by the exercise of a little sanctified and inventive originality. May the founder of this unique mission be long spared, and have better health, while she dispenses bonnets and books to those who find them such a welcome boon.

AN INTER-COLONIAL Y.M.C.A. CONFERENCE is to be held in Sydney in May. The organ of the Sydney Association says:—"There ought to be more Associations in these colonies, and one plain duty of the older Associations is to see that their number is increased, and that the right men for general secretaries are obtained."

BEN JONSON MISSION.—The anniversary of the Ben Jonson-road Mission, Stepney was celebrated recently, when the chair was occupied by F. A. Bevan, Esq. Mr. James Taylor, the founder and superintendent, carefully looks after the temporal needs of the poor, as well as the spiritual good of the people generally. During the summer meetings are held among the costers in Stepney Market. The Sunday services, and other regular engagements, are well attended, the Sunday-school being a very promising adjunct. The present accommodation is so inadequate to the needs of the Sunday-school, that it has been deemed advisable to erect a roof over the yard at the back, as the most economical means of enlargement, as soon as means are forthcoming. In the various thoroughfares some 50,000 tracts and other publications are distributed every year. At the various meetings, some very interesting testimonies are given by converts, and the workers are much cheered.

AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

REVIVAL AT LE MOYNE INSTITUTE.

We are now in the midst of one of the most gracious visitations that I have ever experienced, and I recall "times of refreshing" not a few. In 1875, the first great revival in connection with this Institution saw over a hundred and twenty-five of our pupils hopefully converted to Christ. The young converts, by their faithfulness, overcame all the fixed notions and ways of the old churches on the subject of early conversions. I have since that time, year by year, followed many of these young people, and know that the great majority of them have proven faithful followers of the Saviour. Many have lived lives of exceptional influence and usefulness. Since that notable year in the history of the Institute, but one year has passed without most evident tokens of God's gracious presence in the conversion of pupils attending. In some years the number has been large, and in others not so many have made open profession of faith in Christ. I think I am safe in saying that not a year, nor a month, has passed in which the Institute has not been markedly under the influence of the Spirit, giving guidance and instruction, and drawing, as with cords of love, many of our pupils to see in the religion of the Cross a peace and joy to be found nowhere else.

I rejoice now, with all my fellow-workers, that we are in the midst of another season of reaping, after months of sowing precious seed. During the past week, two members of the senior class, young men, professed their faith in Christ in the quiet prayer-meeting, as did also a young lady of a lower class. This week, Brother Wharton, who has laboured for many years among these people, is with us, and to-day, at the first meeting led by him, sixteen of our students, three more of the senior class, quietly but hopefully profess to become followers of the Master, with scores more earnestly seeking to "enter in." Since writing the foregoing, two days of great but quiet interest have passed in our work. Between thirty and forty of our students, including five of the seniors and nearly every pupil of the other higher classes, have learned the joy of Christian experience, and there are still many more to follow. The night meetings at the Congregational Church, where Brother Wharton is preaching, are very interesting, and in them conversions are occurring in considerable numbers.

THE BLIND OF BELFAST are lovingly looked after by the local "Home Mission." The workers have under their care 205 blind folk of varying ages and all denominations. The affectionate appreciation shown by the poor afflicted people greatly cheers those who have their welfare at heart. The report states that during last year the Bible-woman, Miss Isles, and the trained nurse, Miss McLeary, paid 2878 visits, besides calls at workshops. The relief fund proved a great boon, and the clothing guild will doubtless continue to be a very useful adjunct of the mission work. The hon. treasurer is Mrs. R. B. Pim, 4, West Elmwood, Belfast.

THE DUBLIN VISITING MISSION, in connection with the Society for Irish Church Missions, answers the question of "How to reach the Masses?" Scripture-readers and Bible-women go to the homes of the people, taking with them the good news of salvation. Roman Catholics are thus conversed with in a friendly manner, and told of Him to whom, as they must admit, Mary gave supreme place when she said, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." The public meetings are attended by inquiring, thoughtful classes of people, and it is gratifying to read, in the report just published: "Many a golden sheaf has been gathered in, and God has blessed his servants who have carried it on for so many years." The tract enterprise continues to flourish. The secretary of the Mission is Mrs. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

COLPORTAGE IN WHITECHAPEL.

The late Dowager Lady Kinnaird, shortly before her decease, having her heart deeply stirred with the tragedies that had been occurring in Whitechapel, made an appeal in our columns for aid to increase mission work there, part of the project being the employment of a colporteur. A number of our readers responded to her appeal, and the Christian Colportage Association recently appointed an agent as an addition to the many Christian agencies already at work in East London. The following extracts from his narrative of the first three days' work by the colporteur will give an idea of the kind of people among whom he is working, and how the Lord is opening up his way:—

"I started in Princes-square, calling at every house. My reception at the beginning was rather cheering, but after a time many doors were slammed in my face. On one occasion I went into a shop, and the man, who was a Jew, seemed very angry. I offered him a tract, but he wouldn't take it; I then asked him whether he would shake hands with me. He clenched his fist, and asked me if I was a Gentile. I said, 'No, I am a sinner saved by grace.' He said, 'Then I will shake hands with you,' and he did so.

"Shortly afterwards a poor woman, seeing the motto on my pack 'Buy the Truth,' crossed over to me and said she thought I must be selling something good. Talking with her I found she was a Christian and in sad trouble, her husband being out of work, and her son having lost his life recently through an accident. I spoke to her of the love of God, and tried to comfort her a little. She was too poor to purchase a book, so I gave her a Testament.

"Yesterday afternoon being wet, I visited the lodging-houses in Grace-alley. I went into a women's lodging-house first, and in the kitchen I found about eight women. I asked them whether they would mind my singing to them. They said, 'That won't fill a hungry body.' I answered, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.' I sang—

God loved the world of sinners lost, and read to them from Matt. vi. after which I prayed. As none of them had any money I did not sell anything.
And ruined by the fall;

"I then went into a men's lodging-house, in which I was abused very much at first. After a time God gave me the victory, and they let me sing 'Brightly beams our Father's mercy.' While I was reading a few verses of Scripture one man took hold of me by the collar and was going to throw me out, but was stopped by others of the inmates. Another man took my hat and was walking off with it, but someone fetched the hat back, and put it on my pack again. I sold two Testaments and some text-cards. In Ship-alley I visited another lodging-house, where I found several women and sailors carousing. I sang 'Jesu, Lover of my soul,' and sold some text-cards and Testaments, which the men bought and gave to the women.

"This morning I started in Wellclose-square, and was well received by many who readily bought books and Bibles. The Lord gave me many opportunities of speaking for Him.

"In Harrod's-alley I knocked at a door and heard a gruff voice, 'Who's there?' I answered, 'I have brought you good news.' He said, 'Come down here, then.' When I got downstairs he put his fist in my face, and told me if I insulted him he would knock my teeth down my throat. I told him I did not wish to insult him, but wanted to tell him that Jesus died for him. He gave me a chair, and told me to sit down, as he wanted to talk to me. I said, 'All right, mate,' and sat down. He then offered me a pipe and tobacco, which, however, I refused. He said he was 'an atheist, or something of that sort.' He 'did not believe in hell,' but said he 'thought there was a God of some kind somewhere.' I opened my Bible and read from Zephaniah i. the last few verses, which seemed to enlighten him a bit, and he said, thoughtfully, 'Perhaps you might be right after all.' He told me he had lived in that house twenty years, and no one had ever visited him before in this way but once. He bought 'Rough Pathways,' and invited me to come there at any time I liked, and have a cup of tea with him.'

In the three days the colporteur sold Bibles, penny Testaments, text-cards, and small books, to the value of nearly one pound. The Association has over ninety colporteurs dotted over England; by this system of house-to-house visitation they have sold some 450,000 Bibles and Testaments, and over five millions of Christian books and magazines. There is a great field for such work, and we can warmly recommend the Society. Any information concerning it may be obtained from the Secretary, Mr. H. D. Brown, 37, Farringdon-street, E.C.

MISS READE'S WORK IN INDIA.

There is much that is deeply interesting in the report, for the past three years, which Miss F. M. Reade has just rendered of the S. Arcot Highways and Hedges Mission. The weekly "At Homes" for Mohammedan women are highly appreciated by some of those whom they are intended to attract.

During last year Miss Reade took five tours around Ulundurpett, where she secured a piece of ground on which she hopes shortly to establish an out-station. One of these tours resulted in the enlightenment of a young man, previously a professed atheist, who at once set about endeavouring to awaken others. The medical work has opened many doors, both among Mohammedans and Hindus. In one village the people brought the sick and blind, lame and palsied, out into the street, and laid them before Miss Reade, whom they besought to return and render further help. Sad to say, response to such calls is rarely possible.

A new branch of work is the Postal Mission, by means of which tracts are sent to the various native officials. Persons who cannot be reached in any other way are accessible by this channel. Miss Reade says: "For two quarters I sent packets of tracts, each containing a Scripture portion, to all the Devastanams (or endowed temples), and police stations of the district. Then, finding the labour almost beyond the time at my disposal, I put the matter before the friends at Bangalore, and through them, Miss Ryan, a young lady there, was led to take up the work, and she kindly undertakes the labour of selecting and addressing the quarterly packets. Already I have met with much to encourage us in the work, when out touring, finding that the papers have been made the common property of priests, gurus, postmasters, and other educated classes. My great longing is that some Christian ladies not engaged in direct mission work may be found to carry on such an effort in every district in India.

The duties of secretary of this Mission are performed by Miss C. M. S. Lowe, 12, Dafforne-road, Upper Tooting, S.W.

THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.—Dear Sir,—I have been out here since last April. I am employed on the Central Argentine Railway, but move about a good deal, and am seeking to do what I can for Christ among Germans, Italians, French, Spaniards, and the natives, as my knowledge of Spanish gives me access to all, and I distribute tracts, texts, &c., in several languages. A great many English people have come out here lately, but I have met with very few Christians. This is a fine field for Christian testimony.

SAILORS AT PORT SAID.

Port Said is a place largely visited by sailors, and not before it was needed have several Christian workers concentrated their attention upon it. Mr. Eoll's endeavours during recent years have been alike earnest and fruitful, and by his instrumentality many thousands of persons of many nationalities have had the Gospel presented to their serious notice. Moreover, his residence at Port Said has been a house of mercy to all who have called. A correspondent who recently went on shore at the place, writes to us respecting its many temptations. Immoral pictures and suggestions of wickedness are met with even in the large shops, which thus become snares for the entrapping of foolish young men, as well as resorts of habitual evil-doers.

Commander Carey-Brenton, of H.M.S. Fearless, writes urging the great need of a Sailors' Rest. He says:—

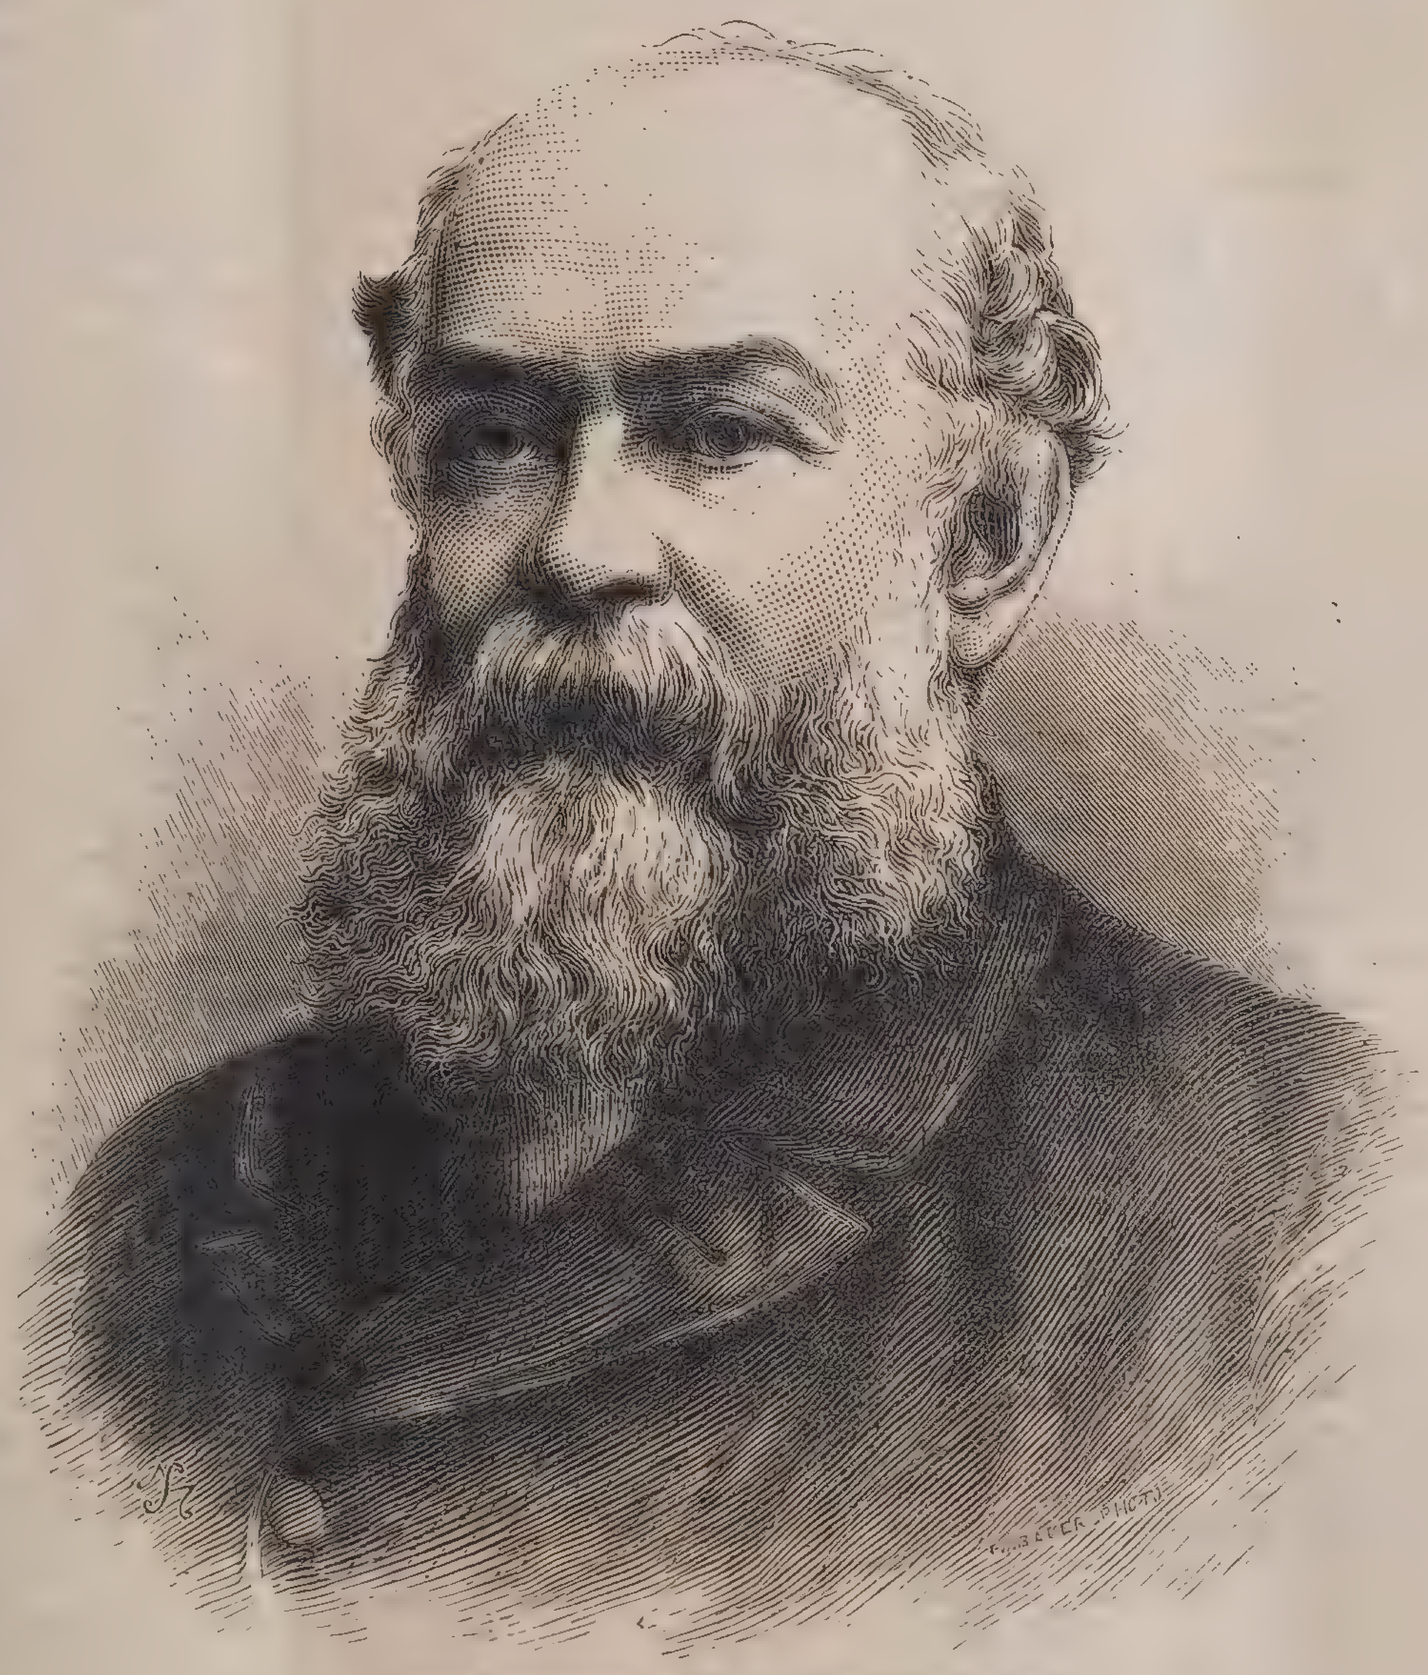
"There is no place where a seaman can obtain a clean and respectable night's lodging. There is nothing in the shape of a coffee-house where hot meals are supplied. There is no meeting-room, Bible-class room, or any public place where men can meet for reading God's Word or prayer, or to pass a quiet hour when on shore. Mr. Taylor, the Bible Society Depositary, kindly lends one of his rooms for meetings from time to time, but this does not meet the need of a public centre of Christian sympathy and effort."

It is proposed to hire a shop which stands next door to the Bible Society's Depôt, at a rental of £60 a year, and to partition the place off so as to provide the needed accommodation. Any friends who would wish to help in this humble commencement of a Sailors' Rest are requested to send their subscriptions to Mr. W. H. Taylor, Bible Society Depôt, Port Said.

SPANISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

Dear Sir,—Rev. William Moore, of Puerto Sta. Maria (superintendent of the foreign work of this Society), writes to us with reference to the great need their is at present for a missionary in the Vega of Granada. This large district of country was bestowed by the Spanish Government upon the Duke of Wellington, in reward for his defence of Spain during the invasion of the first Napoleon. In Escornar, a village of the Vega, the Society has employed for a number of years past, a schoolmaster evangelist. Through his labours, and specially through the missionary work of Señor Alhama, of Granada—one of the firstfruits of this Mission, and the fellow-prisoner of Matamoros—the Gospel has been proclaimed and an extended interest awakened in the glad tidings of salvation. On the occasion of a visit of a missionary to Esconar, at the request of Mr. Moore, to organise a little church of believers, thirty-four men and women professed their faith in Christ. The adjoining villages are crying out for the Gospel and for evangelical schools.

After speaking of the feeble health of the teacher at Esconar, and of Don José Alhama. Mr. Moore, says:—"It is a sad pity there is not an active young man in Granada who could visit these out-stations frequently and statedly. I believe such a one could be found if we had the funds for his support and the expenses consequent upon his itinerant mission. No time should be lost in taking this step if we are not to lose the fruits of so many years' labours." Mr. Moore having been authorised to commence this mission in the Vega, in the hope of our being able to carry it on, I shall be very thankful to receive help for this special purpose. I shall gladly send free copies of Times of Refreshing to any who may desire further information about the work in Escornar.—I am, &c., (Mrs.) Maria Denoon Peddie,



Secretary and Treasurer.

MR. JOHN BLACKHAM,

Founder of the "Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Class."

IF we compare the number of people living in Great Britain to-day with the number existing at any given time during the past and present century, there is little doubt but the percentage of those who do not attend any place of worship will be larger now than formerly. Probably that is not because the masses of the people are more irreligious; but our churches have become so "respectable" that people who are "free and easy" all the week do not like to be stiff and formal on Sundays. Moreover, the churches have, to a great extent, ceased to act under the direction of the Holy Ghost. They prefer to be bound by "the traditions of the elders." As preaching in the church and teaching in the Sabbath-school have been the two great channels into which the teaching of religious truth has been compressed in the past, we seem to think it ever should be. There is, however, an infinity of work requiring infinite variety in the modes of operation. We need to go in Christ's name and Christ's spirit along every way we can find into the wilderness to seek and to save those who are lost. It was this spirit in all the great leaders of Christianity since the time of Christ that has caused such wonderful results. They saw that the old methods would not reach the great masses of the people, and so they went out of the old ruts in various and varying directions until the lost was found.

(From Photograph by Mr. H. Baker, Birmingham.)

Thus has it been with Mr. John Blackham, the founder of the "Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Class." He was born at West Bromwich in 1834. At an early age he attended the Sunday-school connected with the Ebenezer Congregational Church. The late Rev. J. C. Gallaway was then pastor, and Mr. Blackham dates his first serious and permanent impressions to an address delivered in the Sunday-school by the minister. The address was on "Giving the Heart to God"; our friend, though only eleven years old, went away and prayed with all earnestness that the Divine Father would receive him as his believing child. The following year he was led to renewed consecration under a sermon preached by Rev. B. Parsons, at Bromsgrove, from the text, "Mark the perfect man," &c. Another great influence brought to bear upon the life of Mr. Blackham was the fine spiritual power manifested by Mr. Eld, who has for many years held office in the Ebenezer church and school, and who is now partner in business with Mr. Blackham. In this age of "hard cash," it is refreshing to hear the bright, genial talk of Mr. Blackham respecting the spiritual power exercised upon him by the senior partner.

Besides being a Sunday-school teacher and a Deacon of the Church, Mr. Blackham is the inaugurator of the Sunday Adult School movement in the Black Country. That admirable institution, originated by the Society of Friends in Birmingham, was pretty much restricted to that town, until Mr. Blackham carried it into the country places. There can be no doubt that the knowledge he had of the working of the system suggested to his fertile mind the idea of the "Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Class." For forty years, however, he worked upon the old lines, but he was growingly impressed with the wide gap existing between the Sunday-school and the Church—i.e., the school lost the young men and women, and the Church did not receive them. He was impressed with another fact—that many of the churches were empty while the streets and public-houses were full. Mr. Blackham's soul was on fire, and he prayed, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Early in 1875 he went to Birmingham with the intention of hearing Mr. Moody. The Town Hall was full, so he asked where he could see one of the largest Bible-classes at work; he was directed, and went. He saw about thirty students, with a splendid fellow at their head, full of information. "But," says Mr. Blackham, when giving his experience, "the address was so long and so good that it made one's head and back ache with the prolonged attention, and I learned one important lesson: 'how not to do it.'"

But he was also shown how to accomplish the work his heart desired, and the result is great and glorious. A hundred Sunday afternoon classes have been established in the Midlands, attended by thousands of people. The movement is spreading weekly, from London in the south to Sheffield in the north, and to Liverpool and other towns in the west. So greatly has it been blessed during the past five years that it is confidently anticipated the "Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Class" will number six millions of members in the course of the ensuing ten.

The work was commenced at West Bromwich in the Ebenezer school. Mr. Blackham on returning from Birmingham, agreed to take a Bible-class, if the teachers in the school would pray for him, and if they would not hamper him with rules. These conditions being readily and heartily granted, he began in the streets. Seeing young men standing at the corners he went to them and said, "Will you come to a 'Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Class' at Ebenezer next Sunday?" More than one hundred responded to his request, and from that day to this the "P.S.A.C." has been an established fact in West Bromwich. A few years afterwards another came into existence in the same town; now about twenty may be found there, with a membership of about five thousand.

A few years ago Mr. Blackham had a conversation with Mr. Thorne, the travelling secretary of the Y.M.C.A.; this resulted in a meeting at Derby, in the house of Dr. Ogle, to which Mr. Blackham was invited. This meeting may be regarded as the beginning of the real spread of the movement, and the result is a large class under the superintendence of Mr. Hodder. The influence spread to Nottingham, and there a class may be found, numbering 2000 men and 600 women. This, perhaps, is one of the most energetic of Mr. Blackham's children, for it has had born to it many sons and daughters in the shape of useful organisations and institutions for the people. At Leicester, Wednesbury, Walsall, Wolverhampton, Darlaston, and many other towns, these classes have been in existence for years, numbering their thousands of members. The Church of England has interested herself in the movement; one of the most successful gatherings in connection with that body may be found in Walsall under the care of Rev. E. M. Fitzgerald.

Sheffield is the last town in which the movement has taken root. The large chapel of which Mr. Calvert is pastor was filled with working people on a recent Sunday afternoon to hear an address from Mr. Blackham on "Aims and Methods." Indeed, so many are the invitations which pour in upon the founder that he has had to resign the presidency of his own class to minister to the needs of others. He has had a conference of ministers in Birmingham, under the presidency of Dr. Dale, and he has numerous invitations to London to introduce the great work here.

So much then for the originator of the "P.S.A.C." and the spread of the work. Much more could be said, but we prefer to conclude our sketch with a few suggestions which may be helpful to those who are desirous of engaging in this part of the Lord's vineyard:—

If the organisation can be started in a church so much the better; it will be a great step gained to get many of "the masses of the people" inside a church building. Let the church meet for prayer for at least a week before anything is done, and at the end of the week let them covenant together to use all methods "if by any means they may save some." Let as many members as can come down on the Sunday afternoon and give the strangers a hearty welcome. Let the pastor issue from 100 to 20,000 handbills (according to the size of the town) somewhat after this style.

"PLEASANT SUNDAY AFTERNOON CLASS.

"A hearty welcome will be given to the friend who receives this, at the —— Church next Sunday afternoon, to hear an address from Rev. Mr. Cheerful, who will explain the methods for the conduct of a Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Class. Service from three to four."

At three o'clock on Sunday afternoon let "Mr. Cheerful" begin the meeting by giving out some well-known hymn, a verse at a time, unless the church has courage enough to go to the expense of providing hymns in leaflet form. The hymn must be short, and the tune one with a melody in it. Then a brief, direct prayer for the Father's blessing on the people and the endeavour made. Let this be followed by a short lesson from the Bible, say the story of the Prodigal Son, or the lost sheep, or the woman of Samaria. Then another hymn or a solo from some friend with a captivating voice, and then a hymn in which all the people will join. Then an address, not a sermon or anything like it, from the President, pointing out the purpose and the plan of the movement—to lead men to love God, whose heart is full of love for them; to make home happier by making hearts joyful; to revolutionise workshops and warehouses, by helping artizans to sing the songs of Zion; to empty the public-house and dismantle the pawnshop, by filling the home exchequer and adding to the income of the savings bank.

THE PLAN.

(1) A hearty greeting and welcome to all. Brotherliness must be the order of the day.

(2) Card of membership, divided into spaces for each Sunday in the year, which will be stamped every time the member presents it on succeeding afternoons, 1d. being paid each Sunday.

(3) Useful book prizes, 46 attendances entitling the holder to a first class, 40 to a second, and 35 to a third.

(4) Strict punctuality in opening and closing.

(5) The more varied the programme the better; sometimes a twenty minutes' address from one man; at others, four addresses of five minutes each, from four friends.

Having thus explained, invite those present to give their names and addresses to friends stationed at the doors. Let the member's card, properly numbered and stamped, be handed to those so enrolling themselves.

The class, being thus started, turn each member into a missionary, and get him or her to bring others, if room can be found. Then work on with Boldness, Brightness, Brevity, and Brotherliness. It will be well to establish a committee to carry out the details of the work. This should consist partly of the Elders and Deacons of the church; let the rest be elected by "the people" themselves, so that they may feel the service is really their own. The committee should meet monthly, and the work should be divided amongst them.

It has often been asked, "Do these services increase the regular congregation?" We answer, "Yes, if conducted in the spirit indicated." People will always come to churches where they are welcomed; but if the movement is not supported by the members, if the feeling is once conveyed, "This is my pew, please sit elsewhere," "the masses" will not be found in the church; they may come to the afternoon service, but not to any other.

Mr. Blackham's address is Hill Top, West Bromwich, and he will be glad to give any information in his power to those who wish to establish a "Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Class."

We have received the following letter, to which we direct the earnest attention of our readers:—

Dear Sir,—I am glad you are arranging to give an account of the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon movement. It appears to me most opportune. My special object in now writing is to ask whether you could insert an earnest request from me for the prayers of your readers, that God would greatly bless and extend this movement, and raise up and qualify men and women to begin and carry on the work of Bible-classes, on a larger and more effective scale than ever. This work is only in its infancy, but there lies unfolded in it the most wondrous possibilities of good. In answer to prayer, there may be such an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon all engaged in this movement that multitudes may be brought to the knowledge, the acceptance, and obedience of the truth. Our cry is, "Brethren, pray for us!"
—Yours respectfully, James Blackham.

THE LIVERPOOL SABBATH MORNING FREE BREAKFAST MISSION is an evangelical and unsectarian agency, seeking by means of free breakfasts to bring destitute persons such as are not reached by ordinary means under the sound and influence of the Gospel. Breakfast meetings are held every Sunday morning at two schoolrooms lent for the purpose, and on Thursday evenings children's meetings and sewing classes are held. The report of the thirteenth year's operations shows that by these means a loving hand was held out to thousands of the weak and outcast classes, while evangelistic work in connection with the lodging-houses at the south end of the city gives promise of blessed results. The hon. secretary of the Mission is Mr. W. J. Banks, 16, Plumpton-street, Liverpool.

FORGET-ME-NOT; OR, THE SECRET OF SERVICE.

By Eva Travers Evered Poole.

How sweet and fair the fresh Mayday's dawn, full of song-birds' music, and fragrant with apple and hawthorn bloom!

Elinor Stewart's home was in the heart of the country. She lived in an old, brown house, which, gabled and ivy-covered, stood on the top of a hill, overlooking the quaint old town of Pembroke. In the early spring, the old grey castle and the shining river on which it stood were hidden by a wealth of lilac and laburnum, their leafy screen of mauve and golden blossoms shutting out all the lovely view, and later on the hillside was carpeted by their bright, falling petals. The little girl who lived in the old brown house liked a cool shady place to play in; so, down at the bottom of the lawn where a brook babbled and danced over the little weeds and stones in its bed, and where a large oak tree spread out its kindly arms to shelter such tiny plants as could not bear much sunshine, Elinor made her playroom. It was a sweet spot, under that deep oak-shadow, where the tiny brook ran merrily along, singing its own little song to the pale lilies and forget-me-nots growing on its borders. Old John, the gardener, brought a bench and placed it under the tree for his little mistress, and many a pleasant hour Elinor and her mother spent sitting there, reading, working, and indulging in delightful talk together. Year after year the dear old tree stood there, sheltering the brook and the plants, and the little girl; its thick foliage careful to permit only a stray glinting sunbeam now and again to fall on the flowers that clustered at its root, and on Elinor's brown head of curls.

I do not know that I can tell you half the treasures Elinor found on the borders and in the bed of the babbling brook! Pretty coloured stones, curious winged insects, and great clusters of blue-eyed forget-me-nots, in spring and early summer-time; green and brown acorns, red fungi, and exquisitely fronded moss in autumn. In winter-time she never sat there; it made her too sad to see the death of all things.

On this fairest of May days Elinor and her mother sat reading. A Bible lay between them, and they were talking earnestly together over its sacred truths.

Some of Elinor's sweetest lessons of faith and trust had been learned under the shadow of the old oak tree, from her mother's lips, while the brook babbled at their feet, and the happy birds rained music through the branches overhead. God teaches us so often by natural things, by flowers and trees, by brooks and birds, by stones and sky, and mother, knowing God's ways, let all things speak his message to her little daughter's heart.

To-day they had been talking about pleasing Jesus, and asking each other the best way to do it. Of course, Elinor's thoughts flew off to great deeds of self-sacrifice, to mission-fields and martyrdom, to anything and everything but the little quiet ways opening before her day by day, in which Jesus can be served and pleased perhaps best of all.

Are we not all apt to make Elinor's mistake, and to forget that "whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, we 'may' do all to the glory of God." Mother smiled gently as her little daughter laid bare a very ambitious heart before her.

As Mrs. Stewart listened to her child's longing desires, she could not help sighing a little. The eager, upturned face was so full of bright hope for the future, that it seemed cruel to cast any shadow across it. Yet, was Elinor's longing quite all it should be? Listen!

"Oh! if I were older and cleverer, and gooder—better, I mean," correcting herself with a blush, "I would serve Jesus with all my heart and soul, as I cannot do now. I shall never be content to be an every-day Christian, Mamsie dear. I want to be a splendid one, an example to everyone, and that dozens and dozens should be brought to Jesus by my words. I should like a biography written of me when I'm dead," reflectively, "and, oh! yes, I should like to speak well; to be like Peter preaching to three thousand at once. Oh! mother, is it wrong to wish such big things? Isn't it right to want to do great things for such a great Saviour?"

And Elinor's eyes filled as she looked appealingly from her mother to the blue sky above. She was a very impulsive, ardent-natured girl of eleven—older than her years from constant intercourse with her mother. She had never known a time when she did not love her Saviour. From early babyhood she had had sweet cradle teaching from her mother's lips, and day by day the faith and love implanted in those early years had grown stronger and brighter, until the girl's whole heart at times yearned for closer knowledge of Jesus and fuller yielding to his service.

Strange for a child so young, you say? Oh, no; not strange—for Jesus can win and inspire, can fill and teach the youngest soul. You little know the intense love for Him burning in many a childish, innocent heart.

Mrs. Stewart did not answer for a minute; but, stooping from her mossy seat, dipped her hand into the brook and let the water ripple through her white, slender fingers, and then she plucked suddenly a great bunch of blue forget-me-nots, wet-eyed and beautiful, with long trailing roots, and held them out, letting the water drip off them on to the grass at her feet.

"Didn't you tell me yesterday that these were your favourite flowers, Nell?"

"Well, almost, mother," admitted Elinor. "I am very, very fond of the sweet little flowers," touching the wet blossoms affectionately. Then she glanced inquiringly at her mother, surprised at the sudden change of conversation, and half suspecting her mother's meaning.

"They have a pretty name," said her mother, slowly, and then stopped, looking at her daughter.

"For-get-me-not? Oh, yes. How did they get it, mother?" asked Elinor. It is rather a curious name, too."

"There are many reasons given for the fanciful flower name," replied Mrs. Stewart. "One of the prettiest is found in an old German legend I have come across somewhere. Shall I tell it you?"

"Yes, do, Mamsie, dear. You know I love stories," cried Elinor, nestling closely to her mother's side; "but, first, what is a legend?"

"A story; a fancy; an imagination, dear. Something beautiful, perhaps, but that we cannot be certain is true."

"Ah! then I'm sorry your story is a legend, mother. I like things to be true. Never mind; go on, please."

"The pretty fancy says that when God made the world and carpeted it with myriads of bright-hued, sweet-scented flowers, no flower had a name. But day by day as God came down to walk in Paradise, 'in the cool of the day,' He saw these fair creations of his hands blossoming at his feet, and He gave them each a name and a work to do in the world. But when the little blue flower, that I hold in my hand, met the gaze of her Creator, God, she drooped her head, lost in wonder and love and adoration. He spoke her name and pronounced a blessing upon her; but in the rapture of her heart at the sound of her Maker's voice, and the sweetness that thrilled her through like sunlight as He smiled upon her, she heard and knew nothing of what He said.

"Only could she think of Him. Her whole being was filled with one thought—that He had made her, that He loved her, that He had blessed her. But when the evening and the morning made another day, the little, blue floweret waked from her happy dream of joy to feel a great fear and sorrow of spirit. By and by the Master would again walk in the garden where she grew. He might pause and ask her if she remembered her name and his charge. What should she say? How dared she tell Him she had forgotten it all? Would He not frown upon her and rebuke her; and, ah, she felt if He hid his face from her, all light and joy, nay, life itself, would cease for ever.

"So the little flower wept and wept until her sweet, blue eyes were dim with tears, and her heart was nearly broken. Then the evening shadows lengthened; she became aware of a presence close to her. God cares even for the sorrow of a little flower, and his heart of love was grieved that one of the works of his hands should shed tears in Paradise. The flower dared not look up, but waited trembling.

"Then came a voice, gentle and soft as the whisper of a summer wind, asking the little flower her name.

"'Alas! alas!' cried the little flower in shame and sorrow, 'I cannot remember it. I was so filled with love for Thee, my Maker, so lost in looking upon thy beauty, and in listening to thy voice, that I forgot myself, my name, and my work. Oh! forgive me, Lord, I pray; forgive me that I forgot myself in Thee, and tell me my name once more.'

"'Fear not, little flower,' came the gracious answer of the great Father of all. 'I pardon thee. I am glad thou hast forgotten self in Me. From henceforth this shall be thy name—"Forget-Me-not."'

"Then the little flower raised a face all radiant with joy to God, and her sweet, blue eyes shone with love and gratitude for his patience and pardon. So down through all ages the blue-eyed flower has borne the name, 'Forget-Me-not.'"

"How pretty!" cried Elinor. "And it might be true, mother!"

"I do not know," smiled back her mother; "but the story has a truth underlying it."

"Why did you tell it to me?" asked the girl, a little shyly. "Is it some truth I had forgotten?"

"I thought so, dear," replied her mother, gently. "When I heard my little daughter's plans for herself and her life, full of so much about self, and so little about her Saviour, I wondered if she needed the sweet rebuke: 'Forget-Me-not.' Better to be taken up with Jesus than to be taken up with his work, Elinor; wiser far to forget all about self, and what we are doing for Him in sweet communion with Him. Don't you remember our motto for this year?

> Live looking into his face;
> Live listening to his voice;
> Live sitting at his feet.

My little girl was full of the great things she was going to do in the future, and fancied it was all right to seek such great things for herself, because they were sought in the name of Jesus. But I think it would please the dear Master more if we just forgot ourselves oftener in Him; if, every day, as we held communion with Him, self and its ambitious longings faded away, and we lost sight of all in admiration of Him. What do you think, my child? Am I right?"

Elinor felt a little ashamed of herself. After all, she knew there had been a good deal of self hidden under the expressed desire to do great service for her Master. Her mother had rightly divined this; but Elinor was too true and too humble-hearted a follower of Jesus not to accept his teaching, even through her mother's lips, and so she said, softly, as they rose to go:

"Yes, mother. I wanted the Forget-me-not's lesson, and I hope Jesus will be as patient with me, and forgive me for not remembering Him as often as I should. I hope He will often whisper to me, 'Forget Me not.'"

Do you and I need the same lesson? Have we often forgotten the Master in the work—the great Saviour, in our great service? Often, I fear. Nevertheless, from to-day, let us hear his voice saying—

"In serving Me, Forget Me not."

CHRISTIAN POLICE ASSOCIATION.

At meetings held in Exeter Hall on Thursday last week, in celebration of the sixth anniversary, cheering testimony was borne to the increasing usefulness of the Christian Police Association. Approved by the Commissioners this admirable organisation has not only been the means of much blessing to the Christian members of the force throughout the country; but, at the various branch meetings, many who had previously lived without God in the world have decided for Christ and begun the life of faith. In the course of the morning and afternoon, meetings were held at which sympathetic addresses were delivered by various friends, including Mr. J. Monro, Chief Commissioner of Metropolitan police, Dr. R. Anderson, of the Criminal Investigation Department, and Rev. John McNeill. Encouraging reports were rendered of work in different centres, and earnest prayer was offered for continued prosperity.

The evening meeting was largely attended, Mr. A. C. P. Coote presiding. Rev. E. A. Stuart delivered a vigorous address, on the first prisoner we read of in Holy Scripture. As stated and expounded, the story of Pharaoh's dreams and Joseph's interpretations afforded lessons of an eminently practical character. After having visions of prosperous times, the Egyptian king dreamed of famine. So also, after having youthful dreams of a life of success and influence, we see sickness, sorrow, death, and judgment ahead. As too, by following Joseph's counsel, Pharaoh was enabled to prepare against the approaching famine, so, by making the Lord Jesus Christ our friend, we shall reap present blessings, and also be prepared against future troubles and death and judgment. The address had a true Gospel ring about it, and was highly appreciated.

Rev. F. E. Marsh, of Sunderland, followed with a hearty Gospel call. He took for his text some words he once saw on an almanac with reference to the word "Saviour." A Saviour, it said, reminds us of our need; the Saviour tells us of the only one who can meet that need; my Saviour tells us that the need is met. On these various aspects of saving truth, very helpful words were spoken.

Mr. Arthur Pease having said a few words by way of encouraging police officers to deeds of kindness towards the weak and fallen, the Chairman founded an address on Exod. xii. 42: "that night of the Lord." He urged immediate decision for Christ. The meetings were attended by delegates from England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, and were stimulating throughout.

OUR GREAT NATIONAL SINS.

During the past few weeks we have several times called attention to the prayer-meetings held every Tuesday afternoon at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-st. without, with the special and important object of approaching the Most High with regard to England's great national sins. Not a moment too soon have efforts been made to rouse Christian people to a sense of their duties and responsibilities in reference to the great evils of Britain, which meet the eye and ear on every hand. God has blessed us as a people, and given us influence throughout the world; further, he has blessed us as a race, and obviously committed to us the work of world-wide evangelisation. Yet, as a nation, we sin grievously in many ways, and as a race we are a stumbling-block in the way of millions for whom Christ died. These things have for some time lain heavily on the hearts of many individual Christians, and not long ago a few London workers decided to organise a weekly prayer-meeting, whereat our national sins might be deplored, the longsuffering of God be invoked, and grace be sought to enable us as a people to repent and seek purity, peace, temperance, and righteousness.

These meetings have not been nearly so largely attended as the promoters desired and would like. On each occasion an endeavour has been made to impress upon Christians the duty of protesting against public as well as private sins, and also to urge them to beseech the Lord by his Spirit to direct and overrule the councils of the nation, to the end that vice and its sorrows may be lessened, and purity and peace be multiplied. At the first meeting, presided over by Mr. R. C. Morgan, the fearful ravages of Impurity, with its attendant widespread curses, were spoken of. It was shown that "begin at home" is certainly a rule which Christians must observe in regard to this. Are we pure in heart? The Christian conscience requires waking up to the evil, and parents must see how the subject touches and threatens the family life. The many demoralising agencies of large cities were spoken of by various friends, and the need for prayer having been shown, the Divine intervention was implored.

At the second meeting War was considered. Mr. G. Gillett, who presided, spoke of the extent to which warfare enters into political life and interest. Having shown that the military system is to human appearance beyond attack, he well pointed out that, being thus helpless ourselves, we cannot but look to God, and encourage ourselves in Him. The Lord was asked to give wisdom to statesmen and incline them towards peace; also by his Holy Spirit to cause those who fear and serve Him to be at peace one with another.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse was chairman the following week, when the Opium traffic afforded sad ground of humiliation, and grievous reason for earnest prayer. In the course of an address, Mr. Pearse maintained that the evil is not a question for experts and travellers, who have seen and understand the working of the traffic, but rather a question for Christian men and women—a matter of right and wrong. Whether with good reason or not, the people of China think that we force opium upon them; certainly in days gone by, we coerced them to take it. We created the appetite for the drug, and have never given the Chinese an opportunity of saying they will not have it. We have grievously wronged the people of the Empire, and the only reparation we can make is to give them liberty to say to us, as they have said to the United States, Russia, and Japan, "You shall not import any opium." Having spoken of the fearful consequences of opium-smoking, which is now increasing, not only in India and Australia, but also at home, Mr. Pearse urged Christians to use their influence for right and God in this matter. Dr. Maxwell and others having spoken, the Lord was asked, among other things, to raise up powerful men to stir up the public conscience on the subject.

Mr. John Taylor, on the fourth Tuesday, speaking on Intemperance, showed the great importance of Christian example being on the safe side, which is the side of total abstinence. The extent to which this evil touches our homes was shown with painful truthfulness, and the horrors induced by the traffic in foreign lands and among weaker peoples sadly realised.

The fifth meeting, and last for the present, was held on Tuesday last. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided, and the subject was "Commercial Dishonesty and Speculation." Pertinent remarks were made by several friends, and, as on previous occasions, the prayers were fervent. The Lord was asked to vouchsafe unto his people a spirit of contentment, and to convince those who are "making haste to get rich" of the great folly of their course.

It is hoped to arrange another series of meetings shortly.

MR. AND MRS. GEORGE MULLER.

Some months ago, we stated, on the authority of a contemporary, that Mr. and Mrs. Müller were expecting to return to Sydney, because of declining strength and the suitability of the climate. We have received a letter from Mr. Müller, dated Calcutta, February 25, in which he contradicts this statement. He says his health is good, and his mental vigour as good as at any time during the past sixty years. He is able with the greatest ease to address congregations of 2000, 3000, 4000, or more.

In an accompanying letter, Mrs. Müller gives the following very interesting particulars:—

"This is our fifteenth long missionary tour. In the course of it we travelled through South Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand, in which three colonies Mr. Müller preached 186 times in all the largest and most important cities they contain. On June 27, 1838, we sailed from Auckland, New Zealand, landed at Sydney, New South Wales, on July 2, and remained there until November 10. Whilst at Sydney my husband preached 86 times altogether, in that large city and its suburbs. On November 10 we sailed from Sydney, and, as the vessel stopped for a short time at Williamstown and at Largs Bay on her way to Ceylon, Mr. Müller preached again—twice at Melbourne (twelve miles from Williamstown) and once more at Adelaide (ten miles from Largs Bay). On November 19 we sailed for Ceylon. There, at Colombo, at Moratuwa, at Koticawatte, at Eliya Nuwara, and at Kandy, he held a great number of meetings, and occasionally preached to the natives, with translation into the Cingalese language by the native pastors.

"On Dec. 31 we landed at Garden Reach and went on into Calcutta. Since our arrival here Mr. Müller has been preaching twice every Lord's Day, has been holding meetings on week evenings also, during the eight weeks of our stay. During this, our second visit to India, he has before him the prospect of an abundance of work in other cities, such as Serampore, Bankipore, Allahabad, Cawnpore, Delhi, &c. We have no intention whatever of returning to Sydney, but perhaps may go to Burmah, and afterwards pay a second visit to China and Japan, in order that Mr. Müller may labour further for the Lord in those two idolatrous countries. In the course of the last fourteen years Mr. Müller and I have travelled 155,074 miles by land and by sea in the Lord's service, and may probably travel tens of thousands of miles further."

CHINA.—The following were the statistics of the China missions at the beginning of 1889:—Total number of foreign missionaries, men, wives, and unmarried women, 1123 (an increase of 93 during the year); native ordained ministers, 162; unordained native helpers, 1271; communicants, 34,555 (an increase of 2295 during the twelve months); pupils in schools, 14,817; contributions by native churches, 44,173 dollars (an advance of 5936 dollars on the previous year's contributions).

MR. McNEILL AT ISLINGTON.

The attendance at the Agricultural Hall service in Islington, on Sunday afternoon, was exceptionally large, some hundreds of persons being disappointed of admission. In introducing Rev. John McNeill, Dr. Thain Davidson said that he wished, in the name of the evangelistic workers of the Metropolis, to give a most hearty welcome to one who had stirred Edinburgh, and who, he trusted, had a grand work before him in London. To himself Edinburgh, when he now visited it, seemed like a quiet village, and he dared say that, to Mr. McNeill, London appeared a kingdom. As, according to the Lord Mayor, 100,000 souls are added to it per annum, they would need a hundred Mr. McNeills every year to keep pace with the population.

The preacher chose for his subject the miraculous healing of the paralytic man at Capernaum, and seemed more thoroughly at home on the platform of the Agricultural Hall than in the box pulpit of Regent-square. His easy, natural eloquence, his bold home-thrusts, and occasional sallies of humour, captivated the audience; and when at the close Dr. Davidson stated that evidently Mr. McNeill was in his right place in that Hall, a burst of cheering showed how fully the congregation endorsed the remark.

KING'S CROSS Y.M.C.A.

The fifth annual meeting of the members of this branch was held last week at the St. Pancras Vestry-hall. The Earl of Aberdeen presided. The annual report stated that the past year had been one of blessing. An evangelistic association was inaugurated in November last, and soon afterwards a week's special services were held at Drayton-park, Highbury. They were attended with considerable success, and were followed by a series of mission meetings in various parts of London. A number of social meetings had been held, and had produced many converts to Christ, whilst success had also attended the Sunday evening evangelistic meetings.

The noble Chairman, in his address, said the Association, as a whole, was a magnificent institution, and was doing incalculable good. Rev. A. Boyd-Carpenter said the Association went forward with the assumption that there was a definite work to be done among young men, and that work devolved upon the Christian Church. He looked upon it as one of the signs of the awakening of these latter days that the Church had roused itself to recognise that her work did not consist of only Sunday work, and the few other orthodox church services, but that there was work to be done for all classes; and among them stood out the young men of the day. Rev. Z. B. Woffendale said when it was remembered that in London there were more than 2,000,000 persons who were comparatively outside the influence of the churches, not being members of the congregation of any place of worship, they must be struck with the great need there was for the work of such societies as the Y.M.C.A. He would like to see a branch established in every quarter of the Metropolis. It seemed to him that the Church was not yet fully awake to a true realisation of the evils about it. The work of the Church had certainly been very greatly extended within the last few years, but it had not kept pace with the times. Other addresses were given.

REV. DR. SOMERVILLE.—We are sorry to learn that Dr. Somerville's health has not been good of late, and he has been under the necessity of keeping in retirement this season.

DR. BAEDEKER & RUSSIAN PRISONS.

AT the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting, on Friday last, Dr. Baedeker, who had that morning arrived in London from Russia, gave a deeply interesting story of his experiences during his evangelistic tour, extending over more than twelve months. He brought greetings from a Y.M.C.A. newly formed in Transcaucasia, at Schemachah, as the result of a wonderful spiritual quickening.

In Russia the prisoners are out of all proportion to the population. Every town of any size contains a prison with its small windows, iron-barred, and every prison is full. The poor fellows are drafted off to Siberia, but the prisons fill again, and are always full—over full. One prison, for instance, in Transcaucasia, built for eighty, contained at the time of Dr. Baedeker's visit 340 prisoners. It was an intense joy to put a New Testament into the hands of these men; for one of the cruellest features of their imprisonment is that they have nothing to do and nothing to read day after day, year after year. Some of them have their heads half shaved, a sign that they are marked out for banishment to Siberia.

Dr. Baedeker visited between thirty and forty prisons, and in each he was kindly and joyfully received both by the staff and the inmates. One governor, a Mohammedan, on the Doctor's departure, embraced and kissed him as if his dearest friend, exclaiming, "We have heard things to-day our fathers never told us." Much to Dr. Baedeker's joy he came across those who had accepted Christ as Saviour during his former visit. He found that they had not only remained faithful, but also that some had never ceased to pray for him daily that God would bless his message to others. Many interesting incidents, for which space will not suffice, illustrated again the mighty saving power of the Gospel of God.

MR. WALLACE J. GLADWIN, of Bombay, is contemplating a visit to England and America, returning to India in the autumn. One object of his journey will be to take his motherless lads, and place them for some years under the care of his sister, in the United States. He expects, however, to have considerable opportunities for Gospel and purity work.

REV. JAMES H. LAWRIE, Free Church of Scotland missionary to the New Hebrides, has lately come home on furlough after ten years' service in the island of Aneityum. It was with much sorrow that the natives parted with him, and he had great difficulty in getting away. One man, in bidding farewell to Mr. Lawrie, said, "When you came here I was as a man wandering in the wilderness; now I can sit at the communion table, and know that Jesus died for my sins." "The last missionary act that I did before leaving," says Mr. Lawrie, "was to make a coffin out of an old canoe for our good friend Nimtiwan. This was undoubtedly the oldest man on the island, having been a noted warrior, savage, and cannibal when Drs. Geddie and Inglis came to Aneityum. I visited him and prayed with him shortly before he died, and he expressed to me his confidence in Jesus as his Saviour from all sin."

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—Under the title of "The first Christian Preachers and their Successors," Rev. Dr. J. Hiles Hitchens gave an admirable address to the members and friends of the Open-air Mission, at their quarterly meeting, on the 25th ult., in the Lecture Hall of Eccleston-square Chapel, Pimlico. Mark iii. 13, 14 was the basis of the address, where Jesus called and ordained the twelve Apostles. The objects of the ordination, or appointment, were, first, that they might be with Him, and then that He might send them forth. He enumerated the diversity of gifts on the part of the twelve as an illustration that all who were duly called of the Lord would be used by Him in carrying on his work in the world. The proof of Apostolic succession was the ability to preach the same Gospel with the same power in the present day. Sir Robert Phayre, who presided, greatly interested the meeting by relating the story of his conversion in India.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

NEW GOSPEL HALL AT KILBURN.

FOR one-and-twenty years Mr. C. Russell Hurditch and his fellow evangelists have held aloft the banner of the Cross at Kilburn Gate, first in a tent and then in an iron hall. The latter structure was originally a ritualistic synagogue, we believe, at St. Leonards. Through the kind co-operation of Lord Radstock, it was secured for the Evangelistic Mission, and in its North London location it has been the scene of many a Gospel triumph; while from it has flowed many a rill of spiritual refreshment to Christian warriors and workers. At length, about a year ago, it had to go the way of all things terrestrial, and a spacious brick erection has now taken its place.

Last week Mr. Hurditch summoned his friends and helpers to celebrate the opening of the new building; afternoon and evening of Thursday they responded in goodly numbers, and rejoiced with him over the auspicious event. The premises comprise a large meeting-place, constructed to seat 800; a schoolroom, a soup kitchen, and various rooms for the workers. Part of the scheme is the erection of a hall in another part of the same thickly populated district. The Kilburn Gate buildings have been paid for, thanks to the generous aid of many friends, prominent among them being Mr. James E. Mathieson, Messrs. T. A. and E. M. Denny, Mr. John Morley, of Clapton, Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, &c. These and other facts were embodied by Mr. Hurditch in his business statement on Thursday, which he rounded off by an appeal for further help to the tune of £4000, in order to carry through the complete scheme of rearrangement. The entirely unsectarian and the mainly evangelistic complexion of the Mission was advanced as a plea for general support. "We know nothing of Churchman or Dissenter," said Mr. Hurditch; "we cordially welcome all preachers who will declare the Gospel of God. Many of those who receive blessing at the services attach themselves to different churches in the locality. It is matter of rejoicing too that Christians of all evangelical denominations have been drawn together here—a thing of no small importance in the present day."

This last sentiment expressed by the Director of the Mission was very well exemplified by the appearance of the platform both afternoon and evening. Those who addressed the former assembly were Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Lord Radstock, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Dr. Habershon, Rev. W. Stott, and Rev. F. B. Meyer. In the evening the like service was heartily rendered by Mr. T. B. Miller, Mr. J. McCall, Dr. Monro Gibson, Rev. Henry Sharp, Dr. Robert Anderson, Dr. Porter (from Australia), Rev. D. M. Cameron, and Mr. Herbert Taylor. All these friends wove into their short speeches cordial congratulations to Mr. Hurditch, as well as some words of exhortation or exposition fitted to strengthen the faith and fan the zeal of the workers. A very powerful Gospel appeal to the undecided, by Rev. W. Stott, closed the evening programme, so the hope may be cherished that the saving and sanctifying work to be carried on in the new hall was well and effectually begun on the very opening day.

An added interest was imparted to the proceedings by the brief but rousing words of Messrs. Egerton and Hardman, of Dublin, and Mr. Donald, of Glasgow, all of whom are about to enter on foreign mission work in far-off China.

The opening services embraced a variety of meetings, to be spread over several days, one of them being the inauguration of a "Children's Service Band" this (Friday) evening.

GEORGE YARD, WHITECHAPEL.

BY new premises just added to the George-yard Mission buildings, Whitechapel, Mr. George Holland's grand work among the poor and friendless will be greatly facilitated. For some time there has been a strong desire to annex the house, 87, High-street, standing directly in front of the Yard premises, but only recently was the way made perfectly clear. The period of waiting being ended, it is more than ever evident that the delay was of the Lord's ordering, for the better accomplishment of the important end in view. When the time to purchase arrived, the needful money was provided by a friend, whose name is kept secret, and gentlemen who are never behind in good works promptly came forward, and had the place suitably furnished. The result is capital accommodation for public meetings and the large and growing work among young girls.

The new premises were opened on Monday afternoon by the Princess Mary of Teck, who was accompanied by her daughter and one of her sons. Lady Ashburton, the Countess Compton, and many other warm friends of the work were present, and arrangements were also made whereby a number of those among whom Mr. Holland labours were able to witness the interesting proceedings. After giving a brief account of the many and varied agencies which have their home and centre in George-yard, Mr. Holland rejoiced to believe that the Girls' Institute, with more than 200 members, will prosper beyond past experience in the new and very commodious premises. He referred with pleasure to the great interest Princess Mary of Teck has shown in the Mission operations, and prayed that God would long spare her practically to sympathise with the poor and suffering, as well as actively to encourage those who labour for God in the metropolis.

Having declared the building open, the Princess gave expression to her high appreciation of Mr. Holland's devotion, saying that she trusted God's blessing would continue to rest upon him. Lord Radstock moved a vote of thanks to the Princess for her kindness. For many years, he said, he had refused to move such resolutions, because they are generally unmeaning ceremonies; but it gave him genuine pleasure to recognise the special interest of the occasion, and to discern in it an augury for good. He maintained that there is no higher honour than work for Christ, and expressed a hope that many more of the well-to-do residents of the West-end would show active sympathy with the needy of the East-end. The motion, having been seconded by Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, was carried with acclamation.

Mr. Holland and his helpers have our hearty congratulations upon this important addition to their Mission premises, and we trust God's blessing will, from the first, rest upon the work done in the new building.

THE SELF-HELP EMIGRATION SOCIETY was instrumental in assisting 902 persons to the British colonies, mostly to Canada, during last year. Care was, as usual, taken to select from the applicants only such as are able and willing to work. That the Society performs a much-needed function is made abundantly clear from the letters which are continually being received from emigrants abroad, who, through the Society's assistance, have been enabled to improve their condition in life. Rev. R. Mackay, the secretary, has collected some encouraging facts in "New Homes in Canada, and How to Make Them," a threepenny pamphlet, to be had from the office of the Society, 4, Fleet-lane, Farringdon-street, E.C. The Society offers to the benevolent various opportunities for doing good, and, as there are many eligible applicants for assistance this season, it is hoped that the funds will receive timely replenishment.

MILDMAY MEN'S NIGHT-SCHOOL.

It would be an immense boon to the nation if there were multiplied up and down the country, especially in our great cities and their suburbs, institutions similar to the admirable Night-school for Men carried on at the Mildmay Conference Hall. The success and blessing that have attended the effort show what can be done in that direction.

The annual meeting of the School is always an interesting occasion, and draws together a large number of the men and their friends. Last week some 400 of the "pupils" were entertained to tea, following which a public meeting was held in the great hall, which was crowded. After prayer by Rev. D. B. Hankin, and a few opening words by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, the certificates and prizes awarded for regular attendance and successful work during the past winter session were distributed by the Countess Compton, whose mother, Lady Ashburton, was also present.

Then the annual statement regarding the work was presented by the superintendent, Mr. P. S. Badenoch. Since the opening of the session on October 1, the School has been open 71 nights, there being 47 classes, with an average attendance of 374. The number on the books is 1064, and the highest attendance has been 541, the lowest being 256. The men represent 159 different occupations. The results of the last examination were considered very satisfactory: 334 took certificates for secular knowledge, and 236 passed in the Scripture examination. Mr. Badenoch laid particular stress upon the fact that while the intellectual improvement is a prominent factor, the chief aim is the conversion of the men. Many who have passed through the school are now engaged in various spheres of Christian work, and one has lately entered the East London Institute to prepare for service in the foreign field.

The address of the evening was delivered by Rev. John McNeill. After some felicitous remarks, he made a fervid temperance appeal, especially warning young men against "taking a little," and urging any who were halting between two opinions to determine for ever to let alone the intoxicating cup. He reminded them that temperance, however, is not salvation—it is not saving grace, although it often holds a man until the grace of God comes to him. With impassioned earnestness he affectionately invited all to decide for Christ without delay. "Let Him have you every bit," he exclaimed; "and when you have yielded yourself to Him, let the world know it by working for Him with all your might."

REV. FREDERICK HASTINGS was affectionately bidden farewell at an enthusiastic meeting of the congregation of Tolmers-square Congregational Church, N.W., on Tuesday, last week, previous to his departure for Australia, to enter upon the pastorate of the church at Adelaide, where Rev. S. O. Hebditch ministered for several years until his death a few months ago. Many expressions of goodwill concerning Mr. Hastings were spoken by the various speakers, who included Revs. J. C. Harrison, Dr. R. W. Dale, Edward White, Dr. Hannay, Newman Hall, Arthur Hall, and others. Rev. Charles Leech, of Queen's Park Church, Harrow-road, has declined an invitation to succeed Mr. Hastings at Tolmers-square.

ILL-USED OR DELINQUENT CHILDREN.—According to an order issued by the Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, in all cases coming to the knowledge of the police under his command in which children are treated with cruelty, either by their parents or others, whether witnessed by or reported to the police, the particulars are at once to be notified to the London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and the police are to afford it every information and assistance within their power. Also when children are apprehended under the Vagrant Act, the Society is to be at once informed of the arrest, and on application its officer will be permitted to bail the child, to take charge of it, and to produce it at the police-court at the hearing of the case.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Henry Thorne has lately closed a successful seventeen days' mission at Huddersfield, in conjunction with the Y.M.C.A.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has been busy evangelising at Pottsville, Pa. The outspoken testimonies of the evangelist against the prevalent evils of the time have produced a strong impression.

Billinghurst.—Mr. W. J. Taylor, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a fortnight's mission here, which has resulted in many professed decisions for Christ and a deeper spiritual life among the members.

Cornelius ("Gipsy") Smith and his wife have been evangelising at Stretham, Cambs., with many tokens of blessing. The permanent address of these friends is Sedgwick-street, Mill-road, Cambridge.

Dr. Pentecost has been much owned of God during his visit to Bethany Hall, Glasgow. Many have been quickened, and nearly 300 professed to have undergone a saving change. Dr. Pentecost held a mission last week in Pollokshields Free Church.

Mr. Sydney Black is preaching on Lord's Day evenings, to large and attentive audiences, in the Chelsea Town Hall. These services for the people, which have extended over a period of nearly six months, have been maintained with unabated interest.

Mr. Herbert W. Pewtress, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has conducted a week of services for children at the South-street Baptist Church, Greenwich. A number of scholars made a profession of faith in the Saviour, and the teachers were much cheered and encouraged in their work.

Mr. W. Humpstone's winter tour in the United States has been attended by much blessing. Churches were revived in many places, and backsliders reclaimed, while a large number of persons professed to find peace in Christ. During twenty-four years the Lord has graciously owned Mr. Humpstone's Gospel labours in America.

Mr. Sankey has lately been conducting some meetings in Denver, Colorado, at the Y.M.C.A. At the closing service he told the story of his first meeting with Mr. Moody at a Y.M.C.A. convention in Indianopolis, and spoke earnestly to the young men on the need of watchfulness and prayer. By special desire he sang effectively the old favourite, "The Ninety and Nine."

Mr. George Clarke's mission in Belfast came to a close on Sunday evening, after lasting for five weeks. During the last week the meetings were held in the Crescent Church, which was crowded to such an extent each night that hundreds had generally to go away. Many remained for the after-meetings. Mr. Clarke goes from Belfast to Newtownards, where he is to conduct a fortnight's mission.

Mr. Opie Rodway, of Stroud, Gloucestershire, after staying at Matlock for two months, is now in a large measure restored to health, and is able to resume his evangelistic work. To-morrow (Saturday) he commences a four days' mission at the Baptist Chapel, Painswick, near Stroud, and asks prayer that at each service the Holy Spirit's power may work in the hearts of the people, and that there may be much fruit.

Manningtree, Essex.—There is here a flourishing branch of the Young Women's Christian Association. In connection with it an eight days' mission has just been conducted by Rev. W. H. Williamson, of Ipswich. Bible-readings were held at various centres, the gentry in the neighbourhood allowing the use of their drawing-rooms. The week evening meetings were held in the large public hall. The word preached was not in vain, for many souls were savingly blessed.

Messrs. Middleton and Hogben have again undertaken a three weeks' mission in Miss Robinson's Gospel tent at Landport. They have been preparing for the work by a ten days' mission in the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute. Not a night passed without apparently real conversions. The Christian workers have to record their gratitude for solid help received. For the intervening weeks we are going on praying and believing for much blessing in the tent, and that the coffee palace and mission hall, now rapidly rising, may be the more permanent scene of lasting good later on.

ALICE WALKER.

Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

Mr. E. P. Telford, on Friday, March 29, concluded a very successful fortnight's mission at Morley Hall, near Bournemouth, a mission-hall connected with the Westbourne Baptist Chapel. The attendance has been continuously increasing, and at the closing meeting the hall was crowded to its utmost capacity. The meetings have been full of power, and many souls have been converted. Mr. Telford has been ably assisted by his wife, who is a sweet and accomplished singer, and an apt and patient worker in the inquiry-room.

Evangelistic Mission.—The work of this Mission is spreading in the far east of London, the public hall in Green-street, Upton Park, having been taken for Sundays and other week nights. The hall is crowded on the Sundays at the Gospel services, at which Messrs. William Brown and William Grove have been the preachers. A special mission was held last week, with a good attendance every night, and many souls have confessed to have found salvation through Christ. The hall has been secured for a continuance of these meetings on Sunday mornings and evenings, and Saturday nights.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, the Australian evangelists have conducted a three weeks' mission at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, which has been greatly owned of God. The church has received much blessing and instruction, and a fresh impetus in soul winning, while not a few men and women have professed conversion. Some of the cases of conversion have been very interesting—one was an atheist, others drunkards. Two husbands went into the inquiry-room one evening to find their wives also seeking the Saviour, and all four went away rejoicing together. The Gospel was proclaimed with great earnestness, pith, and power by Mr. J. S. Harrison, while his wife sang the old, old story in loving and sympathetic tones, reaching the hearts of many in the audience.

Mr. Herbert Francis writes from Bradford, Ohio, U.S.A., on March 19:—We are thankful to the Lord He has led us out to labour in America. For nearly fourteen months we have been travelling from east to west and north to south to preach the blessed Gospel, chiefly where others have not gone, covering a distance of about 7500 miles. I have held about 500 services in twenty-nine or thirty different places, with much manifested blessing. Hundreds (a large proportion of them church members) are longing to know more of the Word, and to be brought into a deeper experience of spiritual life. Circumstances call us home, at least for a time. We expect to reach England about the middle of May, and I shall be glad to give help in the Gospel to any desiring it. Letters may be addressed to me in London, care of Mr. F. E. Paynter, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

A MEETING OF TEMPERANCE MAYORS was held on Friday last at the Mansion House. It was in connection with the National Temperance League, and many provincial mayors who could not attend sent sympathetic letters. In the course of a hearty speech, the Lord Mayor, who presided, alluded to the festal gatherings held at the Mansion House. He said that within his own knowledge not one-half the wine is now drunk on such occasions as was the case twenty years ago. His lordship advocated the popular veto, giving good reasons for his views. Among others who addressed the meeting were the Lord Mayor of York, and the Mayor of Birmingham, the latter saying that the late Mr. Bright was a total abstainer during the greater part of his life, and when first he spoke in public his subject was temperance.

GOSPEL WORK AT BORDESLEY, BIRMINGHAM.—With the sympathy of Christians of various denominations, Mr. J. Stead is carrying on with much success an evangelical mission and Gospel temperance work in the populous districts of Bordesley and Palmer-street, Birmingham. This quarter contains about forty large streets, besides slums and rookeries, and over forty public-houses and beer-shops. Besides the poorer inhabitants, there are salt-girls, costermongers, rag and bone pickers, and hawkers. To these the Gospel is preached in the Mission-room and in the open air, the superintendent being assisted by a band of hearty workers. There is a Sunday-school of about four hundred children; temperance effort is sustained among old and young; the sick are visited, and the poor relieved. Last year's report states that the Mission premises greatly require enlargement. Communications should be addressed to Mr. J. Stead, 221, St. Andrew's-road, Birmingham.

BISHOP TAYLOR'S MISSION.

The following letter from one of Bishop Taylor's mission party, in central Africa, will be read with interest; it was addressed to M. Chatelain in Switzerland:—

Malange, Africa, January 22, 1889.—We received your post-card and Gospels, and parts of your grammar by last mail. The Gospel by John is good. The natives understand it. I feel it has come from God through you. I have thanked God for it many times. I assure you I am much interested in your work and shall do all in my power to push it on, on this side of the ocean. I was wishing I had about 1000 or 2000 of your Gospels by John for this part. How much will they cost per 100, or will the Bible Society give any free grants? I might let you know a little about the work here in Malange and villages. God is greatly blessing our labours. Some time ago I started a meeting on the other side of the Malange river. One man got troubled about his sins, and turned from them to the Lord, and the next Sunday another man gave himself up to God. They threw away their idols. You know they wear a lot of things around their heads and necks. These they threw away also, and their testimony is: "When I did not know God, I dressed in these things and served idols; but now we know God, and we don't want them any more." I believe there is a work of grace commenced in many hearts. We are gathering them together one day in the week for prayer, and to encourage them on in the good way. If they continue steadfast, when the bishop comes they shall be received into the church. I am glad the bishop is on his way.

The store is doing well. I bought 170 lbs. of rubber last Saturday, and cleared over nine dollars. I am not confined all the time to shop-keeping. If I was, it would be a hindrance to the work. But on any day or at any time, when I feel led to go out and preach and teach Jesus, I go; shut up the doors. By his grace I am full of hope and courage for this work. My heart and soul are in it. All that the poor Africans need is Jesus. Have some Gospels sent to us here as soon as you can. Robert Shields.

In forwarding the letter to us, M. Chatelain says:—

I have been longer in Switzerland than I anticipated. Only now have I completed what I then purposed to accomplish. The primer has been printed and in part despatched to the field; the Gospel of John has been printed and has reached its destination and begun its blessed work. The grammar is as good as published, the last sheet having been returned to the printer with corrections. Mr. Shields' letter will show you not only that the ground is beginning to thaw, but that what I expounded to you in London concerning self-support through trading has a practical basis. After considerable correspondence, the Congo-State has granted my request to let me have Dr. Summers' MSS., who, you remember, had asked me to publish them, in case he should die in Africa.

THE POOR OF CHISWICK still have the Gospel preached to them in the mission hall which is the home and centre of Mr. R. T. Smith's many and unremitting endeavours. The eighth annual report, just out, shows that there is need for all the effort that can be directed upon the needy neighbours of the well-to-do residents of Gunnersbury and Bedford-park. In addition to evangelistic work, there are meetings for the encouragement of temperance and thrift, the sick also are helped, and the young made to feel that they are cared for. The Crèche has proved a great success, no fewer than 3024 admissions being registered during the year. The Mission deserves support, for it does a good work in a quiet way. Mr. Smith's address is 15, Linden-gardens, Chiswick.

THE BLOOD OF CHRIST
IN RELATION TO SANCTIFICATION.

A fortnight ago, in a note on New Testament teaching concerning the blood of Christ, we asked: "Can one text be quoted where the blood clearly means, not the poured-out life, but the life of Jesus during his sojourn on earth or since his resurrection; and where it clearly does not mean the blood shed upon the cross or afterwards applied by sprinkling?" We have received the following in reply:—

My Dear Sir,—I was thankful to see the note on this subject. It did not reach me in time to answer your request for a proof text of the doctrine that the glorified life of Jesus is called blood, soon enough for the forthcoming issue. Our Lord gives it Himself. He calls the spirit which quickens us and puts life in us his flesh and blood (see John vi. 53 and 63). When it is said, "the blood cleanseth," it must mean the life of Jesus—the glorified life—because it is that life which is now sanctifying us, and this is confirmed by the text, "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." And this again is witnessed to by a portion of the blood under the law being used to sprinkle the people, &c. This must have its place in the Gospel. But where? If you deny that it is the spirit of Jesus, then you deny it a place.

Your loving friend, Wm. Woods Smyth.

A reference to the passage quoted from the Gospel of John shows that our friend has quite misconstrued the Lord's words. Having spoken of believing on Him as receiving the bread from heaven (ver. 33—36, 47 and 48), our Lord explained his metaphor by saying: "The bread which I will give is my flesh, for the life of the world." Indisputably, it was not his glorified flesh that He was about to give, but rather his flesh in the condition of liability to death. When He saw that his disciples followed the Jews in putting a sensuous interpretation upon his words, our Lord showed that his teaching was not to be apprehended carnally, but spiritually: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I have spoken unto you are spirit and are life." What is flesh in comparison with spirit? and what is blood in comparison with life? In thus speaking of spirit and life, our Lord was clearly not identifying them with his flesh and blood, as our correspondent seems to imply.

We also make the following observations:—

(1) The blood is not, in Scripture, used as the equivalent of life, but only of the life of all flesh (Lev. xvii. 14).

(2) All flesh had corrupted its way before God, and therefore the blood which was its life could not represent the Divine life of the Son of God.

(3) It was because the children were partakers of blood and flesh (sic, Greek) that Jesus Himself likewise took part of the same, that through death (= the shedding of his blood—the pouring out of his life unto death), He might destroy him that had the power of death, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage (Heb. ii. 14).

(4) There is, so far as we know, no blood in the glorified body of the Lord Jesus—for "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." If this applies to us, it must apply to Him, for our body of humiliation is to be transfigured into the likeness of his glorious body.

(5) To make the blood of Jesus in any passage represent his glorified life is to deny that its atoning efficacy is taught in that passage, and to imply that it was not necessary in that connection. But it was by the shedding of his blood that He became the propitiation for our sins. His glorified human life is the consequence and result of his pouring out his soul, his life, his blood, unto death on the cross, and cannot, therefore, mean the same thing as his blood.

(6) To make "the Spirit which quickens us and puts life in us" synonymous with "his flesh and blood" is to attribute the work of the Holy Spirit to the flesh and blood of Christ. This is confusion.

(7) The words of John vi. 53, 54, are surely to be paralleled with those of Matt. xxvi. 26—28, where the Lord Himself declared the wine to represent his blood, which was shed for many for the remission of sins. It cannot, therefore, in John vi. 53, mean his glorified life.

(8) To make the sprinkling of blood upon the people symbolic of the impartation of the glorified life of Christ to his believing people is to fail to distinguish between things that differ both in symbol and in fact.

(9) We cannot comprehend our correspondent's arguments as to a portion of the blood being sprinkled. The sprinkling of the blood surely means the application of the shed blood to the person or thing to be purified.

(10) Certainly the blood in John vi. 53 does not clearly mean the glorified life; we think it clearly means the life poured out, i.e., the death of Christ.

THE "BUTCHERS' FESTIVAL," which has formerly been held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, will take place at Exeter Hall on the evening of April 16, when addresses will be given by gentlemen and friends interested in the welfare of the butchers of Smithfield Market.

WAKEFIELD Y.M.C.A.—This flourishing little Y.M.C.A., with its 294 members and associates, held its third annual tea and meeting on Thursday, March 21. The meeting was very enthusiastic; stirring addresses were given by several friends, including Mr. W. H. Newett, of Manchester Y.M.C.A., and Rev. J. Sloan, of Glasgow.

MRS. H. M. DYKE, writing from Morija, Basutoland, says:—Since the month of October there has been much sickness among us, and, during the absence of her parents on a holiday, death took away our little grandchild Alice, two and a half years of age, the darling of the house. Our beloved daughter-in-law has, we are glad to say, now quite recovered from a long and serious illness.

CHRIST CHURCH, WESTMINSTER-ROAD.—At the annual meeting for receiving reports (Rev. Newman Hall presiding) the following statistics were presented:—Church members 900, Sunday-schools 13 with 4580 children and 376 teachers, £344; Southwark mission to working classes, with evangelist holding 160 open-air and 350 indoor meetings, £182; City mission, £40; Christian instruction society, conducting services in twelve lodging-houses every Sunday evening, £35; benevolent and nursing society and poor members' fund, £560; almshouses for twenty-three women, £952; building fund, Sunday-schools, £981; Dorcas and working societies, £108; foreign missions, £134; temperance, £62; tract and Bible, &c., £115; total for all purposes, including church expenses, £5078 13s. 4d.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON preached a sermon on intemperance in St. Paul's Cathedral on Sunday evening. Taking for his text, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ" (Gal. vi. 2), he showed that besetting sins, overwhelming temptations, and difficulties in the path of life, are the spiritual burdens spoken of by the Apostle. The burden of intemperance is by many found terrible to bear, as well as hard to escape from. What is required is that those who realise their duty as Christians should not merely preach, not merely set an example, but afford active encouragement. If the tempted must abstain altogether from that which is dangerous to them, then those who are not tempted must also abstain, in order to afford strength and sympathy to the weak. This is the way the battle can be fought with most success, and the Bishop entreated all whom he addressed to assist to the utmost of their ability in reclaiming those who by weakness, bad example or evil instruction, have fallen victims to intemperance.

YOUNG WOMEN AT MORLEY ROOMS.—Through the kindness of Miss Erskine, a very pleasant social evening was provided last week by Miss C. M. Gough, at her rooms in John-street, W.C., to her special clients—young women engaged in restaurants and refreshment bars. About sixty of these friends were present, and for several hours they were beguiled into forgetfulness of the long, weary hours which they spend in ministering to the wants of an exacting public. Mingled with song, music, and recitation, there were words of good cheer and temperance talk from Canon Leigh, and Mr. Harris, of the Church of England Temperance Society. In his address, Canon Leigh made excellent spiritual application of the wonderful powers of the phonograph in recording and reproducing the utterances committed to it. The evening seemed all too short, and when the proceedings closed with the singing of "What a Friend we have in Jesus," it could be seen that the guests were very reluctant to take their departure. Such occasions are green spots in the lives of these young people, and the memory of them must be helpful amid the wear and tear of daily work.

Letters to the Editor.

SUNDAY CLOSING FOR ENGLAND.

Dear Sir,—We ask your readers to give praise to God for the second reading of the English Sunday Closing Bill. We also earnestly request prayer that, notwithstanding all opposers, the Bill may become law in the present session of Parliament.—Yours truly, Robert Whitworth.

THE MILITARY CHURCH IN ITALY.

Dear Friend,—The work begun seventeen years ago under this title, that of evangelising the soldiers of our large standing army, has prospered in a marvellous manner, producing good fruit in every part of Italy. The original Church in Rome is now the mother of several others, established in various localities; but Rome is still the centre where the chief work of evangelisation is carried on.

This Mission is maintained by the voluntary offerings of friends, and, as the sphere extends, the expenses naturally increase.

I find myself at the commencement of the new year in great straits for money, and I am under the absolute necessity of making this appeal for further support, so that I, founder and head of the movement, may carry on the work unfettered with so much care for providing funds. The Lord will surely reward those who will contribute towards this important object—those who love Italy, and who desire to see her sons true Christians; and the prayers of the soldiers throughout the land will rise up to heaven in grateful thanks.—Your devoted brother in Christ Jesus,
Cav. Luigi Capellini.

THE FAITH MISSION.

Dear Sir,—I read with considerable interest the review of "Pilgrims Towards Plymouth," which appeared in a recent issue. The article was written in a thoroughly Christian spirit, and cannot but be productive of good. There is, however, one sentence in the article referred to that demands some notice. It is as follows: "It is also a pity if the Pilgrims have so conducted their work as to convey the impression that, as one minister who has observed their work, says, 'They seek early co-operation with the churches only in order to ultimate separation.'"

With the writer I believe this is a "serious charge." But I, too, am a minister of the Gospel. I have had considerable experience of the work of the Faith Mission, having attended upwards of fifty of their meetings within the past eighteen months. I have had besides this several conversations and discussions with the leaders of the Mission, and yet I must assert that never on any occasion did I hear anything directed against the churches, nor was there anything done by them from which I could infer that they sought "early co-operation with the churches only in order to ultimate separation." There are, of course, many things in the churches that we all regret, and would like to see remedied. The Pilgrims have never been slow to denounce these things. That, however, is a different matter.—Yours, &c.,
Another Minister.

A friend of Mr. Govan also writes:—

Mr. Govan has a great objection to the spirit of denominationalism, and, where possible, he prefers not to be identified with any particular church. This is, however, really necessary, especially in smaller town and country places, where identification with one church would probably mean the confinement of the work to its adherents. This, to some extent, gives the work the appearance of being opposed to the churches, but the real fact is that, speaking generally, there are comparatively few ministers or churches in a position to join with work which has much spiritual vitality in it, and excuses are found for abstaining from it. So much is this the case in Mr. Govan's experience that he has repeatedly spoken to me of ceasing to seek at all the co-operation of the churches, but I have always urged him to give the ministers at least the opportunity of showing sympathy, as one can scarcely expect a man in the position of a minister to give much support to Christian work begun in his village without any reference to a recognition of him. This is the extent to which Mr. Govan seeks their co-operation, unless invited to the place by the minister himself.

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Dear Sir,—In last week's issue of The Christian, under the head "Among the Churches," it is stated that the Church Missionary Society has lately had an unprecedented number of offers of service "from clergymen and others," at least one a week. The words "and others" should have been struck out. There would be nothing remarkable in one offer per week, if all sorts of offers were included. One a day would be nearer the mark. What is unprecedented is the number of clergymen willing to give up ministerial work at home to go into the foreign field. It has never been one a month before. It has been one a week lately. Surely this is a cause for much thanksgiving.—Yours very truly, Eugene Stock.

TRANSATLANTIC JOTTINGS.

Messrs. Crossley and Hunter have been holding evangelistic services in Peterborough, Ontario.

Dr. Fulton, the Anti-Popish lecturer, whose recent book created a great stir, is to pay a visit to Europe this summer.

The Italian Y.C.M.A. of New York has held its seventh anniversary. It has 200 members, with Sunday-school, industrial school, &c.

Midnight Mission work for the rescue of the fallen has been begun in the city of Rochester, New York, and many conversions are reported.

A revival of much interest has been in progress at Pleasant Hill, Tennessee, and already twelve young men and women connected with the academy have professed conversion.

A recent revival at Memphis, U.S., has resulted in the professed conversion of nearly one hundred persons, many of them being young people from the Sunday-school and normal school.

A spiritual revival of considerable depth and solidity is reported from Maryville College, Tennessee. It is said that not more than fifteen out of 260 students remain without a Christian hope.

Rev. Joseph Cook, in his Boston Monday lectures, continues to deal heavy blows at the pretensions of the Roman Catholic Church in seeking to control the national education of the young in the States.

Miss Jessie A. Ackerman has been appointed by the American W.C.T.U. to follow Mrs. Leavitt in a round-the-world mission. By latest accounts she was in Honolulu, where she had made a deep impression, and good results were expected.

Mrs. S. R. Gordon, the mother of Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., of Boston, died on February 26, at the age of seventy-eight. Mrs. Gordon was the mother of twelve children, of whom eight are still living, and all walking in her footsteps as followers of Jesus.

Mr. Grattan Guinness is very highly spoken of by some of our American contemporaries. After his return from Mexico he is to hold a series of missionary conferences in leading cities in the States; he will be accompanied by Dr. Ashmore, late of China.

Mr. L. D. Wishard writes from Kyoto, Japan, on February 1, to the Chicago Y.M.C.A. Watchman, announcing his arrival there, and some interesting gatherings of Japanese Christians. He and a friend had held a series of meetings in one college, where nearly a hundred students expressed a desire to become Christians.

Twelve students in the Worcester (U.S.) Academy have pledged themselves to go as foreign missionaries, and a very deep religious interest is steadily spreading in the school, between thirty and forty having confessed Christ. Though this institution has been affiliated chiefly with the Baptist denomination, it draws many students from Congregational homes all over New England.

Bible lectures by leading ministers are being held on Sunday evenings in one of the Brooklyn churches.

Mr. John Wanamaker, the new American Postmaster-General, continues to superintend his leviathan Sunday-school at Bethany Church, Philadelphia.

Miss F. E. Willard's autobiography, entitled, "Glimpses of Fifty Years," is stated to be a book of rare interest. Judging from some specimen advance pages we have seen, the work will not merely be a personal record, but a review of temperance work during the half-century, and a trumpet-call to further advances.

Philadelphia.—A very unusual interest in the subject of vital godliness has been witnessed in certain large sections of this city since early in the autumn of last year. Indeed, it may be truthfully said, there has been no such awakening in the city, when so many hearts have been stirred, and so many persons hopefully converted, since the great revival in the fall and winter of 1857.

Thousands of immigrant girls who go to America are annually lost to purity through the lack of systematic effort to protect and instruct them in their chosen work—domestic service. The "Sunshine Mission" aims to meet this great need by establishing Homes for the training of these girls. It is hoped that the "Sunshine" work of prevention may some time dispel for ever the need of "Midnight Missions" of reformation.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Hon. Neal Dow may visit Europe this year; he is now 85.

In Ceylon temperance work is prominently associated with the churches.

Mr. William Forbes has been giving addresses at Wandsworth and Stoke Newington.

The Canada Citizen says there has been a general decrease of drunkenness in "Scott Act" counties.

Melbourne is distinguished by its coffee-palaces, which are built on a scale of which we in England have no idea, and often make up from three to four hundred beds.

The Gospel temperance meetings at Langloan Free Church, Coatbridge, held every Saturday by the energetic minister, Rev. Mr. McDougall, are are a source of blessing to not a few.

The Pittsburg millionaire, Mr. A. Carnegie, has written a paper on "How a Young Man can Succeed." He must keep clear of pitfalls; and Mr. Carnegie points to drink as one of the worst.

In his address at the farewell meeting to Rev. F. Hastings, who is proceeding to Adelaide, Dr. Hannay said there was one cloud on the future of Australia. The colonists were placing their hopes on the production of wine as the great staple industry. He told them he hoped that before this time arrived people would be too wise to drink wine.

The Committee of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union has succeeded in its scheme of raising £10,000 for special educational work, and has actively commenced operations. In response to an advertisement seventy-five applications were received for the post of lecturer, and from these seven gentlemen have been selected. They are—Mr. Joseph Addison, of Crowle, Doncaster, teacher; Mr. John Burgess, of London, teacher; Mr. William Finnemore, of London, teacher; Mr. Arthur Grieves, of London, a medical man; Dr. James Searson, of Dublin, a medical man; Mr. John Topham, of London, teacher; and Mr. Albert Howard Trow, B.Sc., of Newtown, Mont., also a teacher.

MR. GEORGE STOTT.—Miss E. R. Teage, Sanders, Dartmouth, writes on March 30:—Mr. George Stott, of the China Inland Mission, whose strength has been failing during the last few months, is fast nearing home, if he is not already in the presence of the King. About the middle of November, Mr. and Mrs. Stott left England for Cannes, hoping that the mild climate might, with God's blessing, renew Mr. Stott's health, and enable them to return to their much-loved work in China, some time this year. But the Lord has ordered it otherwise for his servant, and is now calling him "up higher." Mr. Stott has been gradually failing, and although, until March 11, he was taking drives almost daily, he is now unable to leave his room, and we are expecting at any moment to hear he has gone to be with the Lord. His last message to us, three days ago, was, "It is well with my soul." We feel sure that those who know Mr. and Mrs. Stott will be remembering them in prayer during this time of trial. Mrs. Stott has asked me to answer any inquiries, if friends wish to know further particulars, as her time is so fully taken up, that she finds it impossible to write to all.

The Book World.

Mr. Aitken's New Book.

Eastertide: Thoughts on the Passion and Resurrection of our Lord. By Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken. 3s. J. F. Shaw & Co. Having been originally preached in St. Jude's Church, Mildmay, these sermons, sixteen in number, are affectionately dedicated to Mrs. Pennefather, with whose sainted husband, in the same North London parish, the author began his ministerial career more than twenty years ago. In some prefatory remarks Mr. Aitken beautifully enunciates the truth that it is always Holy Week and Eastertide with the true Christian; he goes on to observe that it is nevertheless well that, from time to time, we should have those great events of the past, on which our present hopes depend, brought with special vividness before our mind's eye, and that we should learn afresh all the many lessons that cluster around Calvary. We thank him for this helpful book, which will, we trust, prove enlightening to persons spiritually blind, as well as edifying to those who are already in the faith. The discourses are not only eloquent, but remarkable for their great wealth of instruction on the sublimest of all themes. They are, moreover, characterised by a freshness and vigour which are not the less welcome because fully expected in the work of one from whom so many good things, in the way of mission sermons, have been received in the past.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Family Worship. By Rev. G. S. Barrett. 2s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons. This volume contains morning and evening prayers for a month. Some may be glad of such a guide to family worship. The quiet reading of the petitions would, moreover, prove a means of grace to many isolated believers.

Canon Bell's Gleanings from a Tour in Palestine and the East (Hodder & Stoughton, 6s.) has gone into a second edition. The intrinsic merits of the work are sure to gain for it a growing circle of readers, who will follow with interest the Canon's wanderings over "those holy fields" that were trod by the Redeemer of the world. Excellent illustrations illuminate the book.

Work is the title of a new penny weekly paper published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. As an instructor in theory and practice, designed for both professionals and amateurs, it is calculated to prove exceedingly useful. Methods are clearly expounded, and a large amount of information given on the arts and sciences which in any degree bear on handiwork of a constructive or decorative character. Illustrations and diagrams add to the practical value of the paper.

Récits et Allégories. Par R. Saillens. Paris: Librairie Fischbacher, 33, Rue de Seine. Fifteen parabolic stories, all of which have been related in McAll meetings in France. Chaste in language, and forcibly illustrating the fundamental truths of Christianity, some of these pieces are quite charming specimens of religious allegory. We are not at all surprised to learn from the preface that one of them has been translated into Russian by the illustrious novelist, Count Leo Tolstoï.

The Repeated Name. By Rev. James Smith, of Dufftown. 9d. Hamilton, Adams & Co. A very successful attempt to set forth some of the fathomless and precious teachings of Holy Writ. "Abraham, Abraham," "Martha, Martha," and other repeated names, both in Old and New Testaments, are made central points of Biblical studies, rich in spiritual suggestiveness. In some additional chapters Mr. Smith shows that other Biblical name incidents have lessons for to-day which are too commonly overlooked. Bible students will be rewarded by perusing this useful work.

At Evening Time. By Lewis Lauriston. The London Literary Society, 376, Strand, W.C. That self-sufficiency which often goes under the name of philosophic doubt is exposed in its essential impotence, and the claims of Christ upon the human conscience are strongly enforced. In the form of a biography, and in kind and tender language, the author storms one of the citadels of modern unbelief, and brings to view that faithful service of God, as revealed in Christ, which has its fruit unto holiness, and gives the victory over sin and death. In some respects the treatment lacks cogency, and the literary style is rather tedious.

Church and People is a new threepenny quarterly issued by the Church Pastoral Aid Society from their offices, Falcon-court, Fleet-street, E.C. The first number contains several live records of home mission work in connection with the Church of England, and also articles of a weightier sort from well-known pens. We wish the new venture all success in its chosen mission.

The death of John Bright lends a special value to the very excellent collection of sketches by Mr. Joseph Wright, entitled, Janet Hamilton and other Papers, published by Messrs. R. & R. Clark, Edinburgh. The first five sketches relate to the venerable Scottish poetess, in whose writings the late Mr. Bright was much interested, and a vivid account is given of the statesman's visit to her humble home. All the papers are graphically written, and marked by a fine literary taste; they will, of course, be best appreciated by Northerners.

Concise Harmony of the Four Gospels. Seeley & Co. In this quarto volume, by an anonymous compiler, the life of the Son of God upon earth, as recorded by the Evangelists, is carefully and effectively set out in parallel columns. Where preferable, the Revised Version has been followed, and the points of resemblance and difference are displayed in a manner which Bible students will highly appreciate. In some pages of "Notes" at the end, points of difficulty are discussed, but never in a dogmatic spirit. It is, however, to be regretted that the author should, in this part of his work, although with evident hesitation, have referred to critical doubts and questionings, such as trouble but few people who are so earnest in Bible study as to make use of so practical a help as his "Concise Harmony."

Short Biographies for the People. The latest addition to this admirable series of penny tracts is devoted to Henry Kirke White. Mr. S. R. Pattison is to be congratulated upon the success with which he has compressed a very large amount of instructive matter into the small space at his disposal. The yearly bound volumes of these biographies have proved exceedingly useful, but a place of special importance must be given to the latest collection, containing twelve Reformers. (1s. 6d.) It is hoped that many who have not paid much attention to the individual history of the Reformers will by this handy volume be led to do so, and thus to acquaint themselves in a very effective manner with the glorious Reformation itself. While calculated to do good service in Sunday-school libraries, this book is deserving of cordial recommendation to readers of biography in general, and to those who desire to know something of the Reformation in particular. (Religious Tract Society.)

Psycho-Therapeutics; or, Treatment by Sleep and Suggestion. By C. Lloyd Tuckey, M.D. Baillière, Tindall & Cox. For some years past Dr. Liébault, of Nancy, with an ever-increasing number of followers, has been treating nervous and other troublesome maladies by what has been called "suggestion." The patient is hypnotised, or led into an artificial sleep, in which he is remarkably open to psychic impressions. Attention being then directed to the malady complained of, the physician "suggests" improvement; and, absurd as it may seem to some, it is yet true that in many countries of Europe results as well authenticated as they are wonderful to contemplate, have followed "suggestions" thus made in the hypnotic state. We are glad to learn that in the sphere of "moral" diseases—dipsomania, the opium habit, and the craving for narcotics—this treatment has proved specially serviceable, patients having by "sleep and suggestion" become possessed of a wholesome horror of the hateful things to which they had previously been enslaved. Though somewhat of a novelty in its present form, "suggestion" has more than once been half discovered. In a singular manner this statement of the system illustrates the many wonderful capabilities and accommodations of the mind of man.

Wells of Elim. A collection of over fifty devotional poems, of varying merit. (To be had from "Neophyte," 90, Elderfield-road, Clapton, E., price 3d.)

How to Study the Bible is a very thoughtful and useful booklet by Rev. C. H. Waller, principal of St. John's Hall, Highbury. We trust it will be widely circulated. (1d. S. W. Partridge & Co.)

Mr. J. Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row, continues to issue pamphlets counteracting ritualism, and exposing atheism. Among his recent publications are: Babylonianism Protected, by a Retired Rector; Impeachment of Atheism, by S. J. Celestine Edwards; No Sect in Heaven, a Poem; and Sketch of the Life of Bishop King, with Portrait, by J. Hanchard. These are all penny publications.

Some "personal reminiscences" of the late W. E. Forster, from the pen of James H. Tuke, will appear in the next number of The Friends' Quarterly Examiner.

In Nothing New, Canon Bell presents us with some vigorous "thoughts on Robert Elsmere," and a succinct and lucid statement of the veracity of Christianity. (4d. Nisbet & Co.)

The Dying Pillow. In this penny tract the last days of Infidels and Christians are contrasted. The facts are eloquent, and will, we trust, be greatly blessed to the awakening of sinners. (W. Wileman, 34, Bouverie-street, E.C.)

Shelley & Co.'s Complete Press Directory for 1889 contains a full and impartial guide to the Press of the United Kingdom. The summary of the leading newspaper law cases during last year will give a very practical value to the compilation. (1s. Shelley & Co., 5, Leadenhall-street, E.C.)

Two excellent booklets from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, are: "I Don't Like Tracts," in which a common plea is well considered, and an important method of Christian testimony powerfully defended; and The Christian Soldier, which contains searching and stimulating thoughts for the battle of life.

"Emmanuel" Texts. 6d. each. Partridge & Co. This is a series of texts, with ornamental letters, embossed in thick cardboard, the silver letters on a dark ground being bright and effective. Cord for hanging is attached to each, which renders them easy of adjustment. The designs are superior in style, and the words well chosen.

Old Testament Chronology. As a companion to his New Testament Handbook, recently published, Mr. W. T. Lynn has arranged under their probable respective dates the principal events recorded in the Old Testament. The work is carefully done, and four well-executed maps are included. (Cloth, 6d. George Stoneman, 67, Paternoster-row.)

Worldliness: its Inroads, and the Worship and Work of the Church. By Rev. J. E. Sampson. 1d. Partridge & Co. Here are some plain words on a subject of pressing importance. Originally spoken eleven years ago at the conference of members of the Church of England, they were embodied in this booklet, which has already had a wide circulation.

The Christian Artisan, a record of the Tower Hamlets Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, is a new penny monthly publication. We trust it will prove serviceable to the Association, and helpful to all its members. It is edited by Mr. S. B. Russell, hon. secretary of the branch, the home of which is at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E.

Everybody's Pocket Cyclopædia. The third edition each of fifty thousand, is rapidly being exhausted. The book gives "things worth knowing, things difficult to remember, and tables of reference." Remarkable alike for cheapness and comprehensiveness, it is not surprising that it sells. A number of maps are bound up with this edition. (Cloth, 6d.; leather, 1s. Saxon & Co., 23, Bouverie-street, E.C.)

Memorial Sermons Preached on the Death of the Hon. Thomas Holt, of Halcot, Bexley, Kent. This booklet contains sermons delivered by Rev. B. W. Chancellor, at the Iron Church, Bexley; by Rev. T. F. Waddell, at Crayford Baptist Chapel; and by Mr. William Harrison, at Bloomsbury Hall, Meard-street, Soho, London, W. They constitute a fitting tribute to a man of conspicuous work.

Among recent pamphlets against Ritualism may be named:—Six Points of Ritualism, wherein Romish practices are traced to their pagan origin. (3d. Office of "The Rock," 7, Southampton-street, Strand.)—Ritualism, its Unscriptural Aims and Tendencies, a lecture by Rev. R. Leitch. (1d. Newcastle-on-Tyne Bible Depôt, 33, Pilgrim-street.)—The Real Presence and the E. C. U., a sermon by Rev. L. H. Byrnes. (3d. Kensit.)

The Great Image; or, Nebuchadnezzar's Dream, and the Time of the End. By Rev. J. B. Waddington. 6d. Clitheroe Tract Depôt, Lancashire. A large amount of information compressed into a small compass. The author calls upon Christians to look forward to, and be ready for, the second appearing of Christ, and he gives sound Scripture reasons for his solicitous appeal. Keeping clear of speculation, he unfolds many prophetic portions, generally from what is denominated the "historical" point of view.

The Big Wheel of the Church, and some hints on working it. By Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. 1d. T. Woolmer. Few writers have the gift of presenting important truths in the interesting form which characterises the many products of this charming author's pen, and this, his most recent treatise, is one which demands serious attention. Under the parable of a water-mill, which, if its big wheel be out of gear (though the minor portions of the machinery be in working order), is absolutely useless, he allures the reader to the consideration of the vital importance of prayer as the power which links church work to the great first cause of all blessing. His points are clear and forcible, and the booklet is one of great value and usefulness.

BELGIUM.—The work of the Belgian Evangelical Society progresses in a most encouraging manner in the province of Liège. It is constantly being discovered that the colporteur has prepared the way of the active evangelist. In spite of the threatenings of the priests, the Bible and Gospel tracts are read with pleasure by many people who remain in the Romish communion. Temperance work has become quite popular in some quarters, and the administration of the pledge affords an excellent occasion for speaking a word for God and his righteousness.

MR. SPURGEON ON MISSIONS.

In The Sword and the Trowel, Mr. Spurgeon makes various references to the current discussion of missionary methods. He says:—

"We are on the eve of a new departure in missions. Without breathing a complaint against the old, we shall welcome the new. The world has to be evangelised, and he that can show us how to do it, or even how not to do it, is our friend."

"The remarks made by Mr. Caine as to mission operations are not to be set aside because of minor errors in his statistics and other matters. He will have done good service to the great cause if the managers of the societies will take to heart whatever is right in his somewhat severe strictures. There can be no need to pull down what is already built up; but there might be additions to the edifice. Missionaries, with their families, should not be stinted; but a body of young men might be sent out, pledged to remain for, say, five years, and then permitted honourably to return. These could be supported in plenty at about £100 a year each, and would be a great addition to the forces in the field. He who points out a flaw or failure in any good work should not be howled at as an enemy, but utilised to the utmost as an aid to wiser procedure."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. Edward Noel Hodges, principal of Trinity College, Kandy, Ceylon, an experienced C.M.S. missionary, has been appointed to the bishopric of Travancore and Cochin, vacant by the retirement of Dr. J. M. Speechly several months since.

The following ladies and gentlemen have been accepted by the Church Missionary Society for work abroad:—Rev. Herbert Knott, curate of St. Simon's, Southsea; Rev. Donald J. McKenzie, curate of Christ Church, Derby; Miss Blanch Emily Bullock, daughter of Rev. C. Bullock, editor of Home Words, &c.; and Miss Ellen Dunkley, who offers for Sierra Leone, West Africa.

On Saturday week a new Mission-room in the parish of St. James's, Ashted, Birmingham, was opened by the Bishop of Worcester. The room will seat between three and four hundred persons, and is built in an outlying district of the parish, having a population of 5000. In the district which this Mission-room is intended to benefit there has been no Sunday-school or any place of worship. In future Sunday-school will be held, morning and afternoon, and at least one service each Sunday.

Dean Pigou is busy at Chichester, and his special services at the Cathedral are being very largely attended. There is scarcely a service during which the Lady Chapel is not crowded. Dr. Pigou conducts a special service for the children of the well-to-do classes resident in Chichester, at three on Saturday afternoons, and the services are so numerously attended that the Lady Chapel is found too small to accommodate all those who come to them. His Bible-class of young men already numbers about seventy members.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The English Presbyterian Foreign Mission Committee have engaged a new missionary (Mr. Duncan Ferguson) to reinforce the staff at Formosa.

Rev. John McNeill has agreed to open a Conference on the subject of "Open-air Services," to be held at Clapham-road Church (Dr. MacEwan's), under the auspices of the Evangelisation Committee of the London Presbyteries, on April 23. The Evangelisation Committee has under consideration the propriety and advantage of beginning and closing the season for open-air work by a meeting to be held on Sunday afternoon or evening in each of the London parks, or other large open spaces used for public resort in the Metropolis on Sundays.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Clement Clemance, D.D., has resigned the pastorate of the church at Camberwell Green, London, which he has held since 1875.

Rev. Charles New, of Robertson-street Church, Hastings, on Sunday week, referred to the crisis of the London Missionary Society, and said that he hoped the amount raised by his own congregation last year (£250) would increase to £400. He then preached an earnest missionary sermon, recounting some of the triumphs of the Gospel in heathen lands, and closed with a fervent appeal to all to realise their responsibility. Mr. New having concluded a week's special mission services, addressing in the evening those who had recently joined the church. The work of Robertson-street Church is in a most flourishing condition, nine preaching stations being conducted by members of the church, besides many other agencies.

SALVATION ARMY.

Mrs. Ballington-Booth has been pleading the cause of Army work among the cultured classes of New York.

On the 10th inst. General Booth's sixtieth birthday is to be celebrated by a special gathering at Clapton Congress Hall.

An Army officer in Barberton, Transvaal, reports some noted "trophies" of the work, especially a converted publican and jockey. The visitation of the prison is also said to be very successful.

METHODIST.

A men's Bible-class was formed at Birstal, Gomersal, a few weeks ago. The number of attendants is steadily increasing, and many who have hitherto not been attending any place of worship are being got hold of. Much good is being done in the village through the labours of Rev. G. Adcock.

The Wesleyans have opened in Paris a new salle at 20, Rue Clairant, Batignolles, in the midst of a dense population, and in connection with their missionary restaurant. The hall is one of the most commodious, and best fitted up of the many halls now open for mission services in Paris. Since the opening, a month ago, services have been held with very encouraging results.

At a lecture delivered at Wesley Chapel, Reading, the other day, the chair was taked by Major Liebenrood, who expressed the pleasure it afforded him to be able to show his sympathy with the Wesleyans. He was a "High Churchman," being a member of that Church whose names are written on high, and he had a warm heart for the brethren, of whatever denomination, who loved the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Herbert J. Mott, of Nebraska, writes:—"We want fifteen men and women to enter the field at once as preachers of the Gospel." He reports fifty-three additions to Friends' Church as the result of a four weeks' mission.

Many American Friends are anxious to change the name of the "Society of Friends" to the "Friends' Church." And The Christian Worker much prefers "Meeting for Sufferings," with all its historic meaning, to "Representative Meeting."

Isabella Young travels with certificate in Scotland. Howard Nicholson (late clerk of Canada Yearly Meeting) is much encouraged in his work in Bethnal Green; while Arthur E. Dixon's work spreads in Huntingdonshire and Cambridgeshire.

The Friend of Missions of the 1st inst. says:—"Within the last six weeks series of meetings have been held, in connection with Friends' Home Mission Committee, at Carlisle; Grayrigg, near Kendal; Byrom-street, Manchester; Rawdon and Yeadon; Southampton; Newport, Isle of Wight; Birmingham; Leeds; Peckham; Horsforth; Nailsworth, and Hereford."

Caroline N. Southall reports her safe arrival at Yangchaw, on her way to join R. and M. J. Davidson in Hangchung, China. Dr. G. M. Dobrashian gives cheering accounts of medical and Gospel work done in Constantinople. Mr. St. Dalmas pleads for more help, specially among the 340,000 Gonds adjoining Sohagpur, before their absorption into Hinduism. And William Wilson describes his Cottage Hospital, and other mission services in the Friends' wide district in Madagascar.

BAPTIST.

Dr. Alexander Maclaren, of Manchester, has received a hearty welcome on his return home from his tour to the Australian colonies.

The Baptist Missionary Society have accepted two new missionaries for the Congo—Messrs. Forfeitt and White, of Regent's-park College—who will probably leave for Africa at the end of April, accompanied by Messrs. Comber, Cameron, and Scrivener, and Mrs. Holman Bentley.

During last year the membership of Bloomsbury Chapel (pastor, Rev. James Baillie) increased from 714 to 774, eighty-three being converted. The Sunday-school numbers 111 teachers and 1133 scholars. In the pastor's annual address to his congregation, special reference is made to the good resulting from Messrs. Fullerton and Smith's recent visit.

The hostility towards the English and American missionaries in Chi-Nan-Fu, in Shantung, culminated towards the end of December in an attack on a member of the English Baptist Mission. A mob, urged on by the literati, entered the house of the missionary, Rev. Frank Harmon, dragged him out, trampled him under foot, pulled him round the courtyard, and locked him up. They re-entered the house, and either took away all his things or smashed them to pieces.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle has been densely crowded at the services every Sunday since Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's return home. The multitudes, says the pastor, are as eager as ever to hear "the old, old story"; and to many of them "faith cometh by hearing." Since his return, the pastor has been very busy seeing candidates for church fellowship. He was able to select, in three sittings, no less than fifty-five, who have been proposed for membership. Day after day he returns wearied with the gladsome work of gathering in the sheaves.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Mr. Scroggie is labouring this week at Kinning-park Free Church, Shields-road, Glasgow.

The British Weekly says it is likely that Rev. Dr. Pentecost will be called to the pastorate of Claremont United Presbyterian Church, Glasgow.

Rev. David Lowe, of London-road Free Church, Glasgow, formerly of John Knox Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, has just celebrated his ministerial semi-jubilee.

The Gospel work among the fleshers of the Moore-street Market, Glasgow, is being carried on with great vigour and good results, more especially among the younger men.

Principal Rainy, of Edinburgh, is going to Australia this summer as the representative of the Free Church of Scotland at the celebration of the jubilee of the Presbyterian Church there.

Rev. R. Lawson, of Maybole, has returned from his tour to India. He has visited many mission stations in various parts of our great Eastern Empire, and doubtless will have an interesting story to tell of his travels.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Evangelistic services, conducted by Rev. W. J. Christie in the Methodist Church, Blacklion, has been attended with much blessing.

The sum of £3000 go under the will of the late Dr. J. W. Swan, of Kingstown, to various charities connected with the Irish Episcopal Church.

The Mountpottinger Y.M.C.A. has had a successful year, and between members and associates there are now 323 persons connected with the Society.

A stimulating and helpful series of services for the deepening of the spiritual life has been conducted by Rev. J. O. Park, of Tralee, in the Methodist Church, Killarney.

Rev. R. Crawford Johnson, Methodist evangelist, closed on Sunday evening last fifteen days' Gospel services, which were instrumental in the awakening and conversion of many in Portadown, co. Armagh.

The Dublin White Cross (Social Purity) Association, has been instrumental during the past year in preventing much social crime, in saving several young girls, and in getting some houses of questionable character closed.

The committee of the Kingstown Y.M.C.A. have secured the Corrig-avenue Assembly Rooms, containing a hall, capable of seating over 300 people, for meetings, lectures, &c., while other suitable offices, &c., adjoin this building.

The "Forward Movement" is exerting its influence on Methodism in Cork. A splendid hall has been built in the centre of the city, and already 300 young men have enrolled themselves as an association. Arrangements are being made for carrying on all kinds of social and evangelistic work.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. R. B. Maurice Bonnor, ex-Dean of St. Asaph, Wales.—Rev. H. W. Sheppard, for forty-five years rector of Emsworth, Hants.—Mr. George Rawson, of Clifton, a well-known hymnologist, and one of the compilers of "Psalms and Hymns."—Mr. Henry Atherton, of Southport, a wealthy cotton merchant, and a prominent layman of the Methodist New Connexion.—Rev. Isaac Stubbins, of Leicester, from 1837 to 1865 a General Baptist missionary in Orissa, India.—Rev. Wm. Adley, rector of Rudbaxton, near Haverfordwest, since 1857, previous to which he was a C.M.S. missionary in Ceylon.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.—Dr. F. A. Pring, who has resigned the superintendence of this Mission, was lately presented with a testimonial by patients among the poor of St. Giles's, in grateful remembrance of his many acts of kindness to them. Dr. Pring has been connected with the Mission for the past eight years, during four and a half of which the institution has been under his superintendence. The Deptford Medical Mission, High-street, Deptford, is to be the scene of his labours, and we trust that every blessing may rest on his future work.

UNITED PRAYER AT BRIGHTON.—On Wednesday evening, March 27, the Congregational churches of Brighton, and their pastors, met for prayer, and on the following evening there was a united communion service. The united prayer-meeting in the Institute connected with Clifton road Congregational Church on Tuesday afternoons at three o'clock has become so large that adjournment has become necessary to the commodious hall of the Institute, and that is filled by Christians belonging to all denominations, and much good is being done. Testimony is being borne by many to blessing received.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, APRIL 7.—Exodus XXXI.

The equipment of the two artists for their work stands first in this chapter. When we follow God's pattern, we may always count on the requisite workers and gifts being provided. It was the same Holy Spirit that rested on Moses which wrought in these men. The Spirit which filled the Apostles, and made them such powerful witnesses of the resurrection (Acts iv. 31) filled these two, and made them able to devise and to execute (1 Cor. xii. 4, 5, 6). It was in each case the same Holy Spirit of God. Why should we not seek his aid to fit us for doing our daily work? And why should we not view as sacred all toils, in connection with which we may claim and count upon his presence.

The observance of the Sabbath was again appointed.—This law had been given more than once (xvi. 23; xx. 8, 9, xxiii. 12). However great might be the pressure of preparing the Tabernacle, it was not to interfere with the Sabbath rest. Our work for God must not break our rest in God. It was a sign (vv. 13, 17; Ezek. xx. 12, 20). The equivalent of the Sabbath in our time is not only the Lord's Day, but more especially the rest of faith. And there is no such sign of a soul being right with God, as when it is able to cast all its sins and sorrows, its cares and troubles on the Lord. We should keep a perpetual Sabbath in the heart (Neh. xiii. 19).

The tables of the law were written on stone, to denote their lasting obligation. God wrote them once on stone; but in our case He gives a heart of flesh, before He writes there with his own finger his holy will (2 Cor. iii. 3). They were entrusted to Moses, a fact referred to afterwards in contrast to the work of our Lord (John i. 1—7).

MONDAY, APRIL 8.—Exodus XXXII.

A notable chapter! We are taught the nature of idolatry, which craves some outward symbol of the unseen. This episode was not a violation of the first, but of the second commandment. It is always dangerous to associate our worship of God with a material emblem, for in time men invest the emblem with the properties of God Himself. People are willing enough to part with ornaments in the service of an idol, why are we so slow in giving up all for the love of Christ, grudging no expenditure, and counting no cost too great? The people's worship was, no doubt, associated with some of the obscene practices, to which they had become accustomed during their stay in Egypt.

Moses' intercession.—God announced the people's sin to Moses in such a manner as to establish two things; first, the noble character of Moses stood out very conspicuously in great relief; secondly, there were given grave grounds of alarm that Israel might yet miss the privileges that seemed so sure. God is not changeable (Jas. i. 17), but He treats men differently, as they alter their attitude to Him. The change is not in Him, but in them; and He acts as one might do who had literally changed his mind. This intercession (see also 32) reminds us of the Apostle and the Saviour (Rom. ix. 9; Luke xxiii. 34).

The result was terrible. The broken tables betokened the inability of man to keep the law of God. The excuse of Aaron was childish (24), and put him in great danger (Deut. ix. 20). Many fell by the sword, and the plague (28 and 35). The rallying of the Levites at this critical moment was never forgotten, and lay the foundation of their selection for the priesthood (Deut. xxxiii. 9, and Mal. ii. 5). The presence of Christ was to be exchanged for that of a created angel, but Moses obtained a revocation of this threatening (xxxiii. 14—17).

TUESDAY, APRIL 9.—Exodus XXXIII.

When the tidings that God's personal Presence was to be taken from the camp reached them, the people were filled with dismay, and they divested themselves of their ornaments. It was needful that God should deal with them in this way, that they might, through symbols, learn to understand what sin was, and how it grieved Him, and how certainly it would ruin all their prospects. The pitching of the Tabernacle outside the camp was a significant sign of the inability of God to remain amid so much evil. It was in all likelihood a temporary structure, which had served for purposes of worship since the exodus.

Moses' intimacy with God.—"Face to face" (11) expresses vividly the intimacy of that converse which in some sense is still possible (2 Cor. iii. 18). What a noble prayer for us all (13). Surely the great end of life is to serve God in his way. He asked two things, one for the people, that the Divine Presence should go with them, the other for himself, that he might see the Divine glory. The first of these received a complete and immediate answer (14). Wherever God's Presence goes there is rest, and if He is with thee ever thou shalt drink of waters of rest (Matt. xii. 28). It is when the holy heart is in abiding fellowship with God that it can have its way (John xv. 7).

The Rock (21) is a type of Christ, the Rock of Ages cleft for us. It is in the clefts of that Rock where his saints hide (Sol. Song ii. 14). We can only know and enjoy God when we are standing in the very shadows of God's Rock. Yet when we know the most of God, it is only, so to speak, his back parts. How little we know of Him at the best (Job xi. 7).

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10.—Exodus XXXIV.

God had been reconciled to Israel, stripped of their jewels (xxxiii. 6) through the mediation of Moses, and the broken covenant must be restored, but the material in this case was to be provided by Moses himself; but God wrote the holy words. Would that He would do as much for us (Heb. viii. 10).

Moses' vision of God.—The name of God is his character. In olden days names betrayed some prominent feature in the natures of the bearers. To know the name was to know the person (Gen. xxxii. 29). What a list of lovely titles (6 and 7). "Will by no means clear" is rendered by some, "I will not utterly destroy" (Jer. xxv. 29). Iniquity was not visited on the children beyond the third and fourth generation—i.e., the great law of heredity was curtailed in its action. Amid all the rapture of that moment Moses was true to the people, and with rare self-oblivion began to plead again for Israel (9).

The renewed covenant (10, &c.).—It was a marriage covenant (Jer. xxxi. 32); idolatry was therefore adultery. They were, therefore, bidden to destroy all traces of idolatry, reject all treaties of alliance in marriage, and refuse all invitations to idolatrous feasts. How jealous is God of his people's love, and how careful should we be to give Him all our love (Jas. iv. 4). The three feasts were recapitulated. Passover; Feast of Weeks, i.e., Pentecost, seven weeks after Passover; Feast of Ingathering, or of Tabernacles. God will always take care of our interests, if we do not flinch from obedience to Him (24; Matt. vi. 33). The seething the kid probably alludes to some idolatrous practice.

Moses' vail.—Communion with God did literally for him what it does spiritually for us. The light was different to Christ's, in being from without, while Christ's was from within (Matt. xvii. 2). True holiness is unconscious of its beauty (29). The vail taught the obscurity of that dispensation, which is now done away (2 Cor. iii. 13). But we all... (2 Cor. iii. 18).

THURSDAY, APRIL 11.—Exodus XXXV.

The Sabbath was again enjoined with peculiar solemnity. We are obviously not bound by these strict injunctions (3), but there are spiritual obligations quite as searching and minute.

Israel's free-will gifts teach us a great lesson. Its willingness is repeatedly noticed (5, 21, 22, 29). Different gifts all found specific and sufficient scope. The rich gave of their wealth, the skilful of their handicraft (10), and the women found appropriate spheres (1 Pet. iv. 10). So in the building up of God's Church, in which He is to make his abode, it becomes every child of his to contribute something, either wealth, or service, or skill (1 Cor. vii. 7). And that which beautified and elevated the whole was the repeated thought that it was to the Lord. One powerful motive for this outburst of liberality was the memory of recent forgiveness. There is nothing that so constrains generosity as gratitude (2 Cor. v. 14). We do not hear of any murmuring during this busy time; one of the best preservatives against which is to be all at it, and always at it.

The two artists were now specially called to their work.—When God summons his servants to special work He endows them with special gifts. The wisdom to devise and the power to work are alike from Him; and of all such precious talents we must give account as to their faithful use. Even the power to teach is here expressly ascribed to the Spirit of God (34). We do not depend enough on the Spirit of God to find and prepare workers for his great work in the world. But all is of Him, and He is the Great Worker in the Church (1 Cor. iii. 7—9). How much better it is to construct than to destroy: to build up is God-like; to pull down is the devil's work. Let each find the sphere in which He can do the best service, and keep to it, envying none, interfering with none (Mark xiii. 34).

FRIDAY, APRIL 12.—Exodus XXXVI.

Then.—There was no needless delay. From the moment that the Divine will and pattern were made known till the final completion of the sacred edifice, the workers laboured with untiring energy and devotion. The heart-stirring and the liberal gifts seem to have come together (2). We are reminded of the zeal and speed with which the people laboured in after years in the erection of the Temple (Neh. iv. 6).

The morning gifts.—Like other Oriental magistrates, Moses sat on the seat of justice every morning, and it was then that the people came to him with their gifts, and surely it was much better for them to come on such errands than for purposes of litigiousness. It might be that during the night some of them finished a self-imposed task, others were prompted by meditation during the night-watches. Piety, penitence, and gratitude would contribute the impulses that led them to the place where Moses sat. Would it not be well if we came each morning to God, not only to receive from Him, but to give to Him, the offerings of our love, and praise, and service (Phil. iv. 18; 1 Cor. vi. 20)?

The restraints put on the people's gifts were very unusual (6), and have rarely needed repetition. In general, men need to be pressed to give more than they have given. May we not be rebuked by this outburst from a nation of emancipated slaves? The men who did the work were evidently men of strict integrity, or they might have kept the overplus as payment or perquisites; they set an example to many professing Christians.

The scrupulous care with which each of God's commands about the Tabernacle was carried into effect is very instructive; and this elaborate enumeration, when so many things are left unmentioned, shows how important was the religious education of the people.

SATURDAY, APRIL 13.—Exodus XXXVII.

The description here given of the furniture within the sacred edifice is almost identical with ch. xxv. It is not, however, useless; it emphasises the minute and scrupulous care with which God's commands were carried into effect, and with which He expects to be obeyed. There is nothing too trifling or insignificant for our obedience in his code.

The skill shown in this work was admirable. It was not a small matter to beat out with the hammer from a solid piece of gold figures measuring from two to three feet in their outstretched wings. It would be a triumph in the art of the present day. How much more so then (vii. 17). Why do such work with the hammer, when it would have been so much easier to cast it—a process with which Israel was familiar? Doubtless there was a sufficient reason, and one perhaps connected with the sufferings and patience of our Lord, from whose nature, as from gold molten in a furnace, there has been beaten out, by the ponderous hammer of suffering, those marvellous qualifications to help and save us.

Let us remind ourselves of our sacred duties and relationships. The mercy-seat bids us hold fellowship with God on the ground of the sprinkled blood. The altar of incense prompts us to praise and prayer. The candlestick demands of us to shine as lights in the world. The table of shew-bread signifies our urgent need to feed daily on Christ, eating his flesh, and drinking his blood. The many preparations for moving the Tabernacle remind us that here we have no continuing city, but are pilgrims and strangers seeking one to come (Heb. xi. 13; 1 Pet. ii. 11).

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for April 10 (Ezek. xxxvi. 26):—"A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh."

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, April 14.

The Rejected Son.

Mark xii. 1—12. Golden Text: John i. 11.

Ver. 1: "He began to speak by parables."—Not for the first time. When the Galileans were rejecting Him He adopted this method of teaching, and for the same twofold reason He adopts it now towards the rulers in Jerusalem (Mark iv. 2, 11, 12). It will warn those who are willing to be warned. It was like a mirror in which they saw themselves reflected in the husbandmen, and were constrained to pronounce their own condemnation (Matt. xxi. 40, 41). To persist in their rejection and crucifixion of the Saviour after such a warning was guilty in the very last degree.

The primary application is, of course, to the Jewish nation and their rulers, but it is not less applicable to us. The points of the lesson are: the people's unexampled privileges, their heinous guilt, and their certain doom.

(1) The people's unexampled privileges.—The parable is evidently intended to set them forth, for their privileges determine the measure of their guilt. Note how much ver. 1 suggests. They were like "A vineyard"—not a wilderness from which no vintage might be expected. "A vineyard planted"—"with the choicest vine" (Isa. v. 2); planted by God (Ps. lxxx. 8). "Hedge"—it was fenced or walled to separate it from the surrounding country, and to protect it from ravages of wild beasts (Ps. lxxx. 13). "Winepress"—a kind of trough, often excavated out of rock, into which the pressed juice of the grape flowed from another trough above it. "Tower"—for the watchman. All these particulars emphasise the thought that nothing was wanting in order to its fruitfulness. This was entrusted to "husbandmen"—the rulers of the Jewish nation, to whom God looked for the fruit. No nation at that time was so highly privileged, therefore God expected from none so much as He had reason to expect from Israel. Responsibility is measured by privilege. Are not our privileges even greater? (Isa. v. 4). Has He not reason to ask for our trust, and love, and obedience? He is the very opposite to the description of the slothful servant (Luke xix. 21—23).

He neither expects to reap where He has not sown, nor to reap before the time.

"At the season" (2).—His patience in waiting is as great as his power in bestowing.

(2) Their heinous guilt (3—8).—Side by side with the record of their base and cruel conduct, these verses declare God's great forbearance and long-suffering, which considerably aggravate their guilt. Their ill-treatment of the first servant was answered, not by revenge, but by the sending of other messengers; until He had sent "many others" (5), and all had been cruelly and shamefully treated. Nor did He send servants alone, but his "one Son, his well beloved" (6). Note how clearly Jesus distinguishes Himself from the other servants in the parable. And He recognises, too, that the people knew who He was, hence the expectation, "They will reverence my Son." They knew Him as distinct from the rest. His works had borne witness of Him (John v. 36); his words were equally clear (John x. 30, 33). But who can measure the grace revealed in sending the Son, after his servants had been so shamefully treated? (John iii. 16). This love it is which so aggravates the people's guilt. It is possible to sin more grievously "in these last days" than ever before (Heb. i. 2, ii. 1—4). To reject the servants was bad; but to reject the "only and well beloved Son" is much worse.

With this Divine longsuffering contrast the people's conduct. For Old Testament illustrations of their treatment of God's servants, see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16; Jer. xx. 1, 2, xxvi. 11; Acts vii. 52; Heb. xi. 36.

But their guilt reached its climax in their treatment of the Son. Among those to whom Jesus spake were some who had already determined to treat Him as the husbandmen treated the heir (see John xi. 53). "Cast out and killed" (8). Such is the order in Matt. xxi. 39. See also Heb. xiii. 11, 12. Such conduct was as foolish as it was guilty. What a vain hope to cherish—"the inheritance shall be ours!" "Did they presume that their Lord would be tolerant for ever?"—Morison. The folly of rejecting Christ is as great as its guilt. Can such an insult to God's love and grace go unpunished?

(3) Their certain doom (9—12).—According to Matthew, the people themselves pronounce their own doom. In the awful destruction of Jerusalem, and the scattering of the nation, this doom was executed upon the Jews. To the Gentiles the privileges were then given, not that they should boast over the Jews (see Rom. xi. 18—22): "Be not highminded, but fear." We fail to learn the lesson of the parable unless the doom of the Israelites is made a warning to us. A further fulfilment of this threatened doom will be at the Lord's second appearing (2 Thess. i. 8, 9).

In applying the parable, Jesus quotes from Ps. cxviii., from which the people had taken the songs with which they greeted Him a few days before (Mark xi. 9; Ps. cxviii. 26). The rejected stone becomes the head stone of the corner, and this, though accomplished through the guilt of the people, was yet "the Lord's doing" (Acts ii. 23, iv. 11, 28).

Gospel Incidents.

The following very interesting "cases" in connection with Major Whittle's recent mission in Edinburgh have been sent to us by our correspondent, Dr. Moxey:—

"HAVE YOU LOST JESUS?"

A woman I spoke to told me of a circumstance that was narrated to her by a Christian neighbour respecting herself, which had been helpful in bringing her, as a believer, to an assurance of her salvation. She had gone to an evangelistic service, where some such verse as John iii. 16 had brought her into light and peace. When she got home her little boy noticed her happy face, and asked the reason of it. "I have found Jesus, my dear boy," she exclaimed. "I am saved by his precious blood." "How do you know?" asked the little fellow. "Listen," she said, and she read the verses to him that had brought the joyful assurance.

Next morning Satan raised his favourite question of "feelings," and she came down to breakfast with the old miserable expression that her son had been so long accustomed to. "What's wrong now, mother?" questioned the boy. "Everything's wrong, dear; I have made a terrible mistake, I fear." "Have you lost Jesus, mother?" She did not like to say she had. "Has the verse changed then?" continued the boy; "it seems as if it had. Stop, I'll go and see," and away ran the dear lad, to return triumphantly with his Bible. "No, mother, it's not changed; it's just the same every word as last night," and he read aloud the blessed message. Said the mother to my friend, "That was many years ago, but my dear boy's faith rebuked my unbelief. I then and there believed God's bare word, feel or no feel, because it was his word, and I am just resting my soul there now." The story was greatly blessed to my friend, whose spiritual life up to that time had been anything but a satisfactory one.

TAKEN FROM THE GUTTER.

Behind the speaker, a poor waif, drifting down helpless and hopeless to an undone eternity, was sitting in his rags and dirt. A humble Christian man had come across him in the morning. Moved with compassion he had laid a kind hand on his shoulder, and said, "God bless you, my friend." The man would have got away, but a shilling was offered to buy a comfortable meal, and get him shelter. The poor fellow was grateful, and, when asked to meet his new friend that evening at the Circus, promised to do so. The Christian was there on the outlook for him at the door, and at last espied him crouching under his load of self-abasement in a doorway, a little distance off. He was ashamed to be seen in the company of respectably dressed men, but his friend and two others cheered and encouraged him, and led him to the entrance. At the door a policeman said, "That man can't go in dressed like that; he's not decent; I have refused him already." "It is all right, friend," said the Christian worker; "he is my brother and yours, and the Lord Jesus Christ loves to save such as he." In the after-meeting, the poor fellow gave his heart to Jesus. Since then, clothing, food, and work have been found for him by this plain working man. His wife and family, who had left him, have been written to and told the glorious news. He had come down step by step to the very gutter, from a good income and social position. We ask prayer for him, that he may be preserved from the drink that may still be a temptation.

AN INCONSISTENT DOUBTER.

I spoke to a young man who, I was told, was not sure that there was a God at all; and, even if there were, he could not know that Jesus Christ was his Son. In spite of this statement, I witnessed the contradictory fact that he was sitting in an after-meeting, and allowing himself to be spoken to. So, after a few friendly sentences, I said, "Anyhow, friend, you would like to be saved, wouldn't you?" "Oh, yes!" said the dear fellow, quite oblivious of the inconsistency. "And if you are going to be a Christian at all, you would like to be a real one, wouldn't you?" "Certainly," was the answer, and it was evidently meant. "Let us pray," said I, and he willingly joined. I asked the Lord to reveal Himself to his soul now, and then I inquired if he was willing to be saved in God's way. He was. I showed him John vi. 37, and over that blessed verse, that brought the light of life into my own soul, the young man, I believe, stepped into the kingdom of heaven.

A CONSTABLE ENROLLED.

The writer was asked to speak to a policeman, a professed infidel, who had been with difficulty persuaded to come to the large meeting, and with even more trouble had been got into the men's after-meeting. I found him sitting with a Christian brother-constable by his side watching for his soul. I sat down, and, unnoticed by him, observed the effect of the many testimonies of emancipated souls, and then the searching of his conscience by the words as to secret sins so faithfully spoken by Mr. Charles Whittle. I went up to him and found, instead of infidel objections, a broken spirit and a contrite heart. "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" was asked. "Yes." "Do you believe that God raised Him from the dead, and that He is a living Saviour, present now?" "Yes." "Are you willing to break with the devil, and serve Christ instead as your new Lord and Master?" "I am." "Are you willing to confess it?" "How?" "Now, in prayer." "I am." "First," I said, "let me show you from God's Word that this is all God requires for salvation, and that in doing it you are saved." I then turned to Rom. x. 9 in the Revised Version, and read: "If thou wilt confess with thy mouth Jesus is Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." He humbly made the confession, and thankfully accepted God's assurance as to the result.

NORTH CAMP SOLDIERS' HOME, ALDERSHOT.—Dr. Wade, of Hoxton Hall Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Union, has conducted a very successful mission here. The evils of drinking were powerfully set forth, and Christ was proclaimed as the deliverer from all sin. Sixty pledges were taken, and the meetings will long be remembered for their blessed influence. It is proposed to hold a tent mission during May, June, and July. Contributions towards the incidental expenses will be thankfully received by Mr. John Poate, Sherbourne-road, Farnborough, Hants.

COREA.—Rev. H. G. Underwood, Seoul, Corea, writes to us on January 22:—We look back over the year as the most promising time that Christianity has seen in the land. The native church is to-day five-fold stronger, and the outlook is brighter than we could ever have hoped for. Last year, during our native week of prayer, the total number of baptized converts was about twenty; to-day there are over a hundred; and when this year we again spend a week in prayer at the throne of grace we expect with God's help to obtain even a greater blessing. The work among the women is going along very nicely. On all sides there are open doors for work, but few to do it. A good work has been started among boys.

SPECULATION, once the exception, is now the essence and the rule of financial dealings; syndicates and corners increase in number and in power every day, and purchase every day more openly the good word of those who would oppose them. The "squaring" of officials, of pressmen, of influential dealers, of experts, of everyone who can put a spoke in the wheel of speculation, has attained almost to the limits of an exact science. A most influential man of business told the present writer only a few days ago that in all his experience he had seen nothing like "the gold hunger," as he called it, of the past few weeks, and described the attempts at bribery, of which he was cognisant, as absolutely astounding.—Universal Review.

"The 'Letters' contained in this book are from the uttermost parts of the earth; and they come straight from the heart that is earnestly seeking to witness for Jesus Christ. The reception that they met with on their first appearance has led to their being thus reprinted. They make no pretensions to literary merit, being written in the simple, familiar style that one would naturally use to one's home-people. Millions are perishing to-day in that vast land of China, simply for the want of common bread to eat. Bnt oh, what countless millions have perished throughout the length and breadth of the great Empire of the East, day by day ever since Jesus Christ bade His people go and carry the 'bread of life' to the uttermost part of the earth."

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

REV. H. C. STUNTZ, pastor of Grant-road Methodist Episcopal Church, Bombay, has been appointed to succeed the late Dr. F. L. McCoy, as editor of The Indian Witness. Mr. Stuntz wields the pen of a ready writer, and edited The Bombay Guardian from Mr. Bowen's death till its transfer to its present owners.

SLAVERY IN ECUADOR.—A French missionary, who has been travelling through Ecuador, has made inquiries into the condition of the Indians, and reports that although they are nominally free, they are in reality in a state of slavery. The greater part of the Indians of the interior are reduced to this condition, and live a life of the utmost degradation and misery.

FUH-KIEN is a large province of China. The centres of mission work on the coast of the province are, in the north, Foochow, and in the south, Amoy and Swatow. For the last forty years work has been carried on under the direction of several societies at these places and inland. Dublin University last year sent out a representative to work in connection with the Church Missionary Society, and hope shortly to send another man to the same work. The need of labourers is very manifest.

JAPANESE IN THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The American Methodist Episcopal Church is doing a splendid work among the Japanese in the Hawaiian islands, and a rich harvest of souls is being gathered in. Since his arrival last spring Rev. K. Miyama has baptized about ninety new converts, including the Japanese Consul and his entire household. Nearly thirty of these are on other islands. Drunkenness has nearly ceased among the Japanese of Honolulu. Mr. Miyama has at present only one trained helper in Honolulu, one in Hawaii, and one in Kanai. This small force has to meet the demand for the evangelisation of upwards of 7000 Japanese.

REV. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM arrived on Saturday from Paris, Rome, and Naples, where he has been preaching the Gospel, and giving Bible lessons. He preached on Sunday in the East-end Tabernacle to the usual crowded congregations, and gave his final address on Monday noon at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. Alluding to his travels, he spoke of the painful spiritual isolation of Christian workers in the great cities of the continent. In many places he saw much that was very repellent, and could not help feeling keenly for those who pass their whole lives in such circumstances. He promised those he came across that he would ask for the prayers of the noon meeting on their behalf. The weary workers were earnestly remembered before God. Mr. Needham sailed for New York on Wednesday by the s.s. Britannic.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

A Vindication of Pure and Primitive CHRISTIANITY; and an Exposure of the Corruptions of ROMANISM; Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the EARLY CHRISTIANS at ROME.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S.,
Chamberlain of the City of London.

WITH MANY ILLUSTRATIONS.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition:

Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From DR. ABBOTT, Head Master of the City of London School:—

"I heartily agree with you that the tendency toward Romanism and Sacerdotalism denotes a misappreciation of the fundamental truths of Christianity; and any one who can do anything to lead people back to those simple spiritual truths is doing a good work for mankind."

From the DEAN OF ACHONRY:—

"'THE CATACOMBS AT ROME' is one of the most useful books I know, as showing the purity and simplicity of the early Church at Rome, and exposing the spurious Christianity of the modern Church of Rome, and the corruptions and incrustations by which she has hidden or destroyed the pure faith of the New Testament."

"The excellent Chamberlain of the City of London has given in these pages a clear and accurate account of the interesting remains of early Christianity in the Catacombs of Rome. Many of the pictures depict harrowing scenes of idolatrous cruelty; and others show the inscriptions on the walls of these underground sepulchres. All through the book is a desire manifested to vindicate the purity of the Christianity of those times, compared with the corruptions of Rome."—The Bookseller, Feb., 1889.

"Mr. SCOTT'S object in this work is to derive from the CATACOMBS 'a vindication of pure and primitive Christianity, and an exposure of the corruptions of Romanism.' He has attained a high degree of success, and produced a valuable and standard work. We rejoice in its continued circulation. It is remarkably cheap."

Baptist Magazine, March, 1889.

"A careful and interested perusal of these pages enables us to pronounce the volume as worthy of a place in every library; and it should command a very large circle of readers. It would be serviceable in the library of the Sunday-school, and find a hearty welcome in all our Book Societies. We desire for this beautiful volume a large circulation."—Baptist Messenger, March, 1889.

"A new edition of a deservedly popular work. It contains a very interesting description of the CATACOMBS: but a great deal beside—Chapters on Paganism, Primitive Christianity, and Romanism. Preachers will find many good 'illustrations' here."

Local Preacher's Treasury, March, 1889.

"We note with pleasure that a fourth edition of this interesting and instructive book has been called for. Little wonder, however, that these Lectures, wherein the story of Rome pagan, Rome Christian, and Rome apostate—as revealed in the CATACOMBS—is so admirably told, should have won a wide welcome. Even apart from its evidential value, the book possesses great antiquarian and historical interest."—Word and Work, Feb. 8, 1889.

"A wonderfully interesting book on a theme of great importance in reference to the Faith and Hope of the Primitive Christians. The author devotes two chapters to Paganism; one to the origin of Christianity; two to the Catacombs (or sleeping places of the early Christians); and the two closing chapters to Romanism. The part devoted to the CATACOMBS is the most interesting, and gives numerous cuts representing the Figures and the Inscriptions found therein. It should find a place in every Sunday-school library."

Methodist New Connexion Magazine, March, 1889.

"A powerful vindication of pure and primitive Christianity. The value of the book is enhanced by a great number of fine Illustrations The public have given this book a very hearty reception, as it has now reached its fourth edition. May it reach a thousand more editions! Mr. SCOTT has done his work well. This book will well repay a careful perusal. Mr. SCOTT has something to tell, and he tells it in a most fascinating manner."

Irish Congregational Magazine, March, 1889.

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE AT BRIDLINGTON.

Miss Eliza Milson, of North Pack-lane, Bridlington, Dressmaker (on the recommendation of another patient, and having seen an account of my treatment in a weekly journal), applied to me first about eighteen months ago.

"Family consumptive; had taken a severe cold four months before, followed by cough which had gradually become much worse, with yellow expectoration, mingled with blood; loss of appetite, palpitations. Declining strength, and loss of flesh ensued." At this time a physician declared her right lung affected.

I sent her medicine and letters of advice at intervals.

In July last she writes me:—"It is with feelings of deep gratitude I add my testimony to the value of your treatment. It has been the means in God's hands of restoring me to health. I had no hope of getting better when I first wrote you."

I heard again from her in Nov. last. Writing on behalf of another patient, she says:—"I have great faith in your medicine. I know what it has done for me. I am glad to say I continue quite well."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

The Living Word and the Written Word.

Cloth Boards, 3s.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

CHEAP EDITION: Paper covers, 1s.; Cloth, neat, 1s. 6d.

"We thank God with a full heart for this fresh, powerful, living utterance of great—and some of them forgotten—truths, which commend themselves to one's mind as the Spirit-guided expressions of the convictions of a Christ-filled soul."
British Herald.

"It is a book emphatically of the living Christ, a claim that the Bible is only a book of power as the living Christ is in it. To all disciples of Jesus this work commends itself at once by its grasp of truth, its insight, its profound simplicity, the life which is in it, and its spiritual force."
Christian Work.

"The book is full of thought, and palpitates with life. It is the work of a Christian, a scholar, and a man of genius; while none have ever brought to the theme a larger measure of love and reverence. It is not only admirably adapted for the mature and thoughtful, but is also peculiarly fitted to give a right direction to the thoughts and lives of young, earnest, and inquiring persons."
Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

"A book marked by freshness of thought along with firm adherence to old truths, indicating a mind awake to the great vital questions of the present day, and viewing these with a most intelligent eye from the standpoint of established faith. It is very suggestive."—British Messenger.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

TEN Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year over 7,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 20,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary; or Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the Editors of "The Christian."

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Mr. John Bright.

What promises to be a substantial contribution to the discussion of foreign missionary methods is commenced in last week's Methodist Times. The main contention in the series of articles will be that the educational policy initiated in India by Dr. Duff, and continued by his successors, has proved an egregious mistake; and that there must be a return to the simpler and more direct evangelistic methods of the primitive Church. We shall follow with much interest the unfolding of the "new [and yet old] missionary policy" in the columns of our contemporary.

During the months of May and June Mr. J. B. Wookey will be open to address drawing-room meetings on behalf of the work of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. In these institutions there are now over three thousand children being cared for, so that Mr. Wookey will have abundance of material wherewith to interest those who may gather to hear him. We hope many drawing-rooms in and around London will be placed at his disposal; he may be communicated with at 18, Stepney-causeway, E.

The Spectator recently had a paper upon the gambling mania, which the writer somewhat aptly designated "the drunkenness of speculation." The fever of gain is spreading through all classes of the community, and that which in one direction takes the form of speculation on the Stock Exchange in another becomes betting. Making haste to be rich is the attitude of thousands of persons who literally lack nothing, and the wealthy, affected by the same covetous spirit, are forming syndicates, which, now that they have begun to seize upon articles of daily food and use, will soon have to be restrained by law. In the midst of this condition of things, it becomes the Christian now more than ever to remember the words of Christ, that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," and to bear in mind the parable with which Jesus illustrated that Divine utterance.

A most painful illustration of "The Devil's Mission of Amusement" has just been given in connection with a Primitive Methodist Church in Northampton, in the form of a "Wild West Bazaar." Buffalo Bill, Mexican Joe, Buck Taylor, Red Shirt, and numerous Mexican Cowboys were all represented, presumably by persons connected with the church. Others impersonated Red Indians, not excluding war paint and feathers; while settlers' wives and prairie girls were represented by young ladies attired in bright fancy costumes. The entertainments included a performance of "Courting Under Difficulties," comic songs, and an effigy of Rd. Pigott. This, to us, is humiliating and pitiful; and our contemporary The Baptist did well in calling public attention to it. But a letter, written by the minister of the church, and published in the same paper, is still more extraordinary, "Devout men" told the minister "that it had been as good to them as a prayer-meeting." This statement is more saddening than the bazaar itself. We deplore the condition of a church in which such an expedient for raising money could be adopted; but still more deplorable is it that men, whom the minister deems "devout," should put such folly on an equality with a prayer-meeting. It is an indication of the success with which the devil has conducted his mission among the churches; and is calculated to injure the cause of Christ most seriously.

The truth about Monte Carlo must be sought out by every candid man for himself. The Daily News of Friday last inserts a communication from a medical doctor, who lives there part of the year, and who contradicts some of the statements made about the place. On the other hand the chaplain at Mentone, who has watched Monte Carlo for eighteen years (without going into statistics of suicides), declares in the current Nineteenth Century that a veiled immorality exists, and a laxity between the sexes which would be thought scandalous among many of the demi-monde of Paris; that the fascinations of the music are the price of blood; that lads and girls of eighteen play without hindrance; that homes in the neighbouring parts of the Riviera are infected by the contagion, and with families in England are impoverished and ruined; and protests against giving respectability to the place by establishing an English chaplaincy.

But while we ought to know all this, "Physician, heal thyself" ought also to be sounded in our ears. If half of what Mr. Runciman says in the April Contemporary Review is true, it should arouse the nation. The writer of the article is no purist on matters of the turf. He says too much in praise of horseracing; and, at the same time, after full knowledge of facts, declares that the betting now engendered by the turf is, among the lower middle class, a raging disease which is bringing out every symptom of national decadence. The country swarms with clubs, where betting goes on day and night; dupes are sinking to ruin; bookmakers grow rich on the demoralisation they occasion; notions of right and wrong are confused; faith banished, honesty unknown; to gain money without working is the passion; and the talk of the gamblers when it is not about betting passes into depths below foulness. There are fifteen pages of such revelations of turf ethics, and if the patrons of it are not moved by them we might despair of England.

A truly admirable movement has been set on foot for throwing some sunshine into the dreary lot of the aged paupers who find a last and sorry refuge in our workhouses. Committees of ladies, having secured a few pounds for the purchase of materials, and having obtained the sanction of the parish authorities, set about teaching the unemployed paupers such light occupations as knitting, netting, carving, fretwork, &c. The scheme, though only in force in a few institutions, has already proved itself to be self-supporting, and it is capable of indefinite extension. Ladies whose time hangs heavy on their hands, and who are willing to help their poor neighbours, should communicate with the Hon. Secretary of the "Brabazon Pauper Employment Scheme" (as it is called), 83, Lancaster-gate, London, W. The Countess of Meath described the plan in last week's Queen.

It is not easy to exaggerate the condition of the poor in our large towns. It has fittingly formed the subject of debate in the House of Commons; five and a half millions of people in the United Kingdom in a state of poverty, as has been stated, ought to have led to a more satisfactory result. Many of our legislators know well that the drink question lies at the bottom of three-fourths of this misery, and yet Liberal and Conservative Governments alike have for years evaded any thorough attempt to grapple with it. We are glad to observe that the President of the Local Government Board has given notice of a motion relating to emigration.

Mr. H. M. Stanley's forest march has moved England, as heroism always does. It was a feat of exploration scarcely ever equalled. Pleasant also has it been to learn the great traveller's concern for, and enumeration of, his dead and missing men. But what about the multitude of natives shot down and villages laid in ruins? The large amount of spent-ammunition recorded suggests a terrible story, and must seriously block the way to missionary efforts of white men. Has the result of the expedition been worth this awful cost? We are sorry to suggest these reflections, but humanity demands that they should not be overlooked.

In relation to "Pleasant Sunday Afternoons for the People," of which we wrote in our last issue, the question was asked, at a meeting last week of the London Congregational Union, What about the next stage—"Opening of museums on Sunday, picture galleries, Crystal Palace," &c? To this Mr. Blackham, who was present, replied, "The word 'Pleasant' is not essential. It can be dropped, and has been so at West Bromwich and in other towns. The term was necessary in the first instance. They are now simply called, Adult Bible-classes."

We are glad to know that the Earl of Meath has introduced a Bill into the House of Lords for the suppression of indecent advertisements. The step has been taken not one day too soon, for the walls in many of our cities, and in most of the suburbs of our towns, have of late years been gradually becoming more and more disgraceful owing to the billstickers being left free to post obscene and immoral placards. It does not say much for the interest which is taken by Parliament in the public morals that Lord Meath's measure should be to a large extent not much more than an embodiment of local Acts, some of the municipal bodies having been sooner alive to the necessity of dealing sternly with that which had become a public scandal, and having already legislated to prohibit the dissemination of quack pamphlets and notices.

It has taken the authorities in Spain a long time to recognise the evils attendant upon the employment of young people in mills and mines. At length, however, a Bill has been prepared by the Minister of the Interior dealing with many of the abuses, and utterly prohibiting the employment of any child under nine years old, and of any child under thirteen in either mines or factories. The hours of child labour, too, are restricted—for those under thirteen years old, five hours; and between thirteen and seventeen, eight hours. One wise provision prohibits the employment of anyone under seventeen in public entertainments and shows.

We are behind Spain in this latter respect, for we still pressingly need legislation dealing with the young children who are compelled to minister to public enjoyment at a great cost to themselves: desirable liberty of the subject in England being considered to include the right of lazy and oftentimes cruel parents to live upon the labours and sufferings of children.

Rev. Benjamin Waugh writes to The Times, explaining how the new police regulation with respect to neglected children will work for the benefit of these "ill-used and delinquent" members of society. Persons who encounter these mendicant waifs in our London streets need have no hesitation in giving them in charge to the police, since that step will lead to inquiries being made as to their real condition, and in all probability to their rescue from evil surroundings. Mr. Waugh's Society have greatly enlarged their accommodation at headquarters, in order to cope with the new state of things; this, of course, gives them a still stronger claim on the practical support of the Christian public.

It ought not to be difficult to trace the relationship between starvation wages and heavy poor rates; but Guardians apparently too often fail to connect cause and effect in this matter. Contracts have, it is said, been entered into under which the children at Hanwell Schools are to be supplied with shoes at sixpence a pair, and coal-scuttles are charged sixpence each. When intermediate profits are deducted from this price it is not hard to see that the workpeople who have to produce the articles must come badly off: and that the ratepayers who permit such false economy must necessarily have to make up for it by paying a heavy poor rate.

A Staffordshire lady, whose will has just been proved, has bequeathed the sum of £5000 to a Roman Catholic priest of St. Mary's Abbey, Oulton, in order that he may annually say for the repose of her soul "such a number of masses as he may think right, having regard to the amount of the legacy." Another priest at Oscott College has also been bequeathed for the same object the deceased lady's interest in certain funds. We should like to know the priests' estimate of their obligations in the matter. Apparently the poor lady saw no reason to hope that the consideration would be anything but the amount of the payment, and did not venture to imagine that there would be any generosity based upon an idea of her need. What an impression this gives one of the traffic which Rome carries on in such matters!

Our readers will remember that it was asserted very widely some little time ago, as on the authority of the British Medical Association, that teetotalism shortened the duration of life. At a meeting of the Victoria Institute the other evening, Dr. Norman Kerr stated that the British Association never made any such contention, and that, on the contrary, "the shortening of life was proportional to the degree of indulgence." This is an opinion worth noting.

The Working Men's Lord Day Rest Association have stated that between two and three hundred thousand barmen and barmaids "work on the average 15½ hours seven days a week." No wonder that publicans and brewers grow rich; but who will be held responsible for the bodies and souls of these people? Our friend, Miss C. M. Gough, of 14, John-street, Bedford-row, W.C., who labours so earnestly amongst young ladies employed in bars and restaurants, could furnish some sad instances of the effect of this life upon their health and morals. We warmly commend her work to the interest of our readers.

A contemporary announces that "the problem of what to do on a Sunday evening in London among Society and club men has at last been solved by Mr. Macleay, the present vice-chairman of the Lyric Club." We were not aware that Society was troubled by such a difficulty; but, if the problem really was troubling anyone but thoughtless and selfish idlers, we do not think that "the idea of giving smoking concerts" has anything in it so original or brilliant as to justify any credit being given to the person named. That there are plenty of persons who do not know what to do either on week day or Sunday with the life God has given them is only too true, but even these people might be, and should be, taught to regard the Sabbath Day's rest of those who work early and late on week days. The lot of myriads of our working people is bad enough, without their having the few hours of the Sabbath stolen from them.

Spending last Sabbath at the house of an eminent minister in the City, we were painfully struck with the number of itinerant Sunday paper vendors who made the silent morn hideous with their cries. Our host expressed himself strongly adverse to the recent addition to this nuisance created by The New York Herald. The following letter addressed to us by another minister is apropos of this:—

Dear Sir,—As I received the enclosed last evening, I suppose the same form has been sent to most ministers in London. I have declined on the ground that I should be sorry in any way to countenance the publication of a Sunday newspaper. You will, of course, form your own opinion as to the object with which the request is issued.

ENCLOSURE.

Dear Sir,—The London Edition of The New York Herald begs the favour (per enclosed stamped envelope) of receiving from you, for publication in its religious programme, the text and general scope of your next sermon. Please mail the same before next Saturday morning.—Very truly yours,

James Gordon Bennett.

N.B.—Enclosed is a sample extract from last Sunday's issue.

The last-named "extract" contains information as to the subject-matter of a number of sermons which were to be preached in and around London on the Sunday in question. We heard a minister complaining the other day that many Church members, who attend their own place of worship on the Sabbath morning, make a point of going elsewhere at night. This creates a spirit of unrest and discontent which is highly injurious to spiritual life as well as discouraging to their ministers. It is just this sort of thing that the above feature of the Herald will tend to develop, and is one greatly to be deprecated. Doubtless it may be pleasing to any minister to have his audience swelled by the presence of strangers, but, as Rev. John McNeill powerfully deduced last Sunday evening from the story of Gideon and his army, "God does not count heads; He wants hearts!"

But, besides this unrest, is involved a great increase of Sunday travelling, which is an additional evil, and an injustice to a large portion of the community. We therefore strongly urge ministers who may receive overtures from the Herald to follow the example of our correspondent, and protest against them. Hitherto the purchasing of a Sunday paper has been considered "hardly the thing" by respectable people, and we earnestly hope that this view will still be maintained by all who call themselves by that name, and that this attempt to put the stamp of respectability upon an objectionable traffic will not be allowed to succeed.

Mr. Edward Whitwell writes to us as follows:—

Permit me to invite your readers to the meeting on Good Friday evening, at 8 p.m., in the Royal Victoria Hall, Waterloo Bridge-road, S.E., to further the getting of Sunday Closing for London and the rest of England. All who desire that the Lord's Day should be honoured, and the curse of intemperance diminished are earnestly invited. That God who heard prayer, and gave a majority of twenty-two at the Second Reading of the Sunday Closing Bill, only can give the guidance and help and blessing which will overcome all opposition and give our beloved, but drink-degraded, country a Sunday without the curse of the liquor traffic.

We trust many of our readers will avail themselves of this opportunity of witnessing against a God-dishonouring traffic.

Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. state in their annual supplement that there have been no fewer than 912 books on theological subjects published during the last year, and the figures may give rise to some doubt as to the utility of all this theological writing. It is, indeed, open to question if in these later days we are not devoting too much time to the study of works upon the Bible, which ought to be given rather to the study of God's Word itself. Many of the publications are far from helpful, and it is refreshing to turn from them to strengthening pages of the Bible in its simplicity and purity.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission in St. Mark's Parish, Leeds, April 6 to 18.——For blessing on a mission by Mr. Henry Thorne, at the George Moore Memorial Hall, Mealsgate, Cumberland, and at the Y.M.C.A., Plymouth, April 27 to May 13.——For blessing on an eight days' Gospel mission, to be conducted by Mr. Herbert Veasey, at Hampt, Cornwall, commencing April 14.——For blessing on Gospel services during April at the Girls' Village Home, Ilford, conducted by Messrs. Middleton and Hogben.——For blessing on a mission in Bootle, Liverpool, commencing April 13.

Armed Europe.

Fifteen years ago The Times, in a leading article, wrote as follows:—

Europe is striving still to add to the number of her effective soldiers. Her present state is scarcely less truly one of actual war, though no shot is fired in anger, and no trumpet as yet blown for battle. Her armies are arrayed against one another, though none of them has passed beyond the limits of its own frontiers. Modern war has long been a question of comparative resources, and these are expended during the continuance of peace as lavishly as they could be if the very name of peace had been given up. If this state of things is permitted to continue, it will be a disgrace to European statesmen. It is on their shoulders that the real blame is to be laid.

If this was true fifteen years ago, what are we to say to the present condition of things? Then the standing armies of Europe numbered about six millions of men, while to-day they number ten and a half millions.

The pressure of such enormous armaments has been shown as regards the peasantry of Italy by the Blue Books of a Parliamentary Commission (1882—1885), where it is stated that 45 per cent. of the net returns of land is swallowed up by taxation. The income tax is equal to 2s. 8d. in the pound, and the grist tax and salt tax add much bitterness to the poverty and hunger of the people. A story of equal suffering comes from Russia, whilst in France the taxation upon almost every article of diet makes the cost of living bear very heavily upon the working classes.

The dissatisfaction of the people of Europe with this state of things was strikingly brought out by the late Henry Richard in an address to the Social Science Congress at Newcastle shortly after the late Franco-German War. He spoke of motions in favour of immediate reduction of armaments having been influentially supported in the legislatures both of Berlin and Vienna, and carried in the Saxon Chamber at Dresden, whilst in France so strong was the feeling amongst the people that, at a General Election, nearly all the candidates felt obliged to put into their addresses to the electors a promise to vote for a great reduction in the military establishment of France. There is every reason to believe that the state of public feeling throughout Europe is equally emphatic to-day: and yet the statesmen of Europe continue steadily to prepare for war—though they evidence a desire to avoid the threatened conflict if possible.

In the presence of all these facts it is surely time for the Christian Church seriously to consider whether a policy of simultaneous disarmament cannot be pressed home upon statesmen. Canon Westcott has long felt the burden of this state of affairs, and in the same way Dr. Paton, of Nottingham, and several other Christians in other sections of the Protestant Church, have the matter much at heart, whilst a recent writer in Church Bells inquires whether every Christian community throughout Europe could not memorialise the Governing Powers in favour of a convention for the one simple object of promoting disarmament.

We trust the matter will not be allowed to rest, but that Christians will find some means of united action by which to express their abhorrence of maintaining these enormous military establishments in time of peace.

The Relation of the Believer to God's Promises.

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

The promises of God touch the believer at every vital point of contact. Their relation to Him is as varied as his spiritual wants are multiplied, and his spiritual experience is multiform.

To his faith they are both foundation and culmination, corner-stone and capstone. We are told to "believe." But what are we to believe? Blind confidence, however positive, can lead us only, as all blind leaders do, into the ditch of disappointment or the pitfall of disastrous ruin. We are not called upon to believe vaguely, unintelligently, irrationally. The Word of God is the warrant for our faith. Beneath our firm-footed confidence is a "Thus saith the Lord." Belief accepts the truth and fact contained in the statements, propositions, affirmations made in the Bible.

To the believer's hope, also, the exceeding great and precious promises are the inspiration. When he is asked a reason for the hope that is in him, these are his answers: The promises are the celestial colours with which the Divine Artist paints the future prospect of the child of God; and on that picture of his heavenly inheritance hope fixes her enraptured gaze. The joy that is thus set before him is so uplifting and inspiring that it makes even his heavy cross seem light, and already encircles his brow with the crown of glory that fadeth not away. Without God's word of promise there could be no hope that maketh not ashamed. There might be expectancy, but there could be no warrant for it. It is only the promise of God that gives certainty to our assurance of hope.

Thus, the believer's joy is inseparable from the precious promises. We find joy to be threefold: the joy of memory, experience, and anticipation; the retrospect, the aspect, the prospect. If it be the joy of remembrance, it is that of the promises fulfilled; if of present realisation, it is that of the promises embraced and enjoyed; if of future foretaste, it is the joy of promises anticipated. The believer thus dwells in the promises. They irradiate his past experience, they illuminate his present path, they glorify his future estate.

Our obedience is encouraged and stimulated by the promises; for all promises are both addressed to obedient souls and are the reward of doing the will of God. This is the indispensable condition of their reception and realisation. Departure from God leads into deep darkness—it is itself darkness that may be felt. The light of promise breaks only upon the pathway of obedience, which is in fact the very pathway also of promise. Gerizim and Ebal are the typical mountains that stand at the very gateway of life; the mountains of blessing and of cursing, of promise and of threatening; and whether we stand on the sunlit slopes of the one, or under the frowning shadows of the other, depends upon our obedience to God.

Our love is likewise closely related to the promises. They are a revelation of the infinite love that lavished the riches of the grace of God upon us while we were in sin and enmity, and so we learn to love Him who first loved us. At every stage and step of our pilgrimage these promises are our staff and stay; even in the valley of the shadow of death. There is no vale of Baca, whose fountains of tears they cannot transform into wells of salvation. Love is constantly expanded and enriched by the experience of fulfilled promises. They spread our table in the midst of enemies. We feast, and are fed and filled; our head is anointed as with holy oil, and our cup runneth over. Love sees the daily ministry of the promises, and love grows till it displaces all carnal lusts and corrupt affections, and controls the heart.

But what would prayer be without promise! How could he that cometh to God know that He is the rewarder of them that diligently seek Him, were it not for his own Word? There are minute forms of animal life that build up great masses of cells, and as they build, rise upon their own work nearer to heaven. The believer is such a builder. He lays promise upon promise, as sure foundations; he adds promise to promise, and so carries up his spiritual structure, and as he builds he ascends upon his own work, mounting higher and higher upon the word of the living God, until he reaches the heavenly heights themselves.

THE FAMINE IN CHINA.

In a letter to The North China Herald, dated Chefoo, Feb. 12, Rev. Dr. Nevius writes:—Scarcity prevails to a greater or less extent over the whole of Shantung. In the section bordering on the Pechili Bay, on the north-west, this scarcity becomes absolute destitution. Roughly speaking, perhaps one-third of the population of Shantung are now living on what is, in ordinary times, the food of horses, cattle, and swine. It is composed of chaff or leaves, mixed with beans, or a small proportion of grain or bean-cake. The coarsest and cheapest grains, millet and sorghum, are now regarded as luxuries beyond the reach of the masses.

But there is yet another class, constantly increasing, and already numbering millions, still more to be commiserated, who are living on chaff alone. This chaff diet is not so called by a figure of speech, but literally. In the markets chaff has largely taken the place of grain, and has its fixed market price. Many cannot even get this, much less bran. It is only for the "chaff-eaters" that we have appealed for aid. As the coils of the famine are drawn tighter and tighter about its victims, hundreds, if not thousands, are transferred every day from the category of "cattle-food eaters" to "chaff-eaters;" and in the downward scale there is only one more step, and that is a coffinless grave. We can only hope, in our relief work, to improve the condition of the "chaff-eaters," by giving them the means of getting a little grain to mix with their chaff or leaves. This hardly seems worthy of the name of charity; but it is all that the people ask, and they receive it as a great boon, and with sincere gratitude. They cannot of course thrive on this allowance, but they can, for a limited time, live on it. To many this pittance comes too late. They have already passed the "dead-line."

A MERCHANT PREACHER.—For sixteen years Mr. William Birch, Jun., a Manchester business man, has preached every Sunday night to a crowded congregation gathered in the great Free Trade Hall in Cottonopolis. During the entire period Mr. Birch has not been absent from the platform on a single occasion, through illness, holiday, or any other cause. The sermons have been printed week by week, and their circulation has extended to the colonies and the United States; while more than a hundred burglars and thieves, many of whom had suffered terms of penal servitude, have been reclaimed and emigrated by him. From his lessons of thrift many who first came to hear him in rags have risen to positions of comfort and prosperity.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

II.—Christ's Life and Teaching.

IN several of his papers, "A Missionary" lays down two important propositions: I. That Christians are enjoined to imitate the outward life of Christ. II. That, as regards missionary work, He has set forth rules for them in Matt. x. Let us examine these two propositions.

I. "A Missionary" says, in article 4, that "the root defect of this age" is that while our Lord's precepts regarding the "inward spirit and graces" of the Christian life are acknowledged and followed, those relating to "the outward life of simplicity, self-denial, and suffering," are forgotten. He calls on us to "follow Christ" in the latter respect. He says in article 5: "Are we not called to imitate Christ? But how? In his inward disposition only? Nay, verily, but in his outward life as well." In a later article (14) he considerably modifies this. He there limits the obligation to the "lasting order of Apostles," or "sent ones," that is, to missionaries; and he allows that the life of Jesus at Nazareth, when He worked for his own support and probably for the support of others as a carpenter, "may be considered as somewhat analogous, in some respects at least, to the manner of life appropriate to the private Christian." The likeness of such "private Christians" to Christ is, we are told, "necessarily modified by their circumstances." On these and similar statements, I remark:—

(1) The qualification in article 14 is a very just one, but it completely destroys a great part of the argument of the preceding articles.

(2) But the qualification involves an inconsistency. The Carpenter of Nazareth, a "poor man," a "peasant," is to be regarded as the prototype of the private Christian, who is very often neither poor nor a peasant; nor does "A Missionary" say that he should be. "Many of them," he says, "must needs have at least some possessions, a purse, a fixed abode, the responsibilities of social and domestic relations." That is to say, it is not obligatory on them to reproduce the exact external circumstances of the Nazareth-life. Very well, then the same qualification will hold good in the case of him whose life is (on this theory) foreshadowed by the three years of our Lord's public ministry, that is, in the case of the missionary. He is, in very deed, to follow in his Master's steps; but that does not necessarily involve the exact reproduction of the external circumstances. But, if this be allowed, as in all reason it must be, a large part of "A Missionary's" argument falls to the ground at once.

(3) What, as regards means of support, was the difference between Christ's thirty years at Nazareth and the three years of his ministry? In the former period He supported Himself; in the latter He was supported by others. That is exactly paralleled by the "average modern missionary." Our critic calls for a band of men to go out "without a purse." That, at all events, would not be like the ministry of Jesus. For Him and his band there was a "purse." The man who carried it was a thief, but that does not touch the question. The thief is condemned, but the "purse" is not. Moreover, the "purse" had in it more than was needed to support the band. From it alms could be given to the poor, and from it money could be stolen without being missed. And who supplied the purse? Surely the women who "ministered to Him of their substance." Whom in modern times do those women represent? Certainly not the people preached to. Rather, the subscribers to missionary societies!

(4) In the very same article (14) in which Christ's example is discussed, John the Baptist is mentioned, and we are told that "in him the missionary may behold his proper type." Well, one thing is clear in the Gospels, viz., that our Lord repeatedly emphasises the difference between Himself and the Baptist. "The Son of Man is come eating and drinking." We find Him again and again entertained in rich men's houses; we find Him charged with being "a glutonous man and a winebibber"; we find Him gently rebuking one of them who had received Him without the usual courtesies of upper-class life in that age and clime: "Thou gavest Me no water for my feet... my head with oil thou didst not anoint." The whole drift of "A Missionary's" argument is, that to follow Christ's example, missionaries must be ascetics. He refers, sympathisingly (article 4), to the mediæval monks and hermits as having "laid hold of the letter of Christ's command," although without his inner life and spirit, and blames "thousands of God's dear children who have reversed the order of the monkish ascetic, who possess and manifest much of spiritual grace, but fail in exhibiting the corresponding outward life." (This, by the way, is in article 4; the limitation of the rule to missionaries is still ten articles off.) I submit that an ascetic may be like John the Baptist, but is utterly unlike Jesus Christ.

(5) In one respect, John the Baptist and our Lord were alike. With all reverence be it noted that both were celibate. That was a much more important circumstance in their lives than some of the minor points dwelt on by "A Missionary." If their external life is to be literally imitated, its most conspicuous feature has the first claim to imitation; and this means that Rome is right, and that every missionary must be celibate. I know "A Missionary" does not mean that. A later chapter shows that he does not. But, then, what becomes of his principle that every missionary must reproduce the external circumstances of Christ's life?

II. Then, secondly, as to our Lord's teaching in Matt. x. I submit that when we have numerous passages containing counsels and instructions given by Him specifically to his Apostles, we have no right to take one (or at most two) of them and base all our principles and methods upon what we there find. His discourses to the disciples occupy the equivalent of at least twenty-seven chapters in the Gospels. By picking out one or two, we are liable to get a very inadequate view of his teaching.

But while I enter this caveat against "A Missionary's" method, I am quite willing to meet him on his own ground. And, while I contend that Matt. x. has no such exclusive and separate authority as he gives it, as the one Divine manual for missionary work, I entirely concur that the principles there laid down are, so far as they go, binding on the Church always and everywhere. It is one of the wonderful features of our Lord's teaching generally, that words spoken with special reference to passing circumstances contain deep and abiding principles for the instruction of his people in all ages. Instance after instance might be cited. But this is no warrant for applying every word literally to circumstances totally different. The instructions in Matt. x. were suitable to the immediate occasion, as I shall show presently. We may rightly seek to know what principles underlie them, assured that all our Master's words contain lessons for ourselves; only when we apply those principles to the details of work, we must have regard to differences of circumstance, and period, and country. "A Missionary" calls this a yielding to worldly expediency. I call it the exercise, under the guidance of the Holy Ghost, of the reason and judgment and common sense that God has graciously given us.

"A Missionary," however, himself qualifies in a later article (17) the very strong statements of his earlier ones (9, 10, 13). He says that Christ's teachings "were called forth by the exigencies of the moment, and wore the drapery of the hour that gave them birth." Excellent!—but why was not this said seven chapters earlier? Then, in that same 17th article, he uses this principle of interpretation to reply to the obvious remark that the injunction in Luke xxii. to take purse and scrip must be set against the injunction in Matt. x. not to take them. He urges that the command to take purse and scrip was temporary, and that the additional direction "to take the sword" was figurative. "Provide no purse"—that, says our friend, is literal, and of perpetual obligation; "Take a purse"—that was a direction for three days only; "Take a sword"—that is entirely figurative. Such, in a nutshell, is our friend's exposition of Scripture.

Parenthetically, let me add that two points in the rejoinder regarding Luke xxii. cannot be admitted for a moment. (1) It is urged that Jesus could not have meant in Luke xxii. that thenceforward his servants were to take purse and scrip, because "in the Acts we find them taking neither purse nor scrip." For this statement, which occurs again and again, there is not a tittle of evidence. I shall refer to it more fully hereafter. (2) It is urged that if the sword were thenceforward to be taken, the Crusaders were right; but that, as we know they were not right, it follows that Luke xxii., "if it prove anything, proves too much." I fear that "A Missionary" would not allow us in our turn to evade the consequences of literal interpretation in this way. If we doubt his literal enforcement of Matt. x. because it involves such and such consequences, his reply over and over again is, in effect, "You have no right to evade consequences; you are setting up worldly wisdom against the direct commands of the Master." Yet he does exactly what he refuses us leave to do. I might reply, "If your missionary methods are correct, then the Romish preaching friars of the fourteenth century were right; but, as they certainly were not right, your method is wrong." That would not be a fair reply, but it is exactly the same as "A Missionary" gives us regarding the "sword" of Luke xxii.

But, now, what is the real relation of Matt. x. and Luke xxii. to one another, and to the rest of our Lord's teaching, and to the Church's missionary work?

(1) In Matt. x. Jesus sends out the twelve on a short evangelistic tour among their own countrymen, in districts familiar to them. Their detailed instructions are exactly suited to the occasion, and governed to a large extent by the ordinary customs of the country and people. It is strictly a Home Mission, the mission of a band of working-men evangelists sent out (as it were) from Bedford to spend a week or two in preaching in the villages of Bedfordshire. Allowing for the difference between Galilee and an English county as regards customs and manner of living, I think such a band would not be very unlike the twelve, even in external details. But the case is utterly unlike that of a missionary going ten thousand miles to a country entirely new, a people utterly strange, and a language of which he knows not a word.

(2) In Luke xxii., Jesus reminds the Apostles of that tour. "Lacked ye anything?" He inquires. "Nothing." "But now"—He rejoins. What does that "But now" mean? It is as if He said this: "Ye lacked nothing then, because I sent you among your own people, and, moreover, at a time when I was popular, and my messengers were everywhere welcome. But now, you will find all different. I am rejected; I am going to be put to death; and though I shall rise again, and ye shall see Me, yet hatred and persecution will henceforth be your portion, even in your own country. And when you go forth into distant lands to preach my Gospel, you will find few friends; you will be among strangers, and often among enemies. Now, then, you will want purse and scrip; yea, even a sword; that is to say, you may rightly use earthly means to fight your way through your hosts of foes. You may fasten your doors when you meet, 'for fear of the Jews'; if any one of you should be a 'Roman citizen,' you may use your privileges and claim exemption from cruel treatment; you may appeal from unjust local rulers to the imperial Cæsar." Now, observe the difference between my interpretation and "A Missionary's." He actually limits the application of this verse to the dark period of three days during Christ's absence, and paraphrases his words thus: "I cannot now care for you as heretofore...Therefore, look out for yourselves, and betake yourselves to your natural resources, as you did before I called you from your nets and boats." As if the Lord's three days' absence could make the smallest difference to his care of them! I, on the other hand, give the passage exactly the same force and authority as that in Matt. x., both being in principle perpetually binding, but both being (to use our friend's own language) "called forth by the exigencies of the moment, and wearing the drapery of the hour that gave them birth."

(3) But what of the instructions given between the Resurrection and the Ascension? If any directions to the Apostles on their missionary work would be specially important it would be those given at that solemn time. What are they? They are general directions, applicable to all ages and climes. There are no minute details about earthly equipment and behaviour in Galilean villages; but the work of the Apostles is seen in its greatness. It is not merely, as "A Missionary" again and again states it to be, "preaching the Gospel." In Matt. xxviii. it is described as, (1) discipling—i.e., in the parlance of modern missions, winning "adherents"; (2) baptizing; (3) "teaching all things commanded." In other words, (1) evangelisation; (2) the founding of churches; (3) systematic instruction and training. Again, in John xxi., we have missionary work pictured to us—first, as fishing—i.e., the bringing of outsiders into the Gospel net; and secondly, as shepherding—i.e., the care of both the sheep and the lambs that are already in the fold—meaning by the fold the visible Christian community. I appeal confidently to all my readers whether all the varied work thus indicated (and I have not cited all the passages) is not represented far more truly by the diversified operations of our missionary societies than by the limited range of "A Missionary's" method of evangelisation. His method may have its place; but it is but a small part of the whole.

But I promised to meet "A Missionary" on his own ground. Let me, therefore, assume that the equipment of the missionary is as described in Matt. x. 9, 10. Twice over in these articles are the verses interpreted admirably. I most heartily accept the following from No. 13: "He has no purse, that is, no certain income; no scrip, that is, no possessions; no change of raiment or shoes, that is, no provision for bodily ease; a staff only, that is, without convenient appointments of travel; saluting no man by the way, that is, separated from the ordinary engrossments of human friendships." And, again, in the ninth chapter, I read as follows:—"These five things (the purse, the wallet, raiment, comfort in travelling, the making and retaining of friends), from whose help they were debarred, stand for those appliances by which the world is appropriated and enjoyed by those who love it." This, also, I am willing to accept. But both these sentences imply that the five points of equipment are expressed figuratively; yet, again and again the "average missionary" is disparaged in these articles, and told that his work receives no blessing, because he carries with him a literal purse, wallet, and so forth. Moreover, although I desire to avoid as much as possible any allusion to the writer's personality, I cannot refuse to see that the letter signed "E. F. Baldwin," describing a missionary tour in Morocco, is presented as a concrete illustration of the principles he lays down; and in that narrative stress is laid on the extremest literalness in applying the words of Christ.

Now, I earnestly submit to the readers of The Christian that the "average missionary" does follow the Divine regulations of Matt. x.

(1) He has "no purse, that is, no certain income" (I use the language quoted above). His allowances from his society are entirely dependent upon an enormous number of small contributions coming in to the society at the right time. It may be said, Oh, he knows they will come in! Why does he know it? Simply, because he knows that "the Lord will provide." Again, it may be said, Oh, his "allowance" is a fixed sum. Yes, but merely for economy and convenience. If he is an honorary missionary, indeed, having private means of his own, then he may be said to have a "purse." But it should be noted that Jesus does not say his servant is not to have a "purse"—only that he is not to "provide" it. He may keep and use what he has got, but he is not to take trouble to get more. The Greek word implies this, and the Revised Version well renders the words, "Get you no gold."

(2) He has "no scrip, that is, no possessions." That is, as above, unless he is a missionary at his own charges. The "average missionary" has nothing that he can call his own. The bungalow in India, or tent in Africa, or log hut in North America, or boat in the South Seas, belongs to his society. Perhaps, after thirty or forty years he comes home in shattered health. His brothers, perhaps, who went into professional or business life, he may find prosperous men. He himself has not a shilling except what the Lord's people (through their society) find him.

(3) He has "no change of raiment or shoes, that is, no provision for bodily ease." This, as a general rule, is a most true description of the "average missionary." There are two qualifications, however. First, the Christian friends who support him insist on due provision for bodily health, for the sake of the work that has to be done. Secondly, outward circumstances must differ; and the most rigorous ascetic in Calcutta or Shanghai cannot contrive to suffer the privations of an African mangrove swamp or of a blizzard on the shores of Hudson's Bay. Certainly a missionary in Morocco will meet with nothing of the kind.

(4) He has "a staff only, that is, without convenient appointments of travel." Take the most "luxurious" missionary's "outfit," and compare it with that of the "average traveller"! It is true that friends will now and then give loving keepsakes to lady missionaries going to China or Japan in the shape of travelling writing-cases and the like. I suppose we must call them injudicious friends, and must regard the said lady missionaries as sadly worldly for not selling them or throwing them overboard.

(5) He goes "saluting no man by the way, that is, separated from the ordinary engrossments of human friendships." It is true that Bishop Taylor conducts a large band of men and women together to the Congo, and thus "human friendship" is provided for them. True, also, that we have all read with sympathetic interest of the delightful gatherings of China Inland brethren and sisters, even in far-distant provinces. But the "average missionary" is often for months alone. Bishop Bompas, to whom I referred last week, has several times left his wife at one log-hut in the Great Lone Land for the winter, and gone himself to another, two or three hundred miles off, because at neither place was there flour enough in store to last them through the long months of ice bound rivers.

Nevertheless, I do not doubt that "A Missionary's" exhortations are needed. Human nature does assert itself, and absolute dedication to the Lord and separation from the world are not so common as they should be. I only ask, first, ought we not to know something of the facts, and recognise them? secondly, ought not our loving sympathy to go forth towards the "average missionary," rather than our inconsiderate criticism? thirdly, if here and there we do detect what seems to us a little shortcoming or inconsistency, which of us is fit to cast the first stone? EUGENE STOCK.

P.S.—Since writing the above, I have read Mrs. Grattan Guinness's masterly reply to "A Missionary" in Regions Beyond for April. I earnestly commend that article to the attention of all who have read the papers of "A Missionary." E. S.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXV.—DRAWING BACK.

HEBREWS x. 19—39.

THE Epistle has been for some time glowing with ever-increasing heat, and now it flames out into a vehement expostulation which must have startled and terrified those Hebrew Christians, who were still wavering between Judaism and Christianity. As we have had more than one occasion to remark, it had become a great question with some of them whether they should go back to the one or go on with the other. The splendid ceremonial, venerable age, and olden associations of Judaism, were fighting hard to wean them away from the simplicity and spiritual demands of the later faith. But surely the retrograde movement would be arrested, and the impetus towards Christ greatly accelerated, by these sublime and soul-stirring remonstrances.

I. THE THREEFOLD CONCLUSION ALREADY ARRIVED AT is summed up in three momentous propositions.

(1) We may boldly enter the holiest by the blood of Jesus.—The holiest was the chamber of innermost communion with God. To enter it was to speak with God face to face. And its equivalent for us is the right to make our God our confidant and friend, into whose secret ear we may pour the whole story of sin, and sorrow, and need. Nor need the memory of recent sin distress us, because the blood of Jesus is the pledge of the forgiveness and acceptance of those who are penitent and believing. We may go continually, and even dwell, where Israel's high priests might tread but once each year.

(2) Jesus has inaugurated a new and living way.—The vail of the Temple was rent when Jesus died, to indicate that the way to God was henceforth free to man, without let or hindrance, and without the intervention of a human priest. Priests have tried to block it, and to compel men to pay them toll for opening it. But their pretensions are false. They have no such power. The way stands open still for every trembling seeker. It is new, because, though myriads have trodden it, it is as fresh as ever for each new priestly foot. It is living, because it is through the living Saviour that we come to God. "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me." Stay here to note that the vail, with its curious workmanship, was a symbol of the body of Christ. "The vail, that is to say, his flesh." We get near to God through the death of that Son of Man who, in real human sorrow, hung on the cross for us.

(3) We have a High Priest.—We belong to the household of God by faith, but we need a Priest. Priests need a Priest. And such a one we have, who ever liveth, to make intercession for us, and to offer our prayers on the golden altar, mingled with the much incense of his own precious merit. These are the three conclusions which recapitulate the positions laid down and proved up to this point.

II. THE THREEFOLD EXHORTATION FOUNDED ON THE PREVIOUS CONCLUSIONS.—"Let us draw near" (22). "Let us hold fast" (23). "Let us consider one another" (24). And each of these three exhortations revolves around one of the three words, which are so often found in combination in the Epistles—Faith, Hope, and Love (R.V.).

FAITH consists of two parts: Belief, which accepts certain declarations as true, and trust in the Person about whom those declarations are made. Neither will do without the other. On the one hand, we cannot trust a person without knowing something about him; on the other hand, your knowledge will not help you unless it leads to trust, any more than it avails the shivering wretch outside the Bank of England to know that the vaults are stored with gold. A mere intellectual faith is not enough. The holding of a creed will not save. We must pass from a belief in words to trust in the Word. By faith we know that Jesus lives, and by faith we also appropriate that life. By faith we know that Jesus made on the cross a propitiation for sin, and by faith we lay our hand reverently on his dear head and confess our sin. Faith is the open hand receiving Christ. Faith is the golden pipe through which his fulness comes to us. Faith is the narrow channel by which the life that pulses in the Redeemer's heart enters our souls. Faith is the attitude we assume when we turn aside from the human to the Divine.

We ought not to be content with anything less than the full assurance of faith. The prime method of increasing it is in drawing near to God. In olden days the bodies of the priests were bathed in water, and sprinkled with blood, ere they entered the presence of God. Let us seek the spiritual counterpart of this. Relieved from the pressure of conscious guilt, with hearts as sincere and guileless as the flesh is clean when washed with pure water, let us draw near to God, and keep in fellowship with Him, and in that attitude faith will grow exceedingly. It will no longer sit in the dust, but clothe itself in beautiful garments. It will wax from a thread to become a cable. No longer the trembling touch of a woman's hand, it will grasp the pillars of the Temple with a Samson's embrace.

HOPE is more than faith, and has special reference to the unknown future which it realises, and brings to bear on our daily life. The vail that hides the future parts only as smitten by the prow of our advancing boat; it is natural, therefore, that we should often ask what lies beyond. Foreboding is the prophet of ill; Hope of good. Foreboding cries, "We shall certainly fall by the hand of Saul"; Hope replies, "No weapon that is formed against us shall prosper." Foreboding cries, "Who shall roll away the stone?" Hope sings merrily, "The Lord shall go before us and make the crooked places straight. Foreboding, born of unbelief, cries, "The people are great and tall, and the cities walled up to heaven"; Hope already portions out the land and chooses its inheritance. But Christian hope is infinitely better and more reliable than that of the worldling. In ordinary hope there is always the element of uncertainty; it may be doomed to disillusion and disappointment, things may not turn out as we expect, and so, being the characteristic of youth, it dies down as the years advance. But Christian hope is based on the promise of God, and therefore it cannot disappoint, nay, it is the anchor of the aged soul, becoming brighter and more enduring as the years pass by, because "He is faithful that promised."

But how may we increase our hope, so as never to let it slip, but to hold it fast with unwavering firmness? There is nothing which will sooner strengthen it than to consider his faithfulness, whose promises are hope's anchorage. Has He ever failed to fulfil his engagements? Do not the stars return to their appointed place to a hairbreadth of their time? Have not good men given a unanimous testimony to the fidelity of the covenant-keeping God! He has never suffered his faithfulness to fail, and never will. Our hope, therefore, need not falter, but be strong and very courageous.

LOVE comes last. She is queen of all the graces of the inner life. Love is the passion of self-giving. It never stays to ask what it can afford, or what it may expect to receive, but it is ever shedding forth its perfume, breaking its alabaster boxes, and shedding its heart's blood. It will pine to death if it cannot give. It must share its possessions. It is prodigal of costliest service. Such love is in the heart of God, and should also be in us; and we may increase it materially by considering one another, and associating with our fellow-believers. Distance begets coldness and indifference. When we forsake the assembly of our fellow-Christians we are apt to wrap ourselves in the chill mantle of indifference. But when we see others in need, and help them; when we are willing to succour and save; when we discover that there is something attractive in the least lovable; when we feel the glowing sympathy of others, our own love grows by the demands made on it, and by the opportunities of manifestation.

Let us seek earnestly these best gifts: and that we may have them and abound, let us invoke the blessed indwelling of the Lord Jesus, whose entrance brings with it the whole train of sweet Christian graces.

III. THE THREE FOLD REMONSTRANCE.—Go forward, otherwise penalty (26).—If a man unwittingly broke Moses' law he was forgiven, but if he wilfully despised it, he died without mercy. What then can be expected by those who sin wilfully, not against the iron obligations of Sinai, but against the gracious words which distil from the lips of the dying Saviour. The heart that can turn from the love and blood-shedding of Calvary, and ignore them, and trample them ruthlessly under foot, is so hard, so hopeless, so defiant of the Holy Spirit as to expose itself to the gravest displeasure of God; and can expect no further offering for its sins. There is no sacrifice for the atonement of the sin of rejecting Calvary.

Go forward, otherwise past efforts nullified (32).—These Hebrew Christians had suffered keenly, on their first entrance into the Christian life. The martyrdom of the saintly Stephen, the great havoc wrought in the Church by Saul of Tarsus, the terrible famines that visited Jerusalem, causing wide-spread destitution. They had become even a gazing-stock by reproaches and afflictions. But they had taken joyfully the spoiling of their goods, not shrinking from the ordeal. To go back to Judaism now would annul the advantages which otherwise might have accrued from their bitter experience, would miss the harvest of their tears, would counterwork the respect with which they were being regarded, and would rob them of the reward which the Lord might give to them, if they only endured to the end. "Cast not away your boldness, which hath great recompense of reward."

Go forward, the Lord is at hand (36).—Jesus was about to come in the fall of Jerusalem, as He will come ere long to close the present age. And every sign pointed to the speedy destruction of the Jewish polity by the all-conquering might of Rome. How foolish then would it be to return to that which was on the eve of dissolution: to the Temple that would burn to the ground, to sacrifices soon to cease, to a priesthood to be speedily scattered to the winds!

There was only one alternative, not to go back to certain perdition, to the ruin of all the nobler attributes of the soul, to disgrace and disappointment and endless regret; but to go on through evil and good report, through sorrow and anxiety and blood, until the faithful servant should be vindicated by the Lord's approval and welcomed into the realms of endless blessedness.

A MODEL PRAYER-MEETING.

Between the hours of eight and nine o'clock on last Saturday night I stood on an elevated roadway in Naples, looking across the city upon old Vesuvius shooting its mighty flames skyward, and belching forth its liquid lava at white heat. It was an impressive sight; subduing yet inspiring.

At precisely the same hour this Saturday night I witnessed a vastly grander spectacle; a prayer-meeting at white heat, whose overflow wrought, not destruction and death, but salvation and life. It was my privilege to be present at the prayer-meeting of the East-end Tabernacle. It is Saturday evening in busy London, and rain-drops are falling, yet nearly fifteen hundred people are drawn together to the place of prayer. It is not any extraordinary occasion, nor any notable event which has called out this grand congregation. It is the ordinary weekly prayer-meeting of the church, observed for three and twenty years.

The time was spent in earnest supplication intermingled with joyful praise. There were no speeches, no wordy exhortations. The pastor, A. G. Brown, made a few bright comments on the Scripture read, which gave tone and direction to the worship of the hour. It was literally a prayer-meeting. The flames glowed brightly, and the fire burned hotly, for the Spirit of God was there, duly honoured, reverently recognised.

To us, this great weekly prayer-meeting is a testimony and a protest. One church has proved (thank God for every such church, and there are many) that there is no grip upon the people so strong and steady as that of a Scriptural spiritual ministry, combined with fervent, constant, definite prayer.

Thousands of churches in England and America have been debauched by an insane love of novelty. They have pursued vanity—the wind, and have been overtaken by the whirlwind. But perhaps a better day is near at hand, a day when preaching shall be pervaded with the old loyalty to Scripture doctrine, a day when the Gospel, as it leaps from the lips of holy men shall have the power of God behind it, a day when church prayer-meetings will renew their youth, regain the faculty of supplication, and recover the lost art of definite persistent prayer, a day when the false, bewitching worship of culture shall give place to spontaneous spiritual worship, the outflow of life, the production of God, the holy, gracious, and generous Spirit.

V.—I AM A BARONET TOO.

There was once a fine aristocratic-looking young man who was employed as a lawyer's clerk. Everyone remarked, "What a gentlemanly young man that is;" and yet he was glad to earn fifty pounds a year. From nine o'clock in the morning until seven in the evening daily he worked away at his quill or steel pen, excepting the little time allowed for his dinner. He was content for the present, hoping to rise in due time, somehow.

One day, while thus engaged, two gentlemen came to the office, and asked to see Mr. ——.

"Yes," said the young man, "that is my name."

While he was answering, one of the gentlemen whispered to the other, "He has the family features; there is no doubt of that."

"Well," said the young man, after a little pause, "may I ask what is your business?"

"Why, sir," replied one of the two gentlemen, "we expect that you are the man we have been seeking for the last two years. May I ask your Christian name?"

"My name is Lionel," answered the young man.

"Indeed," said one gentleman; and the other added, "That is a family name, and I also observe the family voice."

"Pray, sir," continued the gentleman to the young man, "can you tell me anything of your father and uncles?"

"Yes," was the reply. "My father is dead, and my uncles do not notice me. My grandfather was a baronet," he added.

"I am happy to inform you," said one of the gentlemen, "that your uncle is dead, his son also, and that you are the baronet."

"I am jolly glad to hear that," said the young man; "that is news. Will you come in and see my chief, and tell him all this?"

So much for readily believing good news. The young man conducted the two strangers into the private room of his chief, saying, "These gentlemen have a communication to make, sir."

"Be seated," said the lawyer; and, drawing his chair forward, he sat down to hear what was to be said. The communication was very brief. The gentlemen said, "We have been looking for the heir to a baronetcy, and at last we have found him in the person of our young friend here."

The lawyer looked up with surprise, and said to the young man, "I congratulate you, sir; allow me to shake hands with Sir Lionel. Of course I release you from your engagement to me."

"This is like a dream," said the young man; "I suppose it is not all gammon. You are not making a fool of me."

"By no means," said one of the gentlemen, drawing himself up. "It is all true, and we congratulate you also, Sir Lionel."

The young man believed this good news, and came out of that office in a very different position to what he went into it. He was duly installed in his new possessions, and henceforth lived like a baronet, because he was one. He did not do anything to create himself a baronet.

There are many of God's children who try to content themselves in the experience of forgiveness of sins, hoping to know something more at some future time. They pray for peace, and go to the cross of Jesus, as the poets call it, in their devotions, and hope to go to heaven when they die. The Lord Jesus was delivered for their offences and raised again for their justification; but they do not know what justification is—they imagine that it is some abstruse doctrine which theologians are divided about, instead of a matter of personal experience with which they are personally concerned.

They have no idea that pardon and justification go together, though they have read St. Paul's statement, "that through this Man [Christ Jesus] is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins: and by Him all that believe (that is, all who have received pardon) are justified from all things, from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses," or by works or ordinances (Acts xiii. 38). We may be justified, therefore, and know about it as surely as we know of our pardon.

After the prodigal son had received the embrace and kiss of reconciliation, he was clothed with the best robe (Luke xv. 12). Adam and Eve, we believe, received forgiveness through the blood of the sacrifice which was offered in Eden, and they were clothed in coats of skin; evidently the skins of beasts offered in sacrifice. So we have pardon offered through the blood of Jesus, and we may be clothed in the righteousness of God.

This is the Lord's purpose towards us, that we should be accounted righteous before God, as surely as the Lord Jesus was accounted as a sinner before men. As joy is the effect of reconciliation, so peace is the result of justification. "Who can bring any charge against God's elect? [whose election is known by the fact of their pardon], it is God that justifieth, who is he that condemneth?"

Too many believers go to God and pray for peace, instead of taking it. They might as well go out into the open field in cold weather, and pray to God to make them warm, instead of sitting by the fire which God has already provided for them.

The story of the baronet had a great effect upon a gentleman who happened to be present.

He said, "That cap fits me exactly. I am one who has had my pardon a long time, and I have been praying for peace, as you say, and have not found it. I am worried with doubts about the future continually. You have opened out a wonderful prospect before me. I only wish I could as readily believe it as the young baronet did. Am I justified as well as pardoned really?"

"Yes," I replied. "If you will believe God's Word and trust Him to give you what He has promised, you shall have peace, and actual possession of all other benefits as well. You are as much justified now as ever you will be to all eternity, if you are a real believer.

"Let the fact take hold of your heart and mind, that you are not only a pardoned sinner; but that for Christ's sake you are accounted righteous before God, as if you had never sinned. You are God's child, accepted in the beloved, and you have access into the very presence of God as your Father. More than this, you may rejoice in the hope of the glory of God, which is to be revealed at Christ's coming (see Rom. v. 2)."

As the gentleman looked surprised and hesitated, I pointed him to another text in the Epistle to the Romans, "whom He justified He also glorified" (Rom. viii. 30).

"I must go home and think over these things," he said.

"No, indeed," I answered; "it will be far easier for you to believe them at once. The young clerk did not stop to think before he believed."

"Well, then, suppose I say I believe, will that do?"

"No," I replied, "you must do it, not say it. I do believe, I will believe upon the authority of God's Word."

How much easier it appears to receive temporal good news than spiritual. Thank God, however, our friend did believe, and said with joy, "I am a baronet too."

Dr. Saphir on the Old Testament.

On Thursday, last week, Rev. Dr. Saphir concluded his valuable addresses on the Old Testament in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allenstreet, Kensington. Confining himself to Moses and the dispensation which God entrusted to him, he spoke of the typical aspect of the Law. Though the whole nation was holy unto the Lord, one tribe was selected to represent the whole in the presence of God. The priests offered sacrifices and presented offerings unto the Lord; incense symbolised prayer, and the blessing of God was pronounced by the sons of Aaron.

The priests had no political power; their very position and the way in which they were sustained, precluded them from exercising any undue influence in the affairs of the nation. God appointed them as descendants of Levi, and they had no power to develop the law, but rather it was their simple duty to guard it, and see that nothing was added to it or taken away from it. The relation between the individual conscience and God was not for a moment interfered with. The priests were not "father confessors"; they carried out the regulations laid down in the law, the sinner himself laying his hands on the sacrifice and confessing his sins. The high priest—the priest who was greater than his brethren, and upon whose head was the anointing oil—was allowed to enter the holy of holies once a year, on the day of atonement, and apply the blood of the propitiation to the mercy-seat which covered the ark of the covenant. This was his only prerogative, thus showing that the whole glory of the priesthood consisted in this, that by atonement they were brought before the face of the Most High, there to be accepted of Him, and regarded with his good pleasure. The high priest represented the whole nation, and thus showed that sacrifices and offerings were not sufficient, that a Person was needed. In Christ all is combined.

God is holy, and sin and death cannot stand before Him. He and everything pertaining to it, and death and everything leading on to it, are excluded from the presence of God, for God is "the Living One," and "of purer eyes than to behold iniquity." Therefore, the priest was never allowed to come into contact with death. What we want is righteousness and life, but the law can give us neither. In Christ we have both.

Passing on, Dr. Saphir spoke of the Tabernacle. Israel never doubted that God could be worshipped everywhere, but the place of meeting prefigured the meeting of God and his people in the person of Christ the Saviour. The various appointments of the Tabernacle were briefly explained as to their spiritual significance, and the holy times, seventh day, month, year, and jubilee year, as well as the three great festivals, were also referred to, the great beauty of the Divine arrangements being dwelt upon. The fulfilment and substance of all the types and shadows is found in Christ and his people. All Christians are priests, holy unto the Lord, called to offer up spiritual sacrifices unto God. Speaking of the national law which God gave to Israel, Dr. Saphir showed its excellence from various points of view, its justice, purity, and generosity. That law was so framed as to promote joy and gladness—that Israel might rejoice before the Lord their God in all the occupations He had given them. Under the blessings of God the very land was fertile: it became desolate, however, for the earth was in sympathy with Jehovah, and is so still, but the blessing of God will return to it.

The great mediatorial work of Moses having been described, the character of the man was delineated. Where Moses failed was, he did not represent the mercy of God as full of tenderness and kindness. He did not sanctify God before the people, but sinned in failing to show them that God gave them water without rebuking them. So Moses had to die without entering the land. But it did not seem good unto heavenly wisdom that the shadow of death should be beheld on that countenance which at one time was so radiant with the glory of God that the Israelites were not able to look upon it. Therefore it is that God Himself buried Moses. Many centuries afterwards, however, on the Mount of Transfiguration, we behold this same face; he represents the past and the law, as Elijah represents the prophets and the future. They appear there unto our Saviour Jesus Christ, and their conversation was about the exodus which Jesus should accomplish at Jerusalem. And then the disciples, after having beheld Moses and Elijah, beheld Jesus, and "Jesus only." The promise, the prediction, which Moses had given, of "a prophet like unto himself," was ratified by a voice which came from the excellent glory, when the Father said "This is my beloved Son; hear Him." So it is that Moses leads us to Christ, in order that afterwards we may see Christ only.

There is a twofold application of this. The first is with regard to the Jews. During this whole dispensation, although it is their great pride to say, "We are the disciples of Moses," Moses is buried, and they know not where he is. So was the law utterly unintelligible to Saul of Tarsus, though he thought he was keeping the law and had a righteousness of his own, not understanding that the law was spiritual, and that neither righteousness nor life came by the law. But when Jesus appeared unto him, then Saul of Tarsus not merely saw Jesus, but also Moses. He understood then what was really the glory of Moses—to lead us unto the Saviour; and, therefore, he says that Israel, when they now read the law, are not able to understand it, because there is a veil upon their hearts. But, he adds, "when Israel shall turn to the Lord," which is not a question of doubt, but only of time, "the veil shall be taken away." Then they will not merely see Jesus, but understand that it was the Lord who buried Moses, and that he lives, because he testified of Christ. The second application is: It was a sign of the sincere Israelite who loved the law of Moses that, being convinced of his guilt, and of the weakness of the flesh, he longed after the Messiah, and after the promise of the Father, the Holy Ghost. So, it is a sign of our sincerity, who profess to have received Jesus and the Holy Ghost, that we delight ourselves in the law, and that "the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

OUR LITTLE NOMADS.—If the Government and Parliament realised the sad condition of these poor 30,000 children, and the mischief working out to themselves and the nation, a moment would not be lost in passing, or assisting to pass, the Bills on their behalf. I have been bringing the pitiable case of these poor children before Parliament and select committees during the last eleven years, and still the children are uneducated, unprotected, and uncared for, and some of them and their parents are treated worse than lepers.

THE WHITE FIELDS OF FRANCE.—A correspondent sends to us the following from M. Révoillaud, dated Barbezieux (Charente), March 28:—In sixteen days I have in this country given eighteen addresses, in almost as many places. No country in the world, dare I say, is more opened to the preaching of the Gospel than this region "des deux Charentes." Everywhere large audiences, and all these hearers saying, "You are right; you say truth; your religion is the good one;" and so on. Had we the means and the men to put to work in these two departments of Charente and Charente Inférieure (ancient province of Saintonge), ten or twelve pastors or evangelists having the spirit and the zeal of apostles, I sincerely believe that before five years ten or twelve Protestant churches, numbering each 200 or 300 members, would be founded, and that could be the beginning of a new general Reformation.

For the Young.

THE FAITHFUL DEAF AND DUMB SERVANT.

A Matron's Story.

Many years ago, a friend said to me one day, "I wish you would take Catherine into your service." "Who is Catherine?" was my natural inquiry. "She is a deaf and dumb servant," my friend answered, "who was once in my employment, and has now no home or friends." "I am afraid," I said, "that such a person would only be a burden in the house, and I would find it very difficult to communicate with her." My friend, however, was very persevering. She told me all she knew about Catherine, who was, according to her account, indeed a real treasure, and would do almost anything in the way of housework—cook, wash, iron, &c. She commended her as most useful in all respects, and an excellent needlewoman, so strong that she could nearly carry a house on her back.

All this appeared very tempting to a person who, like myself, had to keep house on a very small income; so, after much consideration and consultation, I resolved to make the experiment of employing Catherine. My first difficulty was to learn the finger alphabet; but this I did not find so difficult as I had imagined. Catherine was an excellent teacher, and most anxious to communicate all she knew. She could spell well, and was most patient when misunderstood, so that after a little trouble we all knew her language. She used many abbreviations. She had her own names and signs for different people—some of them not very complimentary. For instance, she used to make the sign of a goat for a tall gentleman who had a long beard, and simply say, "Goat come"; a lady who had long curls, she called by the name, "Curls." "Curls" was her special favourite, and she always kissed her hand when she spoke of curls. Clergymen were designated by her by folding the hands in the attitude of prayer.

Catherine was an Irish woman, and she had received a very good education in the Claremont Institution in Dublin. She was a Roman Catholic by birth, but by means of the faithful teaching in the Claremont Institution, she learnt the difference between the Protestant and the Roman Catholic faith. She could give a much better account of her faith than many who have had much greater opportunities. Catherine often told me the story of how, when she left Claremont, she took home with her a Bible and prayer-book. The priest of the parish heard of it, and when he visited her family he took the Bible away from her, and burnt it. She could never forget this act of injustice. She ever afterwards had a great fear of Roman Catholic priests, and was always wont to remark whenever she met one: "Bad, bad man, burnt my Bible." She would hold up her little finger, which is the sign for anything bad; and even taught my little children, when only three years old, to hold up their little fingers whenever they met any priest, for she had such an intense feeling that they were enemies to all Gospel truth.

Catherine proved indeed to be all my friend had told me. She was untiring in her work, and her motto seemed to be, "The more work the better." She was an early riser. She generally rose on a Monday morning at four o'clock, and had the whole week's washing ready and hung out to dry on the hedge by nine o'clock. She was afterwards ready for anything else that was required to be done in the house in the way of cleaning, cooking, or needlework. She liked nothing better than to have a good dinner to cook. The more friends we had to dinner the better she liked it. I used sometimes to say, "I think cold beef will do to-day." She would always answer, "You poor, bad dinner for the master." She had the greatest delight in my little children. Nothing made her so happy as when the baby would come to her from me. She always had a few cakes to tempt the children with. When the baby went to her, she would say in great delight, "Baby loves me." She would then put her hand on her heart in sign of love. When at one time the nurse was ill, and my little boy of two years old slept in a little bed in her room, he used, when he woke in the morning to climb up into her bed, and put his little fingers upon her eyelids to lift them up in order to awake her. The child learnt so early to understand that Catherine could not hear him, and was able to understand signs, and commence to converse with her in sign language. This delighted her beyond everything. She had a great love for her master, and used to kiss his clothes and fold them to her heart when she sat down to repair them, which she would not allow anyone else to do.

At one time, when we lived abroad, she soon learnt to understand the value of the different kinds of foreign money. She liked going to the market, and was able to bargain with the Germans. The market women used to like to see her coming with her basket on her arm; she never lost any money. She always put down her account of the different things she had bought with perfect correctness. The people in the market were always so amused at her sharp ways and her knowledge of the price and quality of butter, eggs, vegetables, fowl, &c. They often gave her small presents of fruit and sweets, which she brought home in great triumph, and divided amongst the other servants. When we left Germany and went to France, many people gave her presents as a token of their respect. She took a lively interest in everything that passed around her, and she was quick at finding out all the news of the place. She liked to be present at morning prayers, and she always followed the reading in her own Bible.

She was of a most generous disposition, and it was generally with great difficulty we contrived to make her save money. She thought no more of giving away a pound than many rich people think of giving away a shilling. She always sent back money to her poor relations in Ireland. During the time of the German War we were obliged to go to England, where we resided for some time in a friend's house, who had a number of servants. Catherine criticised those English servants very sharply. "Eat much, work little," was her pithy remark, spelled out on her fingers. She always used to tell me about the "grand dinners" and suppers the servants had in the kitchen. She was so amusing in all her remarks that on a dull day one found it quite a diversion to go downstairs and have a talk with Catherine. She was too ready to tell her opinion on all subjects: she did so in the quaintest way possible. Catherine read everyone's character that came into the house. Of some she would remark, "Very proud, never look at me." She was, however, seldom far wrong in her judgments.

Catherine returned several times on her own account to Ireland to visit her friends, but she would always come back again, giving a very bad account of her home. "No work for poor people; very bad place; call me dummy." The latter was a great offence in her eyes. In France the people always spoke of her as "Madame." I don't quite understand how she came to know this. But she was peculiarly sharp in picking up the meaning of those she met. Catherine had also a strong feeling of propriety. One time, when she went to Ireland with nearly £5 in her pocket, she went to market in a small town. Someone cut out her pocket with all the money. This was, indeed, a great loss, and she came back saying, "Bad, bad people in Ireland; steal my money."

Having said so much in Catherine's praise, I must in justice mention some of her failings. One must not look only on the bright side, but also at the shady side of the picture. Poor Catherine was very suspicious; this was to a great extent due to her physical defect. She often had met with dishonest people, and was apt to think that anything that was missed was stolen. She would often turn the house nearly inside out, looking for things she suspected had been stolen, but which she afterwards found quite safe in the place where she had left them.

Catherine had an idea that servants were generally dishonest, trying to appropriate something not their own. Her temper was not always the best. She liked her own way, and regularly used to say, when she was asked to do something, "Impossible; too much to do." But after a little she came back, and said she found she could do it quite well. Whenever she had anything to tell, she was so full of her own ideas that she forgot that, whenever someone else was speaking to me, I could not very well attend to her finger language; so, between a French servant, a German governess, English children, and a dumb servant, it was sometimes a little difficult to attend to them all at the same time.

Much more might be told about Catherine, but what has been said will show how kind and useful even a poor deaf and dumb woman can be. She might well serve as an example to many, who could do well, if they would try, but who too often give more trouble and anxiety to those that employ them than poor Catherine ever did. She is still living, and she is the most grateful and happy woman, even now in her old age, when she is not able to work.

It might be well to mention that she was one of the most attentive sick nurses anyone could have desired. She could almost guess what was wanted. If any person were ill, she would walk on tip-toe, and look round to see what could be done for the sick person. She could make soups, or bring a can of tea just at the right time. Catherine understood by the smallest sign exactly what was wanted. At one time, when I was ill, she sat beside my bed all night, and I found her, deaf and dumb as she was, much more intelligent than a strong woman who could speak, for she knew everything in the house, and everything I liked or disliked. I used to speak on her hand in the dark if I wanted anything, and she understood at once what to do. I almost look back with pleasure to that time, when her kindness and industry were of such great value to me. She stayed with me for sixteen years, and altogether her services in the different families she lived with covers a period of forty years.

I have written this story, because many friends who knew my old and faithful servant have assured me that some little account of her could not fail to be interesting. Whatever imperfections of character she may have had, it is important to note in her case the good result of the teaching based on the Holy Scriptures. The Bible she always loved, and its teachings and promises had a hallowed effect upon her life. She was indeed a peculiar treasure in many ways, despite her physical defects and uneven temper. If those who occupy the position of servants were more frequently treated as members of the family, and honoured for their work's sake, which is so important to us all, and made to feel how useful they are, however subordinate may be their position in the eyes of the world, I am sure family life would be far happier than it generally is, and the name of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ would be honoured. Domestic service would assume a higher place, and young girls of good character would be led to prefer such a life to the temptations and uncertainties which they have to meet in warerooms, shops, and factories.

MR. SPIERS AT WOOD GREEN.—On Friday last Mr. Josiah Spiers concluded a fortnight's special services for young people at the Gospel Hall, Wood Green, N. God has abundantly answered prayer, and many have been convicted of sin and led to trust Jesus. Some who at first were opposed to the meetings and personal conversation were, by the power of God's Spirit, constrained to confess themselves sinners, and on the spot to receive the Saviour. Children and adults from several miles around attended the meetings, and in many hearts which hitherto had been in darkness the light of life now shines. A small branch of the Scripture Union, which was already existing, has received a large accession to its membership as a result of the mission.

At Gresham Hall, Brixton, Messrs. Reginald Callender and Henry de Candole, of Christ's College, Cambridge, are holding a mission for young people until Sunday next.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE IN BELFAST.

Rev. Walter Riddell, of Magdalen Church, Belfast, one of the hon. clerical secretaries of Mr. Clarke's committee, writes to us with respect to his mission there, recently concluded:—

Our arrangements for the mission were by no means perfect. Mr. Clarke had to begin work in a wooden building, cold and comfortless, in the month of February, and situated at one end of the city, and not on the tramway line. Very few of the clergy appeared upon his platform. The first week was a trial of faith. Yet from the beginning the hall was fairly filled at the evening meetings; and from the first night there was blessing. Now that the mission is over, to say that it had been a great success would be to give a poor idea of the work done here through Mr. Clarke's instrumentality, and the great and solemn impression left upon our city. The interest manifested towards the close of the mission was something phenomenal. I am persuaded that seldom has it been given to any man to move the hearts of men as they were moved by Mr. Clarke on the last day of his mission.

I have heard it said that there is a very noticeable difference in the atmosphere of many of the workshops and warerooms throughout the city. The sense of God's presence seems to have been carried into them, and to pervade them. And amongst the upper classes the impression appears to be even greater. In my own parish I have to thank God for many who have decided to serve the Lord. About 700 names have been returned from the after-meetings. But, of course, this number does not represent a tithe of the results. Mr. Clarke carries with him the blessings and prayers of a great multitude. He is to resume work at Newtownards on April 20.

THE NAVVY MISSION SOCIETY, in its report for last year, expresses sincere thankfulness to the Giver of all good for the measure of success which continues to attend the labours of the missionaries. Eighteen stations were closed during the year, owing to the completion of works; and twenty new ones were opened. The latter do not include the stations on the Manchester Ship Canal. In some cases contractors not only render the Mission workers every facility to reach and influence the navvies, but generously pay the salaries of the missionaries. The expenditure during the year was £2348. The secretary of the Mission is Rev. F. E. Rogers, Abbey Walk, Cambridge.

In the Far East.*

The deeply interesting letters of Miss Geraldine Guinness, sent from China to her parents and friends at the East London Institute, have been edited in a very attractive volume by her sister, Miss Lucy E. Guinness. Embellished with a photograph of the missionary author, and a number of illustrations, the book presents the great needs of China in a vivid light, and gives some idea of the work that is being done for the enlightenment of the dark millions of the empire.

(A Journey by Boat.)

After describing the voyage, with its incidents and impressions, Miss Guinness relates the first experiences of herself and party in China. Having spent a day at Hong Kong, they proceeded to Shanghai, where European clothes were exchanged for the national Chinese costume. Leaving this first station of the China Inland Mission behind them, they travelled north two and a half days' journey, by steam tender, up the Yang-tsi River, to Yang-chau, a city of 300,000 inhabitants. The scene on arriving in thus described:—

"We drew up amidst a crowd of other boats, at the dirty mud-bank on which we were to land. A plank was put across from the edge of the boat to a place of safety half-way up this steep and slippery spot, and we made our way carefully across into the midst of a crowd of wondering, ragged, dirty on-lookers, collected to watch us land. Oh, how miserable and hopeless, how forlorn and wretched, the faces and figures that were gathered there! It had been raining, and the mud and dirt everywhere were indescribable, while the poverty and rags of the people were beyond anything I had ever conceived of at home. All this struck me in that first moment; but, still more, the hopeless, vacant expression on the faces. They were not all like that, however, and, remembering the nice boat-woman we had just left, and others, we were comforted.

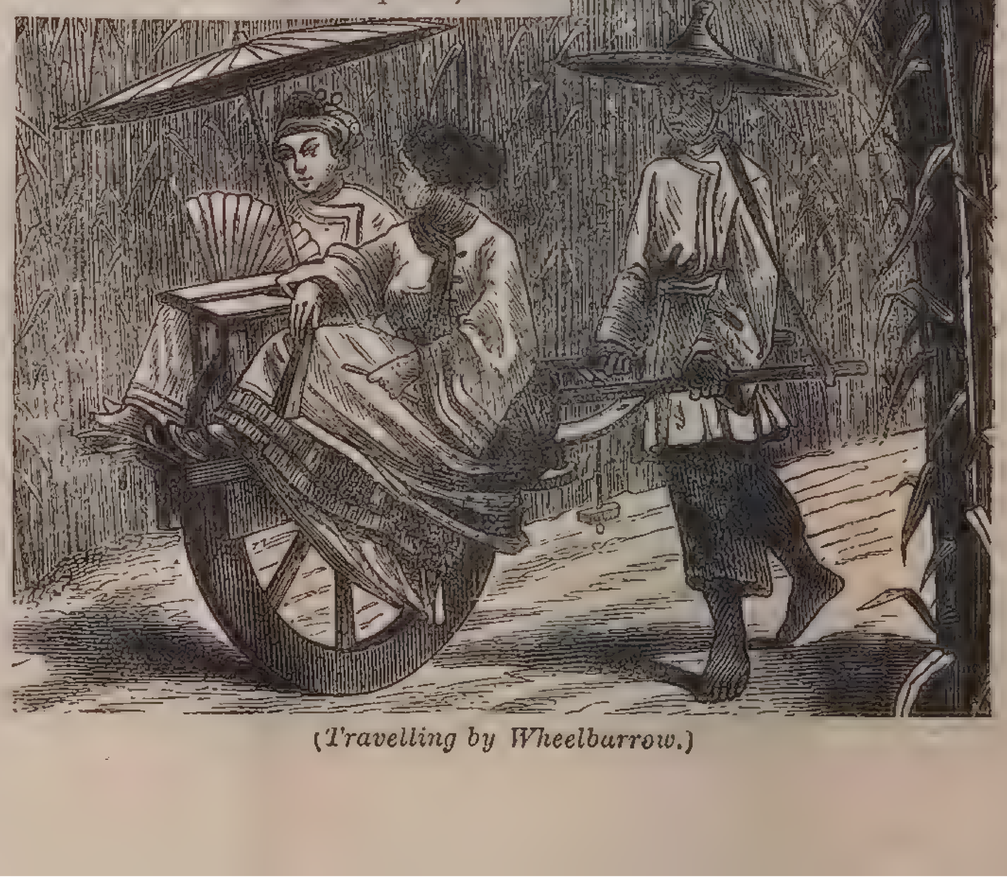
"Covered chairs were waiting for us at the top of the bank, and into them we stepped, and were borne away on the shoulders of the strong coolies who seemed to feel our weight no burden. Oh, the wonders of the narrow, tortuous, busy streets through which we passed! Endless and indescribable, they wind and twist about, revealing marvels at every turn to the unaccustomed eye. You expect all the time to come to something wider, but no; all, all the same—four, five, or six feet wide, but no more. Sometimes, as we passed along on that first journey, the way was so narrow that the chair almost touched the walls on both sides. At last we stopped at a smallish door in a blank wall, adjoining quite a nice, friendly looking, little chapel front, which we easily guessed to be the Jesus Hall, or the Pi-shi-kai. The kind welcome we received here soon made us quite at home with our friends, and in a little while we were seated with them at table, feeling no longer as strangers in a strange land."

Thus graphically Miss Guinness tells her story. The order of public worship is described, also a mothers' meeting. A chapter on "Opium Suicides among Women" has a peculiarly pathetic interest. In order to become, as far as possible, a native, by not only learning the language of the lips but the language of the hearts of the people, Miss Guinness, accompanied by three other missionaries, after a brief stay at Yang-chau, left the training-home, with its twenty or thirty English-speaking sisters, for the more decidedly Chinese surroundings of Tsing-kiang-pu, and of a farm-house near Antong. Taking one Christian lad as escort, the young ladies started in their own hired boat on a ten days' journey up the Grand Canal. The people ran from every quarter to see the strangers and hear what they had to say. In the midst of difficulty, and in view of the spiritual destitution raging on every hand, Miss Guinness wrote in the month of May:—

"Help me to thank and praise God for ever having brought me here to China. He is very, very near here in this distant land. The Lord is giving us, we are thankful to say, some measure of success with the language. We have been at work now three weeks, and on Sunday last a few words I was enabled to say in visiting were actually understood by the dear women to whom they were addressed. Imagine my joy!"

From Tsing-kiang-pu to Antong was a wheelbarrow journey. Villages and towns were passed, in which the glad name of Jesus was altogether unknown. Arrived at Antong, the missionaries began earnestly to look up the people. A visit to a large farm is thus related:—

"As soon as we were observed approaching, the people began to gather from all the fields around, and other houses, quite a nice company. The open space in front of the buildings was beautifully clean, the hard, smooth surface of clay being carefully swept for treading corn, &c. Here they brought out benches, and pressed us to be seated, and here the women gathered about us, coming up quite close, stroking and holding our hands, and giving me their babies to nurse, while L—— (Miss Lottie McFarlane) talked to them, and we sang. How bright, simple, and loving the people were! The men formed an outer circle, and in about ten minutes we must have had from forty to fifty grown-up people around us, besides many children, and this in the depths of the quiet country, at least three miles from any village, without our seeking to gather them in any way.



"We remained here about an hour, the interest in our message being remarkably sustained and intelligent most of the time; and then went on to the next little group of houses, guided by several of the women. Here we had a repetition of our first experiences, except that the numbers were not quite so large. Dear people, they were so kind! After we had been some time with them, they insisted on bringing us tea and eggs. These we of course accepted, and ate with chop-sticks and composure, eagerly watched by all the household."

The home life of the people is admirably delineated, and the pages tell of blessing to the worker, as well as promise of profit to those among whom the light of life is thus being disseminated.

Leaving Antong, Miss Guinness returned to Yang-chau with Miss Mary Reed, and when the diary closes we find her at Poyang, in the province of Kiang-si. Looking back upon what she had experienced, Miss Guinness wrote in October last:—

"If ever there was a time when China thirsted for the Gospel, that time is now! The door of opportunity seems to be flung just widely open. I am glad I am in China, by God's grace. May He call and send many another."

This also is our prayer, and we trust that In the Far East will be used of God in calling many to find their sphere of active Christian labour.

Letter to the Editor.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.

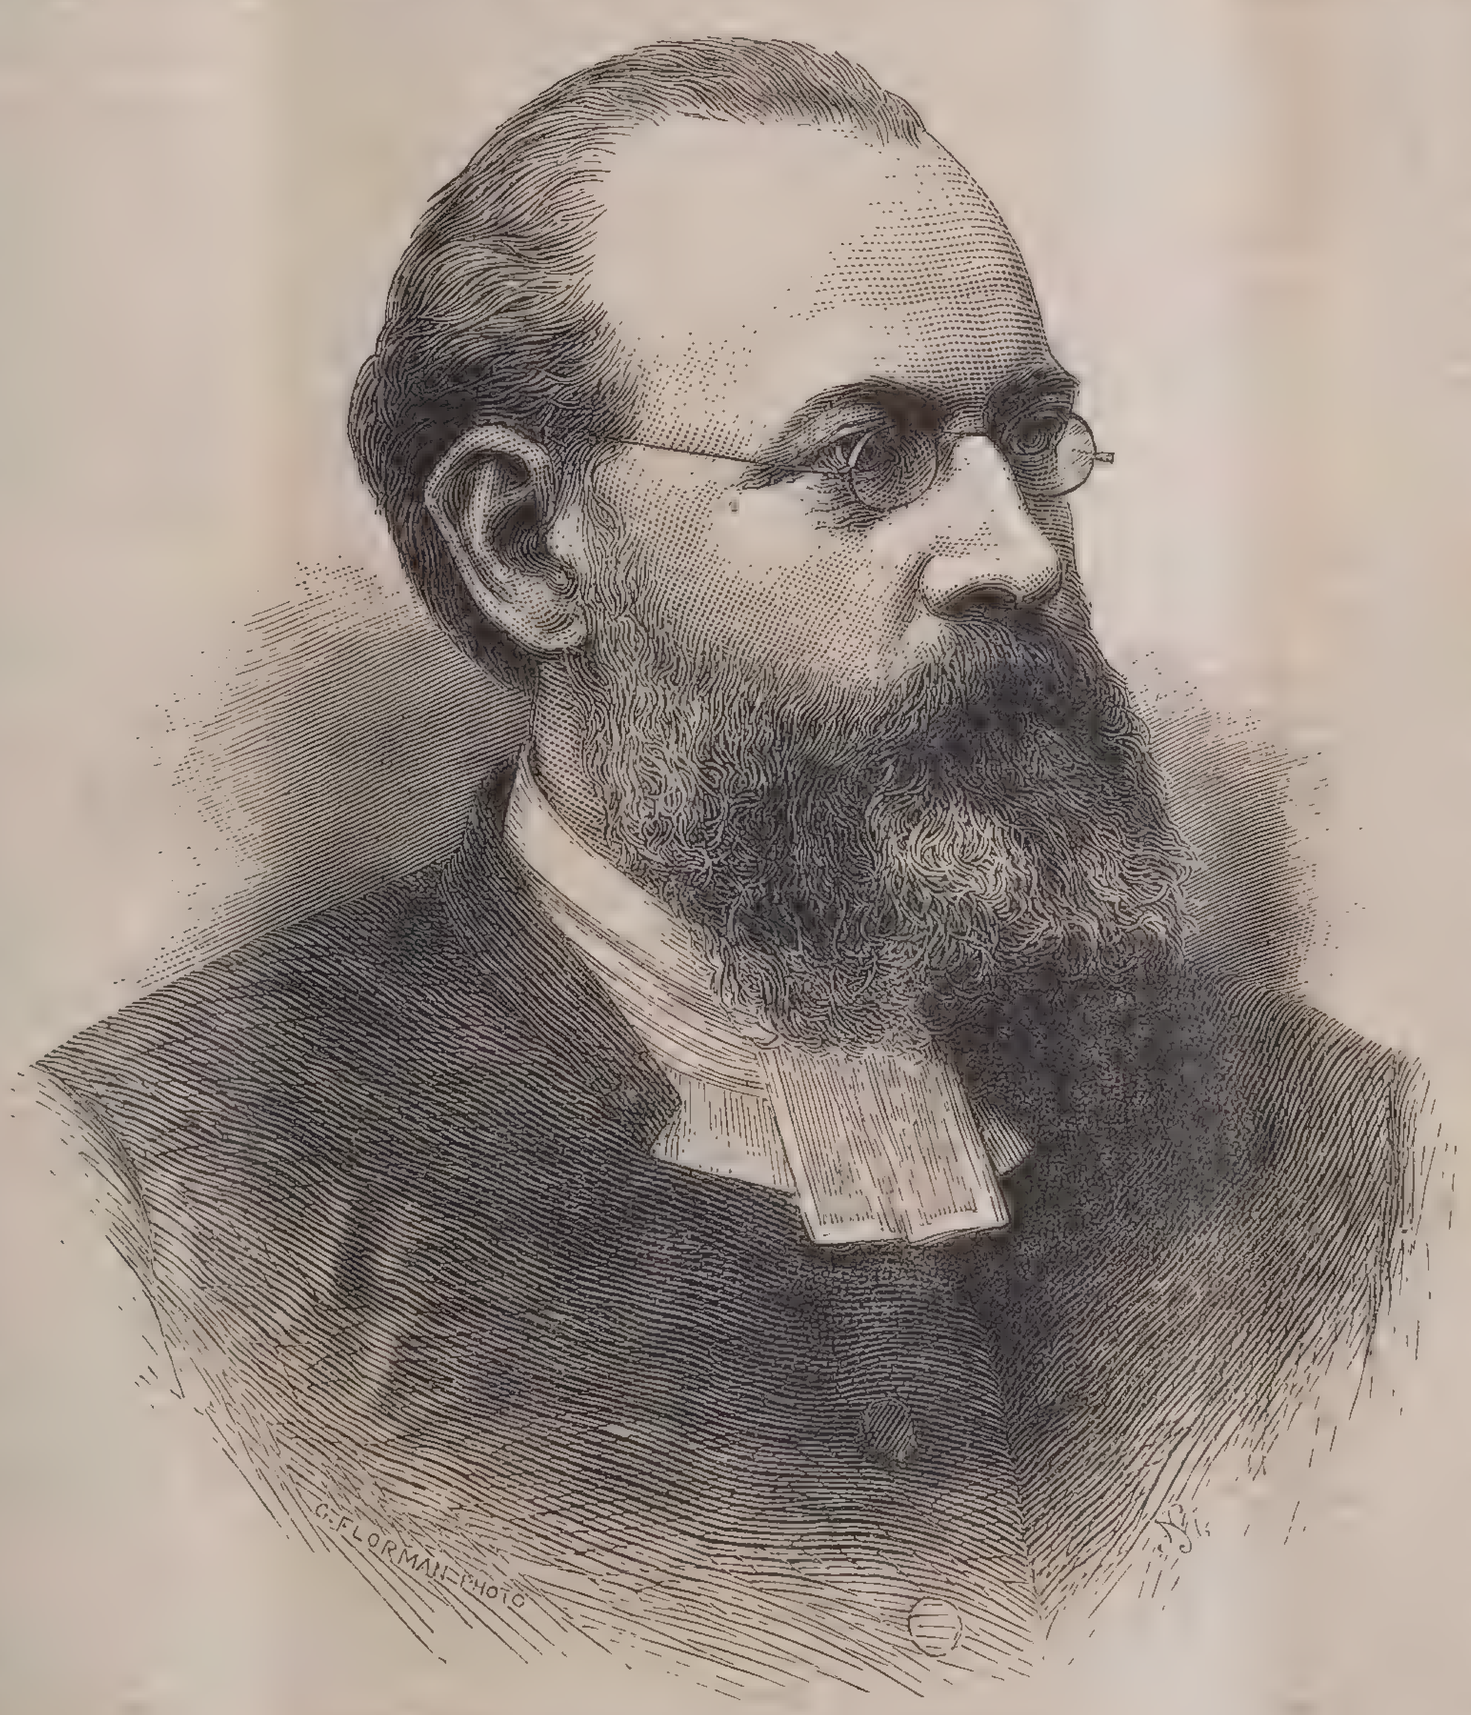
My Dear Sir,—Your readers will be glad to know that Sir Joseph W. Pease, M.P., has placed the following notice of motion on the paper of the House of Commons:—

"East India (Opium Revenue),—That this House is of opinion that the system by which a large portion of the Indian Opium Revenue is raised is financially unsound and morally indefensible; and it would urge upon the Indian Government that they should cease to grant licences for the cultivation of the poppy, except to supply the legitimate demand for opium for medical purposes."

This is clear, bold, and consistent; and it is cause for deep thankfulness that the Parliamentary leader of the movement should have taken up such high ground. I trust that all who are sensible of the greatness of our national sin in this matter will join in earnest prayer to God that He will bless this effort. Such successes as have in the last few years been vouchsafed, in answer to prayer, on questions of purity and temperance—the most recent being the satisfactory division on the Sunday Closing Bill—should encourage us all to believing prayer that the hearts of our legislators may be inclined to support this motion in favour of governing India in accordance with the unchangeable laws of Christian justice and morality.

A day is not yet fixed for the motion: let us pray that, if it please God, a favourable one may be secured.—Yours truly,

Bridwold, Croydon. Joseph G. Alexander.



"HASTINGS HOUSE" HOME FOR ORPHANS,

Rusthall, near Tunbridge Wells, continues to prove a blessing to many of those in whose interest it was founded nine years ago. Prior to last Michaelmas the Home was situate at Hastings. Though the removal was regretted in that town, many new friends were soon made at Rusthall. Designed for the orphan children of professional men, and people of the educated classes, altogether fifty-eight girls have been admitted. There are now twenty-four children in the Homes, their ages ranging from five to seventeen years. They receive a liberal education, relatives who are able being expected to contribute. The great aim is to lead the children to Christ, and equip them for his service. During last year £986 was received for the work. Communications should be addressed to Miss Sharman, 20, West-square, S.E.

REV. GUSTAF E. BESKOW,
STOCKHOLM.

NEXT to England and Northern Germany, the principles of Protestantism have no doubt taken deepest root in the Scandinavian north. This is especially true of Sweden, from which country the great Gustavus Adolphus went out, and, by the help of God, succeeded in checking the threatening progress of Rome. In the middle of this century also there spread over the country a mighty revival, which kindled a love of the Gospel and a zeal for its spread, both at home and abroad, which have powerfully influenced many relations of life.

During the Conference of the Y.M.C.A. held last summer in Stockholm the Christians from foreign lands who took part in it must have felt a refreshing breath of that Spirit who in Sweden has given life to the dead bones and opened hearts to the foreign brethren in the faith. Among those who took a lively interest in the Conference was the Rev. G. Beskow, himself a fruit of the revival alluded to and a strenuous promoter of it.

(From Photograph by Gosta Florman, Stockholm.)

Mr. Beskow was born in 1834 in Stockholm, and is descended from two wealthy mercantile families. At first his inclination leaned towards the naval service, and he entered a military academy. After a time he entered the University of Upsala, and studied medicine. But God had other plans for him. Like so many servants of Christ, he had a pious mother, long the only member of her large family connection who had found her Saviour. The son describes his first serious impression of the Word of God thus :—

> On Good Friday, 1852, I went with my mother to a parish church in Stockholm where an evangelical clergyman preached. I went there for her sake, for I always found it exceedingly wearisome at church. When the preacher began eloquently to expound his text I was arrested by the streams of living water which seemed to flow over the thirsty souls. He described the happiness of the children of God. I thought to myself, "I am no child of God; that is not for me." Then he spoke of publicans and sinners, and I thought, I am one among them, and now we shall no doubt hear the judgment that we deserve. Instead of this, he began to expatiate on what Christ had done and suffered for sinners and the ungodly. I listened, and there and then received Christ. Life streamed into my dead soul. In the midst of my joy, the preacher, to my great surprise, pronounced Amen. I had never found the time flying away so fast in church before. The next day I bought my first Bible, and the Bible has ever since been my companion.

Soon, however, a time of spiritual darkness, a time of powerful temptations and distressing doubts, began for the young man, and lasted for two years. At length he came to look upon himself as a lost soul. Through the visit of a young Christian friend in 1854 he was restored to faith in Christ. God gave him a peace which has never since left him.

He decided to study for the ministry, and passed his examination in 1857. In the autumn of 1859 he undertook a journey to Egypt and Palestine, of which he has published a very popular description. On his return he preached with great success and warmth in several of the churches of Stockholm. Seeing the numbers of people who tried in vain to get into Bethlehem Church, the well-known chapel which was built by the Wesleyan minister, Rev. G. Scott, and which for many years was the chief resort of the friends of the Gospel, the idea struck him that Stockholm needed a larger church, which might be opened for meetings; and he laid the matter before the Lord. Next year he was called to London to preach to the Scandinavians visiting the Great Exhibition, and attended a service in Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle; the thought occurred to him that if he should ever be the means of giving Stockholm a new church, it should be built on the same plan as the Tabernacle. In the spring of 1864 the casual remark of a friend set in motion a train of providential circumstances that led to his entering heartily on the scheme. Many difficulties were met with, but he persevered in faith and prayer. A site was found to be available on exceptionally favourable terms. The pastor felt that the hand of the Lord was so manifest in the movement that he resolved to proceed, though he had only received the promises of 20,000 kroner for the erection of a building which would cost 180,000 kroner, besides the price of the site. Help flowed in, and the great building was eventually put up. While he wished the church to be connected with the Established Lutheran Church, he earniestly desired the nomination of its pastor to be in the hands of a special committee of evangelical clergymen and laymen, and not in those of the Consistory. As this was the first attempt of the kind, many obstacles had to be removed. At last Government gave its assent, and the church was consecrated in 1868. Since then Pastor Beskow has had an attentive congregation every Sunday, and often on other days of the week, of between 4000 and 5000 people, to whom he has unwearyingly proclaimed the Gospel. In this church the meetings of the Y.M.C.A. Conference were held last year.

The pastor has taken an active part in a great many of the evangelistic efforts that have sprung up in Sweden of late years. As he wished to influence the young he established a private school, where he long conducted the religious instruction, and which gained such credit that King Oscar, then Duke of Östergötland, placed his four sons there. Since then he has ever been treated by the Royal Family of Sweden as a friend and adviser. When, in March of 1888, the King's second son, Prince Oscar, was about to celebrate his marriage with Fröken Ebbe Munk at Bournemouth, Pastor Beskow was the clergyman chosen to perform the ceremony, for which purpose he paid a short visit to England.

The pastor is still at his post, preaching the simple, unvarnished Gospel clearly and intelligibly, holding Bible-classes, and visiting continually the sick and dying—the Lord owning his work by frequent conversions. We pray that many such pastors may be raised up in Scandinavian lands.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

The McAll work in Paris needs no commendation from my pen. Its history, its successes, and its blessed fruits are now widely known. That Paris, a city of shameless vice and brazen immoralities, should be belted with more than forty halls where Christ is preached, ought to be a cause for universal praise. It was a pathetic sight, on Sunday evening, that of the venerable founder of this great Mission, after a two-mile walk from the Rue Royale Conference, pouring out his heart in earnest pleading with the people. That meeting was held in the Salle Dods, a neat, comfortable chapel capable of seating 300 persons. The memory of Mr. Dods is precious to many in the Passage Forgeat, where this hall is located.

* * * *

Having met with pastors and missionaries both socially and at work, I have been impressed with the vastness of this Mission, and of its future possibilities. Mr. McAll has planned for special effort on a large scale in view of the approaching Exhibition this summer. An influx of visitors numbering thirty millions is looked for, and the friends of the Mission are alive to the great and grave responsibility of testifying among these millions the soul-saving Gospel of Christ. Major Whittle and Mr. Sankey are expected to help in this campaign.

Miss de Broen's Mission at Belleville is one of peculiar interest, and of no minor importance. Arriving early in the morning, I found the Iron Chapel filled with patients. Many of them came from surrounding villages to seek physical aid. This was not withheld, whilst also spiritual comfort was administered. Thousands of these poor people pass through this Medical Mission yearly. Miss de Broen, Dr. Roberts, and the staff of fellow-workers, are taking many fish out of this deep, dark sea. Miss de Broen opened a new Salle in Rue St. Honoré during our visit. On the day of dedication many friends of other missions were present, expressing their joy that yet another place was prepared for the further prosecution of Gospel work.

In the Imperial City of Rome we found many diligent workers. The English services are generally well attended, while pastors and missionaries mourn over the indifference of the Italian people. They are hard to reach and difficult to arouse; yet from among these, also, there are precious trophies of grace. Mr. and Mrs. Wall continue their aggressive methods to reach the lowest; Dr. Taylor's evangelism embraces many stations, with their respective evangelists; Dr. Young's medical mission and helpers hold the fort in what is left of the Ghetto; while Major Colquhoun has unfurled the flag in the heart of the city, where he looks after newsboys and cabmen. Our daily services were held in his new hall, which has already become a rallying-place for Christians in Rome. Many others are also seeking to save some. The old city is fast passing away, new buildings are appearing as if by magic, and Rome now wears the dress of a modern city, throbbing with the life of Western enterprise and speculation.

The meetings in the Scotch Church at Naples were very happy. Here we met old friends and new. The Italian service was of thrilling interest, the native Christians expressing themselves with every joyful demonstration at the close. We would lovingly urge the churches of England and America to share in Continental evangelism with their bounty, and, above all, with their prayers.

It was deeply affecting to visit Puteoli, where the feet of Paul pressed the soil as he journeyed over the Appian Way to Rome. We were interested in the traditional places in Rome of imprisonment and execution, but to gaze on the same sea and land on which he looked, and know that he had landed by this breakwater, brought him more to our minds as a real man who wept and prayed, who preached and suffered—the blessed Paul, missionary, hero, martyr, conqueror. GIRLS' GUILD OF GOOD LIFE.

Many agencies have sprung from the work originally started at Hoxton Hall, but among them all there is not one that deserves heartier commendation than the "Girls' Guild of Good Life," founded and conducted so ably by Mrs. J. T. Rae. The "Guild" was formed at the close of the year 1885; the present membership is 805, and 1000 girls have passed through the register. This is a noble record: the bare figures represent, to a sympathetic mind, an amount of careful work and loving, personal attention amongst the girls. The object is to attract them from the music-halls, public-houses, dancing-saloons, and other low resorts, and prove to them that true happiness can only be secured away from such degrading associations. The results, as the report showed, have been eminently satisfactory, and evidences of thorough reformation of character amongst the girls are not wanting. There is a visiting committee, and the members receive instruction in dressmaking, domestic economy, nursing, music, and hygiene. In this way the sympathies of the girls are won, and they are led to think of higher things.

The "Guild" held its annual meeting on Tuesday, April 2, and Hoxton Hall was filled to overflowing. The body of the hall was occupied, save one row of forms, by the girls themselves—thoroughly happy, and ready to applaud heartily every good thing spoken during the evening. Mr. William Isaac Palmer, of Reading, presided. Mr. W. P. Goulding, on Mrs. Rae's behalf, gave an outline of the work of the year. The average attendance at the Guild meetings during last month was 300.

Professor Stuart expressed his heartiest sympathy for the work of the Guild, and all the agencies at Hoxton, recognising the good they effected in the district. Canon Barker, adopting a pleasant conversational tone, completely won the sympathies of the girls and the whole audience, by an earnest address, in which he showed a high appreciation of the work. If they could only influence the womanhood of London in the right direction—to chastity, and every womanly virtue—our social wrongs would soon be righted. One good woman has ten times the influence for good that a man has. The Canon created a deep impression by his address, marked as it was by delicate Christian outspokenness. Lady Dundas (Sister Christian) gave the girls some excellent advice, and urged their attention to spiritual affairs.

The "Guild" presented the chairman with an illuminated address, enclosed in a handsome casket, and their president (Mrs. Rae) with a basket of choice flowers. The girls gave very emphatic protestations of their esteem and affection for Mrs. Rae. Various friends rendered an excellent musical programme, and the proceedings closed with hearty expressions of thanks to the chairman and others.

CHINA.—Mr. W. Hope Gill writes from the city of Pacheo, West China, on Christmas Eve, expressing great thankfulness to God that a request for prayer inserted some time previously in our columns has been answered—viz., that the Lord would open up more cities in that part of China to the Gospel. Four cities now each possess a Gospel hall, where the word of life is proclaimed, and Mr. Gill is full of hope that from these encouraging beginnings still greater things will be seen.

"TAKE NO THOUGHT"

(i.e., no anxious thought.—Matt. vi. 26, cf. R.V.).

An answer to the verses asking, "How can we Take No Thought?" in THE CHRISTIAN for March 15.

Dear Lord, we find it hard to understand ["birds,"
How we—who are not "flowers," nor "grass," nor
But men, who live by toil of head or hand—
Can really rest on these mysterious words.

How can we, like unreasoning, lifeless things,
Just live, content to be, from hour to hour?
Thou wouldst not take away thine own high gift
Of forethought and of conscious reasoning power?

Yet, Lord, since Thou hast said, "Take ye no thought—
No anxious thought—for money, clothes, or food,"
We may be sure that what Thyself hast taught
In very truth is for thy children's good.

And if we deeper delve into thy Word,
We find, O Lord, that Thou wouldst have us be,
Not foolish, weak, neglectful of our own,
But bringing each and every care to Thee;

Claiming that Thou, our loving Father-God,
Who car'st for all the needs of bird and flower,
Clothing with beauty e'en the grassy sod,
Wilt see thy children's needs from hour to hour.

And if we pray that Thou wouldst "undertake"
The plan of life for us and ours each day,
Ah! then there is no need for us to make
Our lives a weariness with planning out our way.

The only "thought" that we need care to "take"
Is that we keep so very near thy side
That nothing can our firm assurance shake,
That for our every want Thou wilt provide.

Knowing that as Thou giv'st to flower and bird
That ask not, nor can even feel their need,
How much more shall the longing voice be heard
Of thine own children who thy promise plead.

WORK IN ROME.

Dear Sir,—We lately had with us for a few days Mr. George C. Needham, and Christians in Rome were much refreshed through the meetings held. Towards the end of April, Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, and Rev. Evan Hopkins, of Richmond, will visit Rome for the purpose of conference on the higher Christian life. Such coming together on the part of Christian workers and others must be productive of untold good.

In our new hall, 6, Via Marco Minghetti, we have been enabled, with the co-operation of the various brethren, to conduct an English evangelistic service on Sunday evenings all through the winter. Four meetings a week are also being held for Italians. These have taken the new form of classes, to which the newsvenders and the cabmen of Rome are separately invited. They have come in as large numbers as we could conveniently deal with. They are exceedingly orderly and friendly, and demonstrate in a marked way their appreciation of the Gospel instruction communicated. Several of the cabmen have brought their boys, who now form a class by themselves, under the instruction of lady workers.—Yours faithfully, A. S. D. Colquhoun,
Roman Evangelistic Mission.

THREE LITTLE GIRLS, living near Manchester, under eleven years of age, got up a sale of work on behalf of a London philanthropic institution, and realised £24.

MILDMAY CONSUMPTIVE HOMES, TORQUAY is an admirable institution. Situated on the Bronshill-road ("Smyrna" House), it is intended for patients who are so advanced in the disease as to be ineligible at Convalescent Homes. Yet it is not exclusively for those who are dying, but rather for such as bid fair to rally after rest and treatment under highly favourable conditions as to climate. Inquiries should be addressed to the hon. sec., Miss F. Gumbleton, Connemara, Middle Warberry, Torquay.

Y.M.C.A. ANNIVERSARIES.

ISLINGTON AND HIGHBURY.

THIS is probably among the smaller and quieter branches of Association work in London. At any rate, its annual meeting is always a very enjoyable occasion; there is a kind of homely, family air about it. This year the usual place of meeting (Myddelton Hall) was unavailable for the evening, and the meeting was transferred to Highbury-hill Chapel. It certainly lost nothing by the change. We think it likely that many of the large audience were drawn by the desire to see and hear our new London light, Rev. John McNeill. They had their reward, and the proceedings altogether were of the heartiest description.

The report of Mr. ATKINSON, the now venerable secretary, was full of warmth and poetic glow as usual, though at the outset it struck a sombre note of regret at the demise of some long-tried friends and helpers. The various agencies of the Association—the Bible class, the evangelistic meeting, the tract work, the open-air mission, and the weekly seasons of private conversation with the secretary, were all touched on. There is also a class for policemen. Not the least touching part of the record was the testimony borne by letter from distant friends as to the spiritual blessing gained by the writers through their connection with the Priory. The treasurer's balance sheet, we are sorry to say, showed a deficit of some £140, which we trust that the collection substantially reduced.

All the speeches were well to the point. Mr. HUGH MATHESON, as chairman, could speak from fifty years' experience of Christian work, so that his exhortations to continuance in the study of the Scriptures, and perseverance in prayer, came with due weight. In speaking of the Priory, he said he could not help alluding to the late Mr. Sands, whose friendship he first formed there, and whose saintly life was an inspiration to all who knew him. Mr. Matheson hinted that at one time he was not so greatly enamoured of some of the Y.M.C. Associations in London, but he had followed their course with a good deal of attention, and now he was not acquainted with any that did not put in the forefront of its work the winning of young men to Christ, and the setting them on the right track.

A very happy little speech followed from Dr. EDMOND, of Highbury Presbyterian Church. The good doctor is well stricken in years, but he seems as youthful in heart as the youngest of his contemporaries. He recalled three recorded occasions when our Lord, during his earthly ministry came into contact with young men. The first was when he roused to life the young son of the widow at Nain. If (said the speaker) we could really grasp the thought of so many dead souls round about us as we mingle with the city crowds, "no sheeted ghosts would scare us half so much." Would that Christ might say unto them, "Young men, arise!" The case of the young man who followed the company that arrested the Saviour, and who fled, leaving his mantle behind, suggested the lesson that those who desire to follow Christ must count the cost. Then the incident of the rich young ruler was shown to be full of warning, though there is the consoling thought that Jesus loved him, despite his failure to stand the test. Dr. Edmond closed by saying that as young men nowadays have so many advantages, it is small thanks to them if they are better than their forefathers.

Rev. JOHN MCNEILL'S address was mainly an admirable monograph on Daniel's fidelity to his God in the matter of prayer. The old familiar story was retold in the speaker's most graphic and vivacious way, and its lessons closely applied. Christian young men in London need to cultivate the habit of prayer. A vague theistic belief in a Supreme Being won't do. What is a Supreme Being? It may be nothing more than a mere arrangement of the letters of the alphabet. Neither is it enough to believe in a vague Humanitarianism, with a capital H. You cannot construct a Deity out of any combination of capitals; the only real Deity is God the Father who has revealed Himself through Jesus Christ the Son. In our Y.M.C. Associations, with all our modern privileges and all our Gospel light, how many Daniels are there; how many who stand up for Jesus; who keep up habits of personal and private prayer? Do not say that the claims of business nowadays leave no time for prayer. There is no busier man in Lombard-street to-day than Daniel was. In the course of his address Mr. McNeill made some apt quotatious from the poet Burns, one of which said that "self-control is wisdom's root." Well would it have been for Burns if he had practised his own sermons. Where can a young man get this "self-control"? Where Daniel got it. The fear of God is the beginning, the middle, and the end of wisdom. Daniel feared God, and therefore he had no other fear. God enabled him to stand firm and to rise superior to every temptation. Young men to-day need to fight Daniel's battle and gain his victory every day they rise.

Some closing words came from Rev. W. H. KING, the pastor of the church. He said he believed there were men and women in London to-day as heroic as any of the famed heroes of the older time. He followed up the same line of thought as to the importance of prayer, giving also a pathetic quotation from the Scottish poet as to how religion may be forgotten when all goes gaily, but—

> ...When on life we're tempest driven,
> A conscience but a canker,
> A correspondence fixed wi' heaven
> Is sure a noble anchor!

CHELSEA, BROMPTON, AND BELGRAVE.

The annual meeting of this branch was lately held at the rooms, 112, Brompton-road. Lieut.-Gen. Sir R. Phayre presided, and Rev. Chas. Moinet addressed the meeting. The hands of the committee of this branch need strengthening in various ways, which willing hearts may learn from the Secretary. Situated in one of the busiest thoroughfares in London, we hope Christians around will rally to the continued support of the work.

HACKNEY.

The annual meeting of this branch took place on Tuesday last week, at the Institute in Mare-street. A public meeting was presided over by Mr. J. McCall. Mr. Porter (secretary) read the annual report, which gave gratifying details of the work accomplished. Since their establishment 561 young men had joined, 139 of whom had become members during the past twelve months. The work continued to be carried on with zeal. Last year a body of the members left London, and pitched their tents on the shores of the Bristol Channel, not only for healthful recreation, but for spiritual effort; this year they intended sojourning on the Eastern Coast. The several educational classes were making progress, and a gymnastic class for ladies had been introduced. What they tried to do was to draw young men together, and act as a feeder to the churches. Mr. Porter concluded by giving several striking instances of reformation among young fellows who had been led to join the Association. Subsequently another public meeting was held, at which several speeches appropriate to the occasion were delivered.

"CONTENTMENT."—A poem with this title appeared in our issue of last week. It was sent to us in MS. by a correspondent who attributed its authorship to a friend, whose signature, "Bertie," was attached to the poem. We now learn that our correspondent is mistaken, and that the writer of the verses is Miss M. Jennie Street, of Kennington. The poem was composed by her in December, 1887, and was published in card form in January, 1888. We regret having been misled in the matter by our correspondent.

Northern Light.

IN that bright little evangelical monthly, The Reaper, a desire was expressed for consecrated young women, willing and qualified to join Miss Nairn in her mission work at Mogador, Morocco. Several have responded, and one, well known to Miss Nairn, has been selected.

Near Edinburgh, at Eskbank, a House of Rest, specially adapted to the wants of worn-out Christian workers, has been opened by Mrs. Grant, who for many years was engaged in mission work both at home and abroad. English, Irish, and Scottish workers have taken advantage of the Rest.

At Lanark an address on African missions awakened much interest last week. The speaker was Mrs. Young, of Main, Lembuland; she is the daughter of a missionary who journeyed to the Dark Continent in 1827, where she was born.

An imposing demonstration of Bands of Hope and Boys' Brigades has taken place in Aberdeen, under the auspices of the Free Church. The experiment was a happy one.

The Vale of Leven is fortunate in possessing so many men and women whose thought for others proves the real Christlike spirit. Two noted benefactors of the working classes are Mr. and Mrs. Gilmour, who have gifted to Alexandria first a Young Men's Institute and now a Young Women's—the latter being particularly Mrs. Gilmour's gift. On a munificent scale this lady has provided an enduring source of happiness for her own sex. The Young Women's Institute will include baths, reading, recreation, and instruction-rooms, tennis courts, and a library containing 3000 books. The twin institutes will cost £30,000.

Many Scottish towns have abolished the "Fast Day," preparatory to the Communion. Arbroath clings to it. The meagre church attendance, however, showed that the old institution is falling into decay there as well as elsewhere.

Rev. Sholto Douglas commanded much attenton at the Lanarkshire Christian Conference at Hamilton. He gave evidence of a very hearty sympathy with the phase of religious thought and life usually associated with revivalism. From 1200 to 1500 persons, men predominating, attended the conference.

Dr. Pentecost's mission continues in South Glasgow. The evangelist preached in Claremont Church last Sabbath forenoon.

LUKE NORTH.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—Rev. W. F. Gooch gave a helpful address at the workers' meeting here last Friday on "Vexing the Midianites." Mr. Isaac, the secretary, appealed for helpers in the work of visiting the sailors' boarding-houses. Mr. T. H. Morris, Dr. Walter Fisher, and Mr. Hall, all of whom are destined for mission work in Africa, told of the Lord's leadings in connection with this service.

THE STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE.—The large assembly of collectors who met Mr. Spurgeon at the Stockwell Orphanage on Friday evening were naturally glad to see their president enjoying such apparently good health; and by the time that the meeting came to an end, just before nine o'clock, all must have felt stimulated to prosecute with new zeal the work to which they had set their hand. In his prayer, Mr. Spurgeon acknowledged the wonderful goodness of the Lord in preserving the children of the Orphanage from disease at a time when sickness was all around them. He also expressed gratitude for those, who, having been trained in the Orphanage were then out in the world engaged in the service of Christ. Addresses were given by Rev. Frank M. Smith, Rev. G. D. Hooper (Hendon), Mr. B. Clarke, Mr. Charlesworth, Mr. Boutle, an "old boy," and Mr. Spurgeon. The collection amounted to about £160.

CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE.

That the Christian Colportage Association for England continues to do a really good work was made very clear at the fifteenth annual meeting, which was held on Friday last in the Mansion House. The Lord Mayor presided, and many testimonies were borne to the high objects and earnest endeavours of the Association.

Once again the spacious Egyptian Hall was filled with an audience zealous for the cause of God and truth. Mr. H. D. Brown, secretary, presented a digest of the report, which very appropriately began with a note of thankfulness for opportunities and blessing. The colporteurs circulated during the year nearly three quarters of a million of Bibles, Testaments, and Christian books and magazines. By this means something was done to counteract the great evil resulting from the enormous circulation of hurtful literature in the country. Getting into conversation with the people, the colporteurs have grand opportunities to present the Gospel to them, and these occasions are duly improved. In the wealthier parts of London, a specially interesting work goes on among domestic servants, while in country villages great good has resulted from the introduction of the Bible and wholesome literature into homes where that which was holy and useful had previously been unknown. The Association has at present ninety-five colporteurs, and it is hoped soon to be able to increase the number, in harmony with the truly aggressive character of the work.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe delivered a hearty address. He spoke of the great need for Christian colportage, in view of the wide dissemination of books and papers opposed to morality and decency. Going from house to house, from man to man, in the true Scriptural fashion, the workers do much towards counteracting the fearful mischief wrought by the unwholesome literature of the day. Having spoken of the extent to which the trade in harmful books is carried on, Mr. Webb-Peploe indicated a way in which patient ladies of spiritual mind may render an important service to humanity. Let them learn where the shops are in their districts at which filthy literature is sold, and introduce to the dealers' notice something better, undertaking at the same time to bear part of any loss that may for a time be incurred. Almost in every case the vendors will be found ready to receive pure literature, and in a short time there will be cause for rejoicing that the evil has given place to the good. Having referred to the degradation of Sunday in the West-end of London, Mr. Webb-Peploe expressed a hope that the diffusion of pure literature among the servants will lead them to realise their privileges, and refuse to work at balls held on Sundays.

Mr. T. A. Denny advised such as are able, personally to equip a colporteur, and interest themselves in his work. Where unable, individually, to take sole responsibility, two or three Christian people may combine, and have their own colporteur, the arrangements being left to the Association.

Rev. J. McNeill followed with an address full of sympathy with the work. He spoke of what he had seen of the ministry of colportage in Scotland, and invoked God's rich blessing upon the operations of the Association. Brief addresses followed by Mr. Hugh Matheson, Rev. W. Stott, and Messrs. H. W. Maynard and R. Paton. Almost as a matter of course, the several speakers incidentally acknowledged the kindness of the Lord Mayor in granting the use of the Mansion House for the meetings, and some expressed a hope that his successors would walk in his footsteps by lending a helping hand to agencies and movements for the elevation of the people and the dissemination of the truth of God.

In some concluding remarks, the Lord Mayor expressed his cordial sympathy with the Association and its work. Referring to the traffic in immoral literature, he said that women hawkers and fortune-tellers largely engage in it. We echo the Lord Mayor's hope that the Association will in future receive increased support, not only because it has strong claims upon all who seek the good of the people, but because it introduces the Gospel into homes where otherwise it would not be known.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.

On Sunday week a large number of ministers preached special sermons in reference to the completion that day by the Children's Scripture Union of the first decade of its existence. On the following Tuesday the tenth anniversary was celebrated, the meetings being held this year in Princes Hall, Piccadilly, which both afternoon and evening was crowded to its utmost capacity, friends from all parts of the country being present.

Rev. E. A. Stuart, president of the Union, occupied the chair at the afternoon gathering. Basing his remarks upon the words of the Apostle to Timothy, "From a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures," he forcibly urged the importance of encouraging young people to read and study the Word of God.

Mr. T. B. Bishop, the hon. secretary, did not present a formal report, but mentioned some encouraging facts, showing how the Scripture Union is making headway, and proving an untold blessing to thousands of young people in all quarters of the globe. The progress being made in India and Japan was particularly referred to, and an extract was read from a letter from Rev. W. G. Brockway, of Calcutta, the secretary of the Bengal Agency, showing how actively the work of multiplying the number of members and branches is being prosecuted in Northern India. It was resolved to carry out a suggestion of Mr. Brockway, to send a letter of greeting from that meeting to all branches of the Union everywhere.

Mrs. Evered-Poole specially addressed Scripture Union workers. She laid stress upon the fact that if they would efficiently serve God they must themselves be living in constant communion with the Holy Spirit, and urged them to keep continually in view the definite conversion of the young. Revs. Taylor Smith and W. Fuller Gooch also briefly addressed the workers.

In the evening Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson presided, and delivered an address in which he expressed his warm sympathy with all such endeavours to promote the study of the Scriptures. The need for continual prayer to God for the work was again emphasised by Mr. Bishop.

Mr. E. N. Sharpe gave some account of the work in public schools, and Rev. L. S. Trousdale, of St. Andrew's, Old Kent-road, spoke of a mission recently held in his parish, where there is a fifteen months' old branch of the Scripture Union, with 200 members. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith said that he invariably finds, in holding missions to young people, that the services are most successful where there has been a branch of the Scripture Union in existence in the district, and similar testimony was borne by Mr. H. Hutchinson. Mr. T. H. Davies gave a cheering account of the good being wrought through branches which he was the means of starting in Southport and in the Sandwich Islands, and related several incidents demonstrating the utility of the work. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes pointed out that, in connection with every branch of the Union, it was very advisable to hold periodical meetings of the members at least once a month. In many places this has been found a great help in banding the members together, and not a few have, through attending them, been led to Christ.

At both meetings frequent reference was made to the blessing which has attended the work during the past ten years, and fervent prayer was offered that the seed which has been sown in faith may bring forth abundant fruit. The gatherings were characterised by much heartiness, and workers present must have received considerable stimulus for the work lying before them in coming days.

A pamphlet entitled "Hints and Encouragements," which contains a large amount of useful information regarding the Children's Scripture Union, has just been published, and may be obtained on application to the office, 13a, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

SERMON LANE MISSION.

The annual meeting of this long-established Mission was held on April 2 at Myddleton Hall, Islington. Captain Penton, M.P., in the chair. A feeling tribute was paid in the report by Mr. D. Cooksey, the honorary secretary, to the memory of Mr. George Fuller, the late superintendent of the Mission. The report showed that schemes of usefulness, many of which had their first inception from Mr. Fuller, were going on with unimpaired efficiency under the direction of a zealous committee, assisted by Mr. W. West, the new superintendent, who has been familiar with mission work in the East of London.

The speakers who addressed the meeting expressed their well-justified surprise at the variety and efficiency of the work carried on by the Mission, embracing as it does almost every agency which experience has shown to be conducive to the evangelisation and amelioration of a poor neighbourhood. We may only mention, therefore, that the Gospel is faithfully preached to attentive audiences, and children educated in overflowing Sunday-schools, and that a spirit of union and devotion pervades the workers.

A little novelty was introduced into the meeting, after the formal addresses were over, by a display of athletic skill on the part of some members of a youths' institute (numbering about 400), which, along with a similar institute for young women, has been lately added with promising results to the work of the Mission. A Bible-class, of about fifty of these youths, is held every Sunday evening, and the influence of the institute already tells upon a rough juvenile population. The Mission keeps out of debt, but the support of its friends is still promptly needed.

GIPSIES AT CHOBHAM.—Companies of these poor outcasts have recently been gathered at the "Fally Colony," to hear the Gospel preached by Messrs. Bell and Valentine, and Stanley Alder, the superintendent of the work. The children of six families attend day and Sunday-schools, and some of them have passed into the fourth standard. In a number of the tents, religious instruction is appreciated. The families who, by the assistance of kind friends, were placed in cottages by the aid of the Mission, have proved themselves worthy of the help. Mr. Alder's address is Rose Cottage, Lucas-green, Chobham, Surrey.

SCHOOLS IN SYRIA.—Dear Sir,—In The Christian of March 29 it is mentioned that all the Mission schools in Syria and Palestine have been closed by the Turkish authorities. This is not so. It would be disastrous to us if the idea prevailed. None of the British Syrian Mission schools have been closed. These are twenty-nine in number, and are doing a splendid work. We have firmans for all our schools. They were procured for us by the Prince of Wales on his visit to Syria; thence our immunity. It is too true that the schools of the American Mission, of C.M.S., and the Irish Presbyterian Mission have been closed. The Jesuits adopt the plan of putting a Moslem at the head of the school, and so carrying them on very much as before. Great blessing is resting on the British Syrian Mission schools, at this time, for which we praise the Lord.

Agnes Auriol Barker, Hon. Sec. B.S.M.S.

WORK AT THE SEVEN DIALS.

HRISTIAN effort at the Seven Dials has uring recent years been prosecuted, not only ith encouragement to the workers, but with fects quite patent to ordinary observation. ne by one, the notorious corner public-houses nd other dens of infamy and vice have been osed, and those who have taken the Gospel the population have found everywhere indiduals and little parties willing to serve Christ, nd testifying for holiness of life. Only one of he seven well-known public-houses remains -day, and it is hoped that it may, at no disant date, suspend operations for the general ood of the public.

The St. Giles' Christian Mission has been rivileged to do a good work in that district. t has just added to its achievements by acuiring for mission purposes a house which in ays gone by was a centre of wickedness and ource of misery. Formerly licensed for the ale of intoxicating liquors, and latterly used for arious purposes, including a "penny gaff," he premises are now consecrated to works of ove and mercy. The spacious "bar" has now een fitted up as a preaching room, and the emainder of the house, with beds for eighteen, ill be at the disposal of Miss Ling, for her ood and untiring work among young women.

On Tuesday evening last week the new mission house, which is a great improvement upon he old premises close by, was formally opened. There was a large attendance of people from he neighbourhood. Mr. George Hatton, the much loved superintendent of the Mission, was prevented from attending by illness. Mr. W. Harrison, of the Bloomsbury Domestic Mission, presided over the proceedings. The several speakers recalled the earnest preaching which has taken place just outside the building during many years. In letters from Mr. Hatton, it was stated that for a long time prayers had been ascending to God for the corner house for mission uses. It is cause of great joy that these are now answered. Messrs. G. Clarke, W. Wheatley, R. Tointon, Young, and Andrews, each spoke words of counsel and cheer. The members of the girls' Bible-class took occasion to present Miss Ling with a large Bible as a birthday gift and a token of affection. In the course of a brief address, Miss Ling referred to her twenty years' exertions.

Among those that listened were some who, with personal reason, blessed her in their hearts, while there was also an evident, if unspoken, prayer that God would greatly own her endeavours in the new premises, for the purchase of which generous friends of the Mission have furnished the needful funds. The address of Mr. George Hatton, superintendent of the Mission, is 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

LEICESTER.—On Wednesday, April 3, Mr. E. H. Glenny, of the North Africa Mission, gave a special missionary address in Melbourne Hall, on the occasion of bidding farewell to Miss Bolton, who is leaving on April 21 for missionary work in Morocco. Miss Bolton will make the forty-fourth missionary in connection with the North Africa Mission; but, with a district sixty times the size of England, that, after all, is not many. Miss Bolton and Rev. C. B. Sawday also spoke.

ALBERT YOUTHS' CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE.—The new premises, 49, Lamb's Conduit-street, were opened on Tuesday last week, when a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. F. A. Bevan. The secretary (Mr. A. E. Sparrow) gave an interesting account of the rise, progress, and result of the work carried on during the past four years. Quite a colony of the members are in Buenos Ayres doing well and are engaged in mission work. Bible-classes, Sunday evening meeting, Christian band, and open-air meetings are held. An athletic club and gymnasium are in connection; also temperance society, educational classes, and library. Mr. J. Kirk, Mr. R. Cadogan (treasurer), Mr. R. Mitchell, Rev. J. Baillie, and Mr. Bevan, delivered addresses.

WESLEYAN EAST-END MISSION.

In September last the Methodist Conference transferred the premises known as the Seamen's Chapel, Commercial-road, to the care of the East London Mission. This building, splendidly situated for aggressive work, after undergoing extensive repairs, was opened on Wednesday of last week. At the same time there was launched a Medical Mission. The "Old Seamen's," as the chapel is locally called, now affords accommodation for 1000 people. Mr. John Jameson, Rev. Peter Thompson's devoted colleague, is to have the charge of this branch.

The proceedings on Wednesday week began at noon with a prayer-meeting, which was well attended, and over which Mr. Thompson presided. In the course of a succinct address he acknowledged the sympathy he had received from other sections of the Church of Christ in his work in the East-end. "I have never," said he, "received greater kindness from any brother in Christ then from the Rector of St. George's-in-the-East. His most practical, kindly, brotherly sympathy has often been a great encouragement to me." That was now his sixth centre, and he was often filled with anxiety as to his vast responsibility; but so good and gracious had God been in the past, that his faith for the continued maintenance and success of the whole work was unflinching.

The company adjourned to one of the schoolrooms where luncheon was provided. Mr. J. E. Mathieson, of Mildmay, officiated as chairman; and in the course of some remarks he said he rejoiced in that blessed Gospel method of trying to reach the poor by means of the Medical Mission. Dr. Guinness bore testimony to the need there is for medical missions in the East-end, pointing out that the out-patient department of the London Hospital is larger than that of any other two hospitals in the kingdom put together. Mr. Broomhall observed that although his life-work lay in China, he was convinced of the supreme need of mission work, especially medical mission work, in London. It would doubtless be found in London as it had been found in China that medical work levelled prejudice to the ground, and secured manifold blessed results. Mrs. Stewart, who has for some time been working as a Christian nurse amongst the poor, said that, while she was always sure of a hearty welcome, the mere Bible-woman, in the East-end at any rate, was often coldly received. Mr. Coatsworth, a chemist, of Clapham, who has given up his business to devote himself with his wife and daughters to the work of the Mission, and Dr. White, who has also, free of cost, placed himself at the disposal of the new department, likewise spoke a few words.

At three o'clock Rev. John McNeill preached. There was a large congregation, composed of people from all parts of the Metropolis, and including many ministers. Mr. McNeill chose for the theme of his discourse the story of the taking of Jericho. This stirring Old Testament story was applied by the preacher for the strengthening of the faith of Christian workers in their fight with the evils and sorrows of the time.

An enthusiastic meeting was held in the evening. Mr. W. Vanner, of Chislehurst, who presided, expressed the hope that the altered and improved chapel would soon have a large and flourishing congregation, as it had at one period of its history. Rev. Peter Thompson intimated that the widow of the late Rev. M. Godman had, like Dr. and Mrs. White and Mr. and Mrs. Coatsworth, resolved to devote her life to relieving the poor in connection with the Mission. He stated that towards the £2500 required for the renovation of the chapel, and some necessary repairs on St. George's Chapel, about £2000 has been promised; £500 has still to be raised. Sympathetic and encouraging addresses were subsequently given by Revs. Walford Green and C. H. Kelly.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN DUNDEE.

Major Whittle and his son have finished the first two weeks of their mission which lasts one week more. The meetings during the first week were held in Hilltown Free Church (Rev. John Macpherson's), and were well attended. There were decisions for Christ every night, and the Christians were greatly encouraged. On the Sabbath afternoon the Y.M.C.A. Hall was crowded with young men, representing the Bible-class of Mr. James Smith, the secretary of the Association. We are not aware that there is a larger young men's class in Scotland, and it is a matter of wonder to many how, in the enforced silence of its beloved teacher through an illness of long standing, the number (600 we believe) continues to be kept up. It testifies to the power of God manifested through a consecrated man. Mr. Charles Whittle took the larger share of the speaking, as his father was wearied after the Edinburgh campaign, and forty rose in expression of their desire to be saved. Afterwards the large Kinnaird Hall was filled to overflowing, when the Christian workers had their hands full, and their hearts also.

The second week's meetings were held in St. Mark's Established Church (Rev. C. M. Grant's), and Dr. Moxey, from Edinburgh, joined the evangelists. The weather, which had been delightful so far, changed to rain and cold north and east winds; but, notwithstanding, the attendance was good both at the three young people's afternoon meetings, and at the evening evangelistic gatherings. Dr. Moxey gave a reading each evening of some incident bearing on the address. The word preached has been with much acceptance and power and with many signs following. Very specially was this the case at the last two meetings, and at the last gathering of young people. There were many who gave their hearts to Jesus, and timid believers who emerged into light and liberty. One striking circumstance was the number of Christian workers who dated their conversion from the Major's former visit eight years ago. The Major presided daily at the noon prayer-meeting, and "Looking unto Jesus" was the subject all through.

LONDON CABMEN have now an excellent Home of Rest in Ventnor for their own special benefit. St. Boniface Villa, a spacious house with nearly three acres of ground, has been secured for that purpose by Rev. J. Dupee, of the London Cabmen's Mission.

CHRISTIAN BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY.—A tea was given last week in the East London Tabernacle to about nine hundred blind and their guides in connection with this Society. Mr. Archibald Brown defrayed all the expenses, and is ever a kind friend to the Society. Earnest Gospel addresses were given by the chairman, Mr. Brown, and others, and some of those present testified that their spiritual eyes had been opened, and they had seen Jesus. The Society is doing a good work, but a larger income is earnestly desired. The hon. sec. is Rev. J. Pullein Thompson, St. Stephen's Vicarage, North Bow, E.

ONE OF THE "LIVEST" RESULTS of the work carried on by the Wesleyan West Central Mission is seen in the men's class, held at Lincoln House, Soho-square, on Sunday afternoons under the conduct of Mr. J. Nix. The room, well filled with about a hundred men, resounds with the praises of those who have been called out of darkness (and in many cases how great darkness!) into light, and the testimonies which are given have an earnestness, genuineness, and happiness about them with which one seldom meets. Every convert becomes a worker, and thus the work spreads in quiet and unostentatious channels to a degree which fairly keeps pace with the more public methods used. A visit to Mr. Nix's class is a sure cure for proverbial Sabbath afternoon drowsiness, and many a class conductor might profitably take a leaf out of Mr. Nix's book as to how to make his class interesting and successful.

POLYTECHNIC YOUNG WOMEN.

A year ago a Young Women's Christian Institute was formed as a complement to the Polytechnic Institute for Young Men. It has now a membership of 1000, and there are 600 waiting for admission when there is room for them. Mr. W. T. Paton might well say, in his secretarial statement at the first anniversary on Monday evening, that here was cause enough to thank God and go forward. The meeting was held in the large hall of the young men's building, and it was crammed from top to bottom with a thoroughly enthusiastic company, that cheered to the echo Mr. Paton's numerous pleasantries. The educational and other opportunities afforded to the members are many and great, and are fully taken advantage of. The greatest desire of all the workers, said Mr. Paton, is to see the young women brought to the feet of Jesus. One of the leading workers is Mrs. Quintin Hogg. In her husband's absence she was therefore in her right place in the chair, and gracefully she discharged its duties.

Mr. Paton had bespoken a hearty welcome for Rev. John McNeill, and he got it. He had not gone far in his address when he struck in with a strong plea for total abstinence from the drink. He said he was in dead earnest about the matter, and pressed it home very ardently. Then he went on to ask the "lassies" whether they ever read any of the novelettes and "garbage literature" that is so prevalent in London. He wanted to pledge them also to total abstinence from such miserable mental pabulum. With appropriate dramatic action he threw a splendid and withering scorn on the high-flown and grandiose unrealities of cheap fiction, which is a gross caricature of everyday life. Last of all, he framed a tender and urgent appeal for spiritual decision. Without having much personal experience of the dark side of life, he declared that the best and brightest epoch of his history was the forenoon of a busy bustling day when he made the eternal choice for Jesus Christ. Since that hour the Saviour had been far more to him than he had thought possible, and Christian service had indeed been perfect freedom and joy. If they would have all the true pleasures of this life, and secure those in store at God's right hand, let them not delay to enrol themselves among the disciples of Jesus Christ.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes (facetiously described by Mr. Paton as "an awful Radical, but always radically right") followed with a characteristic address. He said the young women in the West-end greatly outnumbered the young men, and he could not conceive a more necessary or praiseworthy work than that carried on by this Institute. Who can need Christian protection so much as young women, and especially young women in the West-end? As to total abstinence and trashy literature, he strongly seconded the appeals of Mr. McNeill. Coming to the vital point of his talk, Mr. Hughes said he could scarcely understand how any woman should refuse to believe in Jesus Christ, who had done so much for woman throughout the world. No one occupies so perilous a position in London to-day as a young woman without Christ. His love is even more unutterably tender and true than a mother's. Alluding to Mr. McNeill's personal testimony, he said that no greater service could be rendered to one's generation than to give such living, individual testimony to the power of Christ to save and keep. These incontestable proofs are ignored by such literary critics as Professor Huxley, Mr. Frederic Harrison, and Mrs. Humphrey Ward. Mr. Hughes gave a bit of his own spiritual autobiography, and he too declared that there is nothing so delightful as whole-hearted Christian service, even in a place like the West-end of London, where Satan's seat is, and where the need and privilege of service are all the greater. A touching incident about a careless young woman, who was soundly converted at St. James's Hall on Sunday week, closed Mr. Hughes' impressive address.

In the name of the members of the Institute, Mr. Paton handed to Mrs. Hogg a finely framed testimonial of thanks for the kindness shown to them by herself and Mr. Hogg. Mrs. Hogg replied in a very womanly and admirable way, and said she would treasure this token of their thankful affection. Then she detailed the future arrangements for the year, in which the varied interests of the young women are taken into account. On behalf of herself and Mrs. Studd (who is one of the active workers in the Institute), Mrs. Hogg expressed much gratitude at the way in which the missionary working parties had been taken up. The Bible-classes, she said, are the mainspring of the work. Both this and the Young Men's Institute really sprang out of a small Bible-class conducted by her husband, and, if these classes were to fall into decadence, the heart would be taken out of the whole affair as far as she was concerned. A Temperance Society would be started next Friday, and after what had been said, surely that branch of the Institute would soon be a very flourishing one.

Mdme. Richelmann having sweetly warbled "The Better Land," a final and very practical little address was given by Rev. F. B. Meyer.

OBITUARY.

DR. ASA MAHAN.

On Thursday evening, last week (April 4), at about 10.30, this well-known servant of God peacefully entered into rest. He was in his ninetieth year. Up till within a few hours of his death, when he sank into unconsciousness, he was in sweetness of Christian character and bearing, and happy trustfulness of heart, just what he has been for so many years past. His last hour of conscious life was spent in prayer for "a world of sinners lost," and that God would baptize his Church, and "send forth ten thousand missionaries" to carry the tidings of his grace.

MR. R. ANDERSON, EDINBURGH.

About fifteen years ago Mr. Anderson, of N. Mansion House-road, Edinburgh, became connected with the Edinburgh Working Boys' and Girls' Religious Society. He soon acquired remarkable power in conducting services of various kinds. The service in Buccleuch School, which he conducted for seventeen years, was brought to a high state of success, secured by diligence during his free hours through the week; these were frequently spent in laborious preparation for the Sabbath morning instruction, or in visits to the sorrowing, the needy, and the erring. For the last three years he had compiled the text-book for the Edinburgh Society. The week before last, to the sorrow of many, he was called from his earthly service to his heavenly rest and reward.

REV. DR. SCHÖN.

Rev. James Frederick Schön, D.D., who has just passed away at New Brompton, Chatham, at the age of eighty-six, was a remarkable man. Born near Baden, in Germany, he entered the ministry of the Church of England when twenty-eight years of age, and went to Sierra Leone as a missionary. The well-known coloured bishop, Dr. Crowther, was one of his pupils. He took part in the celebrated Niger expedition, but the work with which his name will indelibly be associated is in connection with the languages of Western Africa, many of which he reduced to writing, and furnished with grammars and dictionaries, and translations of Holy Writ. It was of Dr. Schön that Livingstone spoke when he said to Archbishop Sumner, "This man's name, your Grace, will live generations after mine has been forgotten."

MR. W. H. MILLS, who for twenty-one years has faithfully filled the office of secretary at the Stafford Rooms Y.M.C.A., has lately been appointed Secretary to the National Council of the Association. We learn that a number of friends are about to present Mr. Mills with a suitable testimonial as an expression of esteem and goodwill.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

FORGIVENESS.

Sir,—I am much puzzled by the petition in the Lord's Prayer which seems to make our forgiveness by God depend on our own act in forgiving our enemies. C. B. St. G.

Col. ii. teaches that when we believed on the Lord Jesus, God forgave us all trespasses; and Ephes. i. declares that we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of God's grace. We have passed out of the rank of criminals into the family of God. We are now his children. And we must be imitators of God, as dear children. 1 John i. tells us that if we (the children of God) confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we do not confess them, our Father will chasten us until we do. The Lord's Prayer teaches, that our Father in heaven expects his children to manifest the same spirit of forgiveness as He has shown toward them. Indeed, this is a test of the reality of their professed regeneration. For if a man love not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

MANY CALLED, FEW CHOSEN.

Matt. xxii. 14: "For many are called, but few are chosen." This puzzles us somewhat as to its reference to the Christian life. We should be glad if you could clear up the passage. L.

As many were invited to the marriage feast, so many are called to be partakers in the blessings of salvation. Even those who, having heard the call, ostensibly accept the invitation, will not all be chosen by the King. Among the twelve there was a Judas, and so among the guests at the marriage feast there was one who "had not on a wedding garment." We must not only range ourselves with those who are being saved, but we must put on the Lord Jesus Christ, so that He may be unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. The "many" and "few" have their parallel in another of the Lord's warning words: "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it" (Matt. vii. 13, 14).

"CAST AWAY."

A man whom I visit despairs of salvation, because, he says, he has "wilfully" sinned against light, and asserts that Heb. x. 26, 27 applies to him. I am therefore glad to notice this subject has been opened in your columns, as I intended asking how we are to reconcile texts such as the following: Heb. vi. 4—6, x. 26, 27; 2 Pet. ii. 20, 21; 2 Tim. iv. 10, &c., with John x. 29, and Phil. i. 6, &c. I thankfully noticed Rev. F. B. Meyer's observations on Heb. vi., and your footnote to Mr. J. Marshall Sturge's letter. C. B. M.

P.S.—Can any of your readers recommend a booklet on this subject?

These Scriptures are quite compatible with each other, and are easily reconciled, if we remember that there may be a real work of the Holy Spirit on a soul which may yet fall short of regeneration, because of its non-belief, or non-surrender—e.g., Saul, Balaam, Judas, and those who will have wrought miracles in Jesus' name, but to whom He will say, "I never knew you."

DAVID'S EXPERIENCE.

Sir,—The question arose at a Bible-reading last week, as to whether Christian workers in the present day could corroborate David's words in Ps. xxxvii. 25: "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." Would some of your readers give testimony from personal experience or observation on this matter? E. M. E.

WELSH IN LONDON.—Mrs. Stuart Rendel, of Holmdale, Dorking, has issued an appeal on behalf of the establishment of a special mission in London for the benefit of poor Welsh. She desires to get a reading-room, servants' registry office, sewing-meetings, Bible-readings, provident club, visitation of the sick, &c.

LIVERPOOL STRANGERS' REST.

The annual meeting of this fruitful centre of Gospel effort was recently held. Situated in close proximity to the river-side, it is easy of access to the seafaring men, and also to the many emigrants who make Liverpool their point of departure for the Western hemisphere. Every day, and nearly all day long, the Rest in Park-lane is a busy scene. Sailors make it a rendezvous, where they can feel perfectly at home, drink the social cup of tea, read the papers, and write letters to their friends. The upper rooms are distributed among the various nationalities, and evening after evening they are the theatre of most earnest evangelistic work. The Scandinavians are the most numerous and also the most accessible to Christian influence. Many blessed decisions for Christ are made in these rooms, and the hearts of the workers are continually cheered by seeing the results of their labours. Ships are visited, and the seamen conversed with. The seeds of saving truth are liberally sown, and news comes from far and near that it has not been in vain.

At the annual meeting many friends came together to hear of the work, and to beseech God's continued blessing upon it. We regret to note that a deficit of £60 in the year's balance-sheet was announced. But surely rich and liberal Liverpool will ere now have wiped out that score. Owing to his many calls for service elsewhere, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe has had to relinquish the direct control of the work, though he still extends to it his warm and active sympathy. His mantle has fallen on the worthy shoulders of his son, Mr. Heber Radcliffe, who, with his wife, devotes much time and attention to the direction of this truly Christlike mission of help and salvation.

Evangelistic Notes.

Miss Jenny Haigh, of York, has concluded a month's Gospel services at the Methodist New Connexion Chapel, Ship-lane, Wreckenton, near Gateshead. The chapel was well filled nightly, and many have professed conversion.

Mr. John Elliott has held a three weeks' mission at Llantrissant, South Wales. The Nonconformist ministers of the town have heartily united, and the effort has been greatly blessed to the building up of believers, the restoration of backsliders, and the salvation of sinners.

Mrs. Valence has been conducting Gospel services in connection with the Primitive Methodists in the Portsmouth Circuit. Many present on the last night of the mission bore testimony to blessing received. The sweet singing of Gospel melodies by the evangelist was a great attraction.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has recently held Gospel services in Stowmarket, Suffolk, in conneetion with the Congregational Church, of which Rev. L. W. Caws is pastor. As the result many have professed to be savingly converted. Several of the anxious ones testified that they had long been concerned about their souls, so that it was only a step to Jesus.

Teddington.—A most interesting and successful mission has been conducted during March at the Park-street Mission Hall, by Messrs. E. Matthews and Wm. Taylor, both of the Evangelisation Society. The Gospel has been preached nightly with great power and clearness. Some have professed salvation. A remarkable address on "Reconciliation" was delivered by Mr. Matthews, which resulted in upwards of a dozen persons seeking earnestly to become reconciled to those with whom they had formerly been at variance. Mr. Greenwood, the missionary, has been greatly cheered, and is expecting still further blessing.

Mr. William Forbes is desirous of holding a weekly service in different districts of the Metropolis on Sundays and week-nights. He will be pleased to hear from ministers and others who may be disposed to grant the use of chapels, halls, or schoolrooms, stating what day of the week will be most convenient. Address, 71, Tollington-road, Holloway, N. The Sunday services may be at 3.30 and 8.15.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged for the month of April. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by all readers:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken: April 14 to 21, Broadwater Down, Tunbridge Wells. Rev. R. Catterall: April 13 to 20, mission to men only, Y.M.C.A., Manchester. Rev. J. P. Cushing: to April 16, Culmington, Bromfield. Rev. A. R. D'Arcy: to April 14, Ripley, Derby. Rev. W. Haslam: April 16 to May 3, South Creake, Fakenham. Rev. J. H. Haslam: April 14 to 18, Christ Church, Surbiton; April 19 to 21, Kidbrook, Blackheath. Rev. Dr. Morris: to April 15, Birkdale, Southport; April 16 to 22, North Mymms, Hatfield; April 28 to May 13, Leake, Boston. Rev. F. E. Rogers: to April 15, Little Wilbraham, near Cambridge; April 27 to May 6, Linthwaite, Huddersfield. Rev. James Stephens: April 13 to 22, Twyford, Leicester. Rev. J. White: to April 16, Arthington, Leeds.

The Book World.

The United States and the Future of the Anglo-Saxon Race. 1s. Saxon & Co., 23, Bouverie-street, E.C. Four very informing chapters from the well-known American Work, "Our Country," by Rev. Dr. Strong, of New York. A paper is added by Mr. Michael G. Mulhall, on "The Growth of American Industries and Wealth." The facts and figures brought together are very remarkable, and the book cannot but be read with interest throughout the Anglo-Saxon world.

Beginners' Guide to Photography. 6d. Perken, Son & Rayment, 99, Hatton-garden. This is a valuable and cheap little book, which all tyro-amateur photographers would do well to peruse carefully before investing in apparatus, as they may thus save considerable expense. The directions as to exposure, development, printing, &c., have only to be closely followed to ensure success, without the many trials of patience which beginners encounter who are not so fortunate as to meet with such explicit and reliable instructions. The chapter on "Exposure," with the tables for calculating "current exposure," would be worth 5s. to any amateur.

The Way Back. By James L. Stanley. 1s. Religious Tract Society. A faithful and true statement of the sinner's need, with full and sound instruction as to how it may be met. The style of address is very winning, and the appeal expressed very cogently as well as affectionately. Anxious inquirers have their questions answered admirably, and we trust the book will echo to many the peace which the Saviour Himself speaks. Mr. Stanley directs wanderers home by the old and tried way, but he gives his counsel with a freshness which inspires confidence in his words. With the blessing of God, this book is calculated to prove exceedingly helpful to many.

Bible View of the Jewish Church. By Howard Crosby. 4s. Funk & Wagnalls, 44, Fleet-street, E.C. Thirteen lectures delivered a year ago in the Fourth-avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. Thoughtful and lucid throughout, the work has a distinct, practical value. Dr. Crosby well points out that the history of Israel epitomises the story of man in general in his relation to God; there is a continual sinking away from God, who, however, again and again gives new opportunities for repentance. Not stopping to debate historical questions, the author has admirably indicated the spiritual lessons which Israel's history offers for the Christian Church. In tone and treatment alike, the work is soundly evangelical.

War with Crime: A selection of reprinted papers on Crime, Reformatories, &c., by the late T. Barwick Baker. Longmans, Green & Co. This collection of essays and letters to the Press by the late well-known squire of Hardwick Court, Gloucestershire, will be useful chiefly to the county magistrate, and will doubtless be highly valued as a memorial volume by those who were privileged to know and to work with the author. Although most of the papers deal with very interesting topics, the dates which are appended in some cases, ranging so far back as 1854, will, we fear, have the effect of depreciating the value of many of the suggestions. We do not doubt that many of Mr. Baker's opinions have borne fruit, and that for good, but with others, such for instance as those in defence of "The Prison Brand," and of the imprisonment of children, we are at variance. The author's views in regard to the agricultural labourer, and generally upon "Labour and Wages," are not altogether satisfactory; and those who are familiar with the lot of the agricultural labourer will smile grimly upon finding the clergyman advised to help him by encouraging him to put by money. A fine portrait accompanies the memoir.

The Preacher's Commentary on the Gospel of St. John. By Rev. Gordon Calthrop. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Treating the "Golden Gospel" as a storehouse of texts for the preacher's use, this handy volume contains no fewer than 130 homiletic sketches. The outstanding passages and incidents are lucidly explained, and busy workers, whether preachers or school teachers, will find the volume as highly suggestive in character as it is terse in literary style.

Cassell's New Popular Educator. The first volume of the new edition of this well-known encyclopædia of education shows a decided advance upon its predecessors. Revised throughout, and presented in a much improved form, the lessons have been admirably adapted to the latest requirements of the day. Beautifully printed, and illustrated to better purpose than ever before, the work has once again entered upon its useful course, and we wish it every success. A large number of subjects are introduced in the first volume (costing 5s.), and, as the succeeding volumes are received, the student will, by easy degrees, be led from the elements of things to advanced applications of what he has learned. We trust the new "Educator" will add many to the educational trophies of the earlier editions.

Present-day Tracts. Religious Tract Society. The latest addition to this valuable series is "The Age and Trustworthiness of the Old Testament Scriptures," by Canon R. B. Girdlestone (4d.). Comprehensive, cogent, and convincing, it is calculated to prove alike serviceable to inquirers into Christian verity, and re-assuring to many a believer who has at times laboured under intellectual difficulties. The six tracts, 55 to 60, in volume form (2s. 6d.), deal with the authenticity and character of the Holy Scriptures and family and social questions in their relation to Christianity. We are glad also to welcome eight selected tracts, bound together in a volume, entitled "Man in relation to the Bible and Christianity" (3s. 6d.). Many of the so-called scientific questionings of to-day are here well and briefly answered.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The income of the C.M.S. for the year ending March 31, 1889, is the largest ever received. The fact is all the more impressive, because it is accompanied, as we have already pointed out in these columns, by a very remarkable increase in the number of offers for service. With clergy tendering themselves at the rate of one a week, with the general offers averaging one a day, and with the income moving upwards, the Society's friends have more cause than ever to thank God and take courage.—The Record.

THE CHICAGO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY has departments for Germans, Dano-Norwegians, and Swedes, as well as English-speaking students. During the past seven years a goodly number of workers have been trained in the institution, which is evangelical in its theology and missionary in spirit. In a statement of the work and needs of the Seminary, Professor H. M. Scott well says: "The Pauline doctrines of sin in man and grace in God, which recent research shows to have been the reformatory and revolutionary element in theology through all the centuries, the teaching of all the Reformers—that is the view of the Gospel which our students have carried into every State and territory of this great West. From the very first, too, like views of truth have carried not a few of our graduates into the foreign field." The secretary of the Board of Directors is Rev. Dr. Savage.

GIFFORD HALL MISSION, ISLINGTON.—The annual meeting of this mission was held last week in the hall at Gifford-street, Caledonian-road, when several well-known ministers and laymen gave interesting and practical addresses. The report was a record of active toil and varied operation. The wants of the poor and needy have been met by a home for aged poor, loan of blankets, the supply of free bread and milk breakfasts, a sick club, soup kitchen, and penny dinners—no less than 29,943 of the latter having been supplied. The temperance work has received a large share of attention, there being connected with the mission a senior and junior Band of Hope, and men and women's total abstinence benefit clubs. For the scholars of the school, who number upwards of 1000, there are an infants' playroom, penny bank, youths' club and gymnasium, swimming club, harriers, and cricket club. Besides 65 open-air services, the members of the mission have held 260 prayer-meetings during the year.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Dr. W. P. Mears, Professor of Anatomy at the Newcastle Medical School, has been accepted by the Church Missionary Society for medical missionary work in China.

On Sunday morning week two Jewish proselytes—one a lady—were baptized in St. Augustine's Church, Highbury, in the presence of a large congregation, including many Jews, who came to witness the ceremony.

The Hon. and Rev. E. Carr-Glyn, vicar of Kensington, is trying to found a Church Workers' Home, in which a few ladies, each possessed of at least £100, "can live in community, under the guidance of a yearly elected superior, and devote themselves to the service of God." Mr. Carr-Glyn proposes that the ladies should wear some distinctive dress.

METHODIST.

Foundation stones of a new mission-hall for West Streatham, in the Brixton-hill Circuit, have been laid.

Primitive Methodists in the United Kingdom have increased their membership during the past year by something like 2000 persons. The annual conference will be held at Bradford in June.

At the recent meeting of the Australian Wesleyan Conference it was officially reported that there were 1437 church members in Samoa, 27,170 in Fiji, 749 in the Friendly Islands, and 584 in New Britain.

The "Forward Movement" has touched the ancient city of Oxford. Services of a popular character have been held during the winter in the city chapel, and have attracted much attention. The local Press has reported the services, and in this way the influence exerted by them has been extended much beyond the number of persons who have attended them.

BAPTIST.

A new Baptist Church with eighty members, largely from Zion Church, Bacup, has been formed at Acremill, where mission work has been carried on since 1872.

The church at Lower Chapel, Chesham, has succeeded in acquiring and closing a public-house which stood between the place of worship and the principal thoroughfare, and it is purposed to utilise the site by building a new chapel and schools.

A valedictory service was held at Counterslip Chapel, Bristol, in connection with the departure of Mr. George A. Huntley for mission work in the province of Shen-si, China. Rev. Dr. Culross gave the charge. Mr. Huntley, during the evening, was presented with a medicine chest and a pocket case for carrying medicines.

Rev. G. Anderson Miller (of the Pastors' College) is about to be settled as pastor of the Baptist Church at Rochester. The work was commenced by Mr. Miller himself a little over two years ago, and has been carried on by him while pursuing his studies at the College. The town affords a capital field for Christian effort, and Mr. Miller's labours are being greatly blessed.

A girls' "at home" is one of the new features of the work at Regent's Park Chapel since Rev. F. B. Meyer's settlement. One of the schoolrooms is transformed into a parlour for the occasion, and it is filled with little groups working hard to maintain a cottage in the vicinity of Epping Forest, where the fallen will have an opportunity of regaining their character, and fitting themselves for service.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

In The Friend of this month Priscilla A. Barclay gives her first impressions of heathen life in China, and pleads for increased effort in behalf of foreign missions. She and her sister have gone out as missionaries of the China Inland Mission.

Joseph Storrs Fry (clerk of London Yearly Meeting), and John Gayner, of Bristol, paid acceptable visits to Neath, Swansea, and Tenby, in South Wales, on the way to, and are now engaged in Gospel service in, Cork, Ireland, where they would find a hearty welcome and an open door.

During the past fortnight meetings have been held at the Friends' Mission Hall, Richmond-row, Liverpool, addressed by Frances C. Jenkins, of Georgetown, Illinois. Much blessing has attended her service in these meetings, and it is believed that many have given their hearts to the Lord, especially amongst young men.

On Tuesday, last week, a Conference on "The Responsibility of Young Men in Reference to the Drink Question" was held at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street, London. Papers were read by W. C. Braithwaite, Oberlin Pudney, and Arthur Whitlow. Much enthusiasm characterised the meeting, at the close of which about thirty young men gave in their names with a view to the formation of a Young Men's Friends' Temperance Union.

Almost the entire 20,000 copies of Dymond's "Essay on War," whose preface was the last work of the lamented John Bright, have been put in circulation, and the demand is not exhausted. Arising from the same feeling, perhaps, there has been a successful social peace meeting held in Manchester, and W. S. B. McLaren, M.P., writes to The Methodist Times in support of "Arbitration v. War." In Tasmania, too, Wm. Jones (late secretary of the Peace Society) is receiving great hospitality and free railway travelling, and is addressing large meetings of influential citizens on the same subjects.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. C. Leach, on Sunday week, brought to a close his second winter's series of Sunday afternoon lectures in Queen's-park Church, Harrow-road. Every Sunday afternoon the building has been quite full, and many have been led to attend regular services, and a considerable number to join the church.

Rev. Joshua C. Harrison entered, last week, upon the forty-fifth year of his pastorate of Park Chapel, Camden Town. During the year a number of the artisan class have been drawn to the church by the special evangelistic services which have been held monthly, and uniformly attended by crowded congregations.

On Sunday evening last Rev. Mark Guy Pearse created an effect in Westminster Congregational Church that is not often experienced amongst the august congregation which worships there. With the fearlessness of one who has a message from God, and dares not fail to deliver it, he preached a most powerful sermon on Peters and Judases. When, at its close, he requested the congregation to sing, kneeling, "When I survey the wondrous cross," not a few were visibly affected, and apparently his words went home to many a heart.

SALVATION ARMY.

Mrs. Booth's health is more and more a matter of concern. In view of her mother's condition, Mrs. Booth-Tucker will return to England for a time.

Three floors of 99, Queen Victoria-street, have now been annexed to Headquarters. Premises have also been secured, adjoining in the rear and are being fitted up. There are now engaged on the premises 160 persons.

Mrs. Booth-Clibborn's illness seems to have been a serious affair, and now, though she is certainly better, she is ordered to the sea, and to have some weeks' entire rest.

It now turns out that there is another appeal against the sentence on Miss Stirling. This time it is to the Federal Council, and it is quite possible it may succeed. In the meantime the culprit is "at large," and doing good service in Scotland.

The Shelter scheme is a great success. On a recent night over sixty men applied for admission at Clerkenwell after the place was full. The Hanbury-street place for women is not largely attended at present, but the numbers are improving.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Mr. Samuel McComb, of Magee College, Londonderry, has been inducted to the pastorate of the church at Reading.

The principal reason which has led to the abandonment of the proposal to transfer the Presbyterian Ministerial College from London to Cambridge was, it is said, the heavy financial outlay, involving close upon £100,000, which at this point the authorities do not feel themselves justified in attempting to raise.

Rev. John McNeill, in his sermon at Regent-square Church on Sunday evening last, made a very strong case against idle church-goers. "I am not going to overfeed mere church-goers. I want workers," he said vehemently, and recommended those who were unwilling to labour for souls to allow their seats to be occupied by the unconverted and the anxious.

At the close of the evening service at the Greenhill Church, Derby, on Sunday week, Dr. A. H. F. Barbour, of Edinburgh, gave, by invitation, an interesting account of the remarkable religious movement which has for some time past been in progress among the students of Edinburgh University, carried on by Professor Drummond, with whom Dr. Barbour has been closely associated.

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, of Somers-town Presbyterian Church, has an article in his monthly, The Light of the World, on "The Value of Open-air Preaching," in which he says, "By means of open-air preaching we have gathered an average of 300 souls per annum out of the world to Christ for many years past. Out of the 263 members added to the church last year, at least 150 were first influenced through our services in the open-air; while out of the total membership of the church (971), 600 have certainly been attracted to us by our open-air services."

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Salvation Army has taken barracks in Skibbereen, the capital of West Cork.

The establishment in Ireland of a Methodist Training Home for evangelists, on the lines of that carried on by Rev. Thomas Champness in England, has been proposed.

Mr. R. Clarke, of the Baptist Evangelisation Association, has closed a successful three weeks' mission at Banbridge. The services were largely attended, and several professed conversion.

A fortnight's evangelistic mission, which has been accompanied by much blessing, has been held in the Methodist Church, Wexford, by Rev. Jos. and Mrs. Caldwell, American evangelists.

During the past fortnight meetings have been held on behalf of Wesleyan missions in about 200 centres. At each of these the attendance has been large, and the spirit of liberality most marked.

A successful effort has been made by the young men connected with University-road Methodist Church, Belfast, to reach the non-churchgoers in that locality, by forming themselves into a band of workers, and by visiting and having personal conversation with the careless.

The Belfast Railway Mission has made a fresh start. It has secured the services of Mr. T. H. Ham as secretary, and has arranged for a monthly conference, open to all Christian railway-men. A ladies' auxiliary has also been formed for the purpose of reaching railway-men by means of personal effort.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

A branch of the Y.M.C.A. has been formed at New Lanark.

The Glasgow Working Men's Christian Association, 100, Cowcaddens-street, is doing a good work in this needy district.

The Lanarkshire Christian Union has closed the seventh year of its existence. Some remarkable work has been done during that time, more especially during last summer by tent work.

Rev. J. J. Mackay, of Trinity Free Church, Glasgow, states that six hundred in his congregation have professed conversion during the past year. Various reports presented at the recent annual meeting of the church furnished evidence of a great and aggressive work being done by the pastor and people.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Robert Geale, at Cork, for nearly thirty years an earnest Methodist minister.—At Armagh, Mrs. Harris, for several years a zealous Methodist class-leader.—Rev. J. F. Schön, D.D., of New Brompton, Kent, formerly for some years a C.M.S. missionary in West Africa.—Rev. Wm. Park, D.D., senior minister of the parish church, Airth, Stirlingshire, N.B.—Rev. John Hammond, Primitive Methodist minister, of the Norwich Circuit.—Rev. C. Carus-Wilson Shepheard-Walwyn, rector of Sacombe, Herts.—Rev. John Lyon, senior minister of the Free High Church, Broughty Ferry.—Rev. Charles Overton, for forty-eight years vicar of Cottingham, Hull, Yorks.—Rev. William Saul, Primitive Methodist minister, of Doncaster.—Mrs. Ryle, wife of Dr. J. C. Ryle, Bishop of Liverpool.—Rev. Henry Beatson, for many years minister of Barra Established Church, Outer Hebrides.—Rev. P. A. Lefevre, of St. Helier's, vice-dean of Jersey.—Rev. S. A. Swaine, a well-known Baptist minister.—Mrs. Smith, wife of Rev. W. Harvey Smith, pastor of Bethnal Green Baptist Church, a devoted worker for Christ.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The wife of Dr. F. R. Lees, after a painful illness, has passed away.

At the request of the Bishop of Peterborough temperance sermons were preached throughout his diocese on the first Sunday in Lent.

Mr. G. F. Cook has concluded a most successful temperance mission at the Central Hall, Newcastle. A great many confirmed drunkards have been reached and induced to sign the pledge.

The ninth annual report of the Central Hall Temperance work, Newcastle-on-Tyne, is a wonderful account of zealous, comprehensive, self-denying toil. Mr. W. D. Stephens is still at the head, and is nobly supported by his co-workers.

Lord Carlisle (lately Mr. George Howard) is an ardent advocate of temperance. He and Lady Carlisle have no servants who are not abstainers. They have closed all the public-houses on the estate, and dispersed the famous cellar of wines and ale, which were one of the wonders of Castle Howard.

An Edinburgh brewer has been publishing in the U.P. Church Missionary Record an account of a recent visit by him and his wife to the mission stations in South Africa. The mission committee of a Leith U.P. Church has protested against the prominence in a missionary organ of one engaged in a trade so hurtful to missions.

FOREIGN.

In Jamaica fruit-growing as an industry is displacing the rum-making.

Dr. Maynard, Governor of Brecon Prison, states that of every six prisoners admitted, five come through drink.

Twelve counties and two cities in the Province of Ontario, and one county in Nova Scotia, have voted in favour of the repeal of the Canada Temperance Act.

Sir Frederick Roberts considers that the services of Rev. J. Gelson Gregson in connection with the Soldiers' Total Abstinence Association have been equal to the addition of two battalions to the effective forces of India. There are now 15,000 teetotalers in the British Indian Army.

THE CONFERENCE IN ROME.—Major-General Hatt-Noble writes from Redhill, Surrey, asking prayer for a blessing on the Conference to be held in Rome for a week, from the 28th inst. He thanks donors for help sent, but asks for further support towards meeting the expenses of the Convention.

BOHEMIANS IN CHICAGO.—Since 1884 a good work has been in progress in Chicago, having for its object the spiritual welfare of the 40,000 Bohemians of Chicago, and the many thousands more of the same nationality in other parts of America. This door of usefulness is now open wider than ever before, and the Gospel meets with unprecedented acceptance. The children have been looked after, and the work is full of promise. A monthly religious paper furnishes a bond of union and medium of intercourse between people who, practically unknown to the churches, were lapsing into sad indifference when the Mission started. The work has grown rapidly, and a church and school house is much heeded. The superintendent is Rev. E. A. Adams, 670, South Throop-street, Chicago.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, APRIL 14.—Exodus XXXVIII.

In every age women (8) have been among the most stedfast and generous contributors to the work of God. Last at the cross, and bringing sweet and costly embalmments to the grave. See also Acts xvi. 13, xvii. 4. In Israel the devout women seem to have often gathered at the entrance of the tent of meeting, as Anna did afterwards (Luke ii. 36). It must have cost some self-denial to part with their adornments, but love makes such sacrifices light.

The court (9) was made of very light materials, conformably with the pilgrim state of the people, and because the whole structure was but temporary. The time would come when the place of the tent would be enlarged, and its cords strengthened to make room for the Gentile world (Isa. liv. 2, 3). The courts were, especially in after days, the home of the Levites, "Blessed are they that dwell in thy courts, they will still praise Thee." The area of the court was 150 ft. long by 75 ft. wide, enclosed by hangings of linen suspended from pillars 7 ft. 6 in. high, and standing 7 ft. 6 in. apart. The pillars were kept firm by cords, and tent-pins of bronze. If we may not be pillars, let us be thankful to be tent-pins strengthening them.

The cost of the Tabernacle (21) was reckoned up by the Levites, under the direction of Ithamar. All the gold was a freewill offering (24). Every man brought what he could. It amounted in all to £150,000 of our present money; of this were made all the golden furniture and vessels. The silver was levied as a kind of poll tax (xxxii. 15), and amounted to £34,000; of this were made the sockets into which the boards of the tabernacle were let, and on which they rested. A bekah is half a shekel. Every man in Israel was therefore compelled to give the same amount towards these foundations of their Tabernacle; and this was perhaps intended to teach, that, however, we may differ in other matters, we must all take an equal interest, as, indeed, we all have an equal need, of the foundation truths of Christ's atonement and work. All this amount of money was accumulated in the last days of their stay in Egypt (xii. 36). But surely the readiness with which they parted with their hoarded treasures is a lesson and example to the Church.

MONDAY, APRIL 15.—Exodus XXXIX.

The priests' garments (1—31) were very rich. We have already described them in previous notes on chap. xxviii. These garments have a spiritual meaning as setting forth those gifts and graces and offices, which the Lord Jesus assumed when He undertook the work of our salvation, as our High Priest. All the spiritual Israel were borne on his shoulders and carried on his heart, and presented in the breastplate of judgment to the Father; whilst the holy crown of pure gold, engraven with Holiness to the Lord, stood manifestly on his brow. True believers are spiritual priests (1 Pet. ii. 5), clothed in fine linen (27; Rev. xix. 8), which we must ever keep white in the precious blood (Rev. vii. 14).

The completed Tabernacle was the type and emblem of Jesus Christ. "The Word was made flesh, and tabernacled among us" (John i. 14). As the Shekinah dwelt in the sanctuary, filling it with light and glory, which sometimes flowed over into the outer courts, so did God dwell in the person of Jesus, sometimes irradiating his whole being, as at the transfiguration (Coloss. ii. 9; 2 Pet. i. 17; Rev. i. 16). The Tabernacle is also a symbol of every true child of God; for God still dwells in human spirits, and shines out through them, so that there is no part of them left dark. "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you" (1 Cor. vi. 19)? The Tabernacle is also a type of the collective Church, in whom God dwells (Eph. ii. 22). It must have been a very affecting and triumphant moment when Moses looked on the completed Tabernacle, not yet set up, but awaiting the next step of erection. "And Moses looked upon all the work." So does God look on all our work, even before it is evident to the world, and blesses us in proportion to the entireness of our obedience.

The exact obedience of the people is expressly and repeatedly emphasised. Underlinein this chapter and the next the repetition of "as the Lord commanded Moses." We are too inexact in our obedience. We content ourselves with general principles, to the frequent neglect of minor points. But how much depends on absolute obedience (John xiv. 21, Acts v. 32).

TUESDAY, APRIL 16.—Exodus XL.

The time for setting up the Tabernacle was fixed on the anniversary of the Exodus (1—17). How much had been done in that short time? When there is unanimity among his people and good direction, God's work goes on apace. Moses took the same pleasure and care in erecting the Tabernacle and the workmen in making it. There was no rivalry or emulation except as to who should do his part most expeditiously and efficiently; and thus without friction or ill-feeling the whole of this great work was brought quickly and successfully to a close.

The frequent use of oil (9, &c.) should be noticed as teaching our incessant need of the grace of the Holy Ghost, without whom the fairest work is unacceptable to God. How greatly do we need to receive the daily unction of the Holy Spirit on ourselves as priests (13—15), and on all our work (10)? And how necessary also that we should make constant use of the laver, washing whenever we undertake any service in the name of God (John xiii.).

The solemn consecration (34, &c.) was made by the descent of the cloud of the Shekinah, filling it with light so insufferable that even Moses could not enter (Zech. ii. 5). That cloud was the symbol or manifestation of God, and, like the royal standard flying from the battlements of a palace, it intimated that the King of Israel was literally dwelling among his people "in residence." We have not now the outward symbol, but we have the essential reality (Matt. xxviii. 20). That cloud became the guide of Israel's march (Num. ix. 15; Neh. ix. 19; Ps. lxxviii. 14). Sometimes it demanded long patience as it tarried, and the people had no other alternative than to wait. And when we are not sure of our way, we must wait till we can see what God's will may be (Ps. lxii. 1). But we ought never to go in front of Him (John x. 4), nor should we lag behind. And we must ever remember that the presence of our God with us is not only a guide and a glory, but a defence. When God is in the midst of us we cannot be moved (Ps. xlvi. 5). Oh, happy is the people whose God is the Lord, and who obey his commandments.

THE BOOK OF LEVITICUS.

The word "Leviticus" is used by the LXX. and the Vulgate as a comprehensive designation of the subject of this book, meaning the rites and ceremonies for whose celebration the tribe of Levi was set apart. The word, however, does not occur in the Hebrew Bible; there the book is designated, as in other instances, by its opening word, "Vayikra," the first part of the sentence, "And the Lord called unto Moses," &c.

It may be called the book of Israel's ritual, or the priests' directory, as it is chiefly occupied with the laws of sacrifices and of purifications, and other priestly functions. It is very wanting in any formal arrangement, but the following general divisions of the book may be found useful.

Laws of the offerings (i.—vii.).
Consecration of the priests, with history of that of Aaron and his sons (viii.—x. 20).
Laws of purifications (xi.—xv.).
Day of Atonement, and explanation of the use of the blood (xvi.—xvii.).
Prohibited marriages and evil practices (xviii.—xx.).
Precepts as to priestly duties (xxi.—xxii.).
Feasts (xxiii.—xxv.).
Promises and threatenings, vows (xxvi.—xxvii.).

To the Christian the book is of deep interest, as being far more than a record of bygone and now discarded observances. For, as the Epistle to the Hebrews teaches us, Israel's "worldly sanctuary" was intended to prefigure the great things of Christ's salvation. All pointed to Him. He was the Sanctuary or Temple (see John ii. 21). He was the Altar (Heb. xiii. 10) as well as the Sacrifice (Heb. x.), and also the Priest (Heb. vii.). Thus also the laws of the offerings present us with so many different aspects of his offering and sacrifice; and the distinctions of meats (clean and unclean), and the various purifications and festal celebrations set forth the purification from sin effected by his great sacrifice, and its application to the walk and ways of his people. In no book of the Bible do we more need his presence to expound to us "the things concerning Himself" (Luke xxiv. 27).

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17.—Leviticus I.

In the last chapter of Exodus we read of how, on the Tabernacle being reared up, "the glory of the Lord filled the Tabernacle." Leviticus begins by the Lord speaking unto Moses, "out of the Tabernacle," for He is not now speaking "from heaven," as in Exod. xx. 22, but from the sanctuary which He has now condescended to make his dwelling-place (Exod. xxv. 8). As God is now dwelling in the midst of his people, it may well be said, "Bring an offering and come into his courts." Hence the early chapters of Leviticus contain the law of the offerings, for no will-worship is here permitted; as every earthly court has its own laws of ceremonial for approaching the sovereign, so must it be with the King of Israel. He who is to be worshipped must alone prescribe the mode and manner in which He is to be approached, the more so as these offerings and sacrifices are all intended to typify the great offering and sacrifice who is to appear "when the fulness of the time is come."

This chapter contains the law of "the Burnt Offering," which presents the most general aspect of the work of Christ, that in which "through the Eternal Spirit He offered Himself without spot to God." Hence it was the leading characteristic of this burnt offering that (as contrasted with others in which only the fat was placed upon the altar) the whole animal, the skin alone excepted, ascended up in fire and smoke, as it were, to God. The Hebrew word for burnt offering comes from a root which means to ascend.

Mark five points which were prescribed as essential to a valid offering. It must be: (1) A perfect offering, "a male without blemish"; (2) at God's chosen place, "the door of the tent of meeting," R.V. (see xvii. 4 for the penalty of infringing the law); (3) with a definite object, "that he may be accepted before the Lord," R.V. ("of his own voluntary will," A.V., is now rejected as a wrong translation); (4) with a ceremony of identification, "the laying on of hands," typifying faith (see Heb. vi. 2); (5) with priestly ministration for sprinkling of the blood and burning the offering by fire unto the Lord.

Three grades of offering suited to the varying means of the worshipper (herd, flock, fowl) typify varying degrees of the believer's apprehension of the value of Christ's giving "Himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour."

THURSDAY, APRIL 18.—Leviticus II.

The subject of this chapter is the meat, or (better in R.V.) "Meal Offering," of fine flour, the type of the perfect character, the sinless nature of the Lord Jesus. Mark two accompaniments of this offering: (1) "He shall pour oil upon it"; (2) "and shall put frankincense thereon," typifying how God anointed Jesus with the Holy Ghost, and how fragrant his perfect obedience ever was to God. "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

As in the former chapter, so here and afterwards, no offering could be offered except through a priest, and that one of God's appointment. "He shall bring it to Aaron's sons the priests." So Jesus, after fulfilling in his own person and work all that was needed for offering and sacrifice, went up into the heavenly sanctuary as the true Priest, to carry out all needed priestly service for those "that come unto God by Him."

Rome's self-appointed priests carry on their mummeries in a worldly sanctuary, which is an offence against God's dispensational arrangements ("he shall think to change times and laws," Dan. vii. 25), and a deliberate rejection of the priesthood of the Lord Jesus, "which passeth not from one to another" (Heb. vii. 24, marg.).

No leaven was permitted in the meal offering (11), and of the Lord Jesus it is said (1 John iii. 5), "in Him is no sin." An exceptional case seems referred to (12), that of the firstfruits, in which, as in the thank offering (vii. 13), as well as the Pentecostal loaves (xxiii. 17), typifying the Church, leaven was tolerated. "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."

No meal offering is permitted without salt (13), and no exception to this rule (as in the case of leaven) is recognised. Salt typifies grace (see Matt. v. 13; Col. iv. 6), and this must never be absent, the more so when leaven is present, for "it is the contrary of leaven."—Sp. Com. See Gal. v. 17: "These are contrary the one to the other." A sinless Christian is a self-deception; but a graceless Christian is a self-contradiction.

FRIDAY, APRIL 19.—Leviticus III.

The Lord Jesus has been set forth in chap. i. as the burnt offering in relation to God, and in chap. ii. as the meal offering in relation to man; we are now to regard Him as the peace offering, to rectify the disturbed relations between God and man. The supplemental details as to the peace offering in chap. vii. 11, &c., need to be combined with what we read here, in order to get a comprehensive view of the whole subject.

The leading characteristic of the peace offering is that, in addition to its strictly sacrificial nature, it supplied food to God in the fat burnt upon the altar (16), to the priests in those parts specially reserved for them (vii. 33, 34), and to the worshipper in the part which he might appropriate (vii. 15). Thus it was a feast upon a sacrifice which had effected reconciliation, and in which both parties reconciled took part, and with them the priest who officiated in effecting the reconciliation. A beautiful typical picture of the truth set forth in 1 John i. 3: "Our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ, and these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full."

Mark a solemn warning as to the need of holiness in maintaining communion with God, conveyed by the words (vii. 20), "the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace offerings that pertain unto the Lord, having his uncleanness upon him, even that soul shall be cut off from his people."

SATURDAY, APRIL 20.—Leviticus IV.

The subject of this chapter is the Sin Offering, and that in a fourfold adaptation to the case of: (1) the Priest, (2) the whole Congregation, (3) the Ruler, and (4) any one of the People. The distinction between 2 and 4 is that expressed by the words collectively and individually, hence the importance of the person and of the occasion calls for a "bullock" in the first two cases; whilst a goat suffices for the two latter. An able German writer on the offerings (Kurtz) notes this distinction between the burnt offering, the peace offering, and the sin offering. "The act of burning was the culminating point of the burnt offering. The sacrificial meal was the culminating point of the peace offering. While that of the sin offering was the sprinkling of the blood. Hence the special object of the sin offering was expiation; all the rest fell into the background beside this sharply defined purpose."

Whilst the blood of the sin offering for the priest or for the whole congregation (a bullock) was brought into the holy place and sprinkled "seven times before the Lord, before the vail of the sanctuary," the blood of the two inferior sin offerings for the ruler or the individual (a goat) was only sprinkled on the horns of the brazen altar: in the former case Christ and his Church being more distinctly typified.

The character of the sin for which the sin offering was permitted is expressed by the words, "through ignorance," A.V.; or "unwittingly," R.V.; and in margin, "through error." It is the word used of the unintentional man-slayer (Numb. xxxv.), who "without enmity" or premeditation may kill a man. It distinguishes deliberate, wilful sin from that of which it may be said, "they know not what they do" (Luke xxiii. 34), of which sin the Apostle Peter could say, "I wot that through ignorance ye did it" (Acts iii. 17).

VAUDOIS OF THE UPPER ALPS.—A fortnight ago we gave the substance of an urgent appeal which has been circulated in the French evangelical papers, on behalf of these poor people. Disease and want have thinned them sadly of late years, and, as subsistence is impossible under present conditions, it is proposed to send some more families to Algeria, to join a colony already planted there and doing well. Such of our readers as may wish to help in this benevolent endeavour, may send donations to Mrs. Bowron, 18, Medina-villas, Hove, Brighton.

CHELSEA Y.W.C.A.—During last year forty-seven young women stayed at Tryon House, 8, Durham-place, Smith-street, Chelsea, S.W. The need of the Home has been amply proved, many who have sought its shelter having given expression to their sincere pleasure and gratitude. It is nearly fifteen years since Miss Catharine Ellis began this work, with its several interesting and useful adjuncts. Kind friends have sustained the hands of the workers, and, notwithstanding many difficulties, there was much to cheer during the year. Communications should be addressed to Miss Ellis at the Home.

THE TWO GREAT COMMANDMENTS.

MARK xii. 28—34. GOLDEN TEXT: ROM. xiii. 10.

THERE seems to have been a twofold reason for the Scribe's question. According to Matt. xxii. 34, 35, our Lord's decisive victory over the Sadducees had led the Pharisees to gather together in exultation, and to use the Scribe as their instrument in further "tempting" Christ. Their aim was to entangle Him in their controversy about the commandments. Braune says: "The Jews enumerated 613 ordinances:—365 prohibitions, according to the days of the year, 228 commandments, according to the parts of the body. The Pharisees distinguished between lesser and greater." It seemed certain that Jesus could not answer the question without giving offence to many. But in Mark the Scribe appears more like a sincere and earnest inquirer (28). He has attentively listened to the previous discussions, has admired the Lord's skilful replies, and seems concerned to make use of such a Teacher for his own guidance. His connection with the Pharisees is perhaps the only reason why he is not an avowed disciple of Jesus.

In answering the question our Lord quotes from the Old Testament. The first commandment is in Deut. vi. 4; and the second in Lev. xix. 18. The people were constantly erring because they knew not the Scripture, hence our Lord's frequent reference to it (see 24, 26, 36).

The first part of man's duty is love to God (29, 30).—In order to this it is necessary to recognise the unity of God. "The Lord is one" (R.V.). Our Lord has already been charged with blasphemy for having declared his equality and oneness with the Father (John x. 30—33); but He none the less forcibly declares that God is one, and that this truth lies at the very foundation of true religion. God demands the love of the entire being. "The heart"—the very centre of our being; "the soul," the life filling every part; "the mind," the intelligence, the power of knowing; "the strength," the energy with which all can act. Not only these, but the whole of each of them. Note the repeated "all." Our whole being was made for God, and finds no rest save as it is fully yielded to Him.

As man loves God, he obeys also the second commandment (31). No man can obey the second who does not obey the first. To know who is our neighbour, see Luke x. 25—37. And our love to him is to be like our love to ourselves. Does not our Lord's example exceed this (John xv. 12, 13)?

These two are hardly separate commandments, but different parts of the same. There cannot be true love to God without love to men, nor can there be true love to men where there is no love to God. The first was represented on the first table of the law, "which contained commands concerning God's glory, God's likeness, God's name, God's day, God's representatives. The second was expressed on the second table, which contained commands concerning person and life, marriage and household peace, goods and chattels, honour and right, and the heart of man. The two tables are one; containing the commandments of one, inseparable, heavenly law of love."—Braune. See such passages as 1 John iv. 20. Love to God will prompt not only respect for the rights of others, but affectionate interest and self-denying effort to promote their advantage.

Obedience to these great commandments is not possible under the law. Love cannot be produced by the mere command to love. It is well for all, even the youngest, to learn this. The law declares our duty, not in order that we may obey, but that we may know the fact of our disobedience (Gal. iii. 19; Rom. iii. 19, v. 20). But under the new covenant we receive the same command with a new power (Deut. xxx. 6; Jer. xxxii. 39; Ezek. xxxvi. 26; Heb. viii. 10). The love of God shed abroad in our heart makes obedience possible. The law failed through the weakness of the flesh. Christ succeeds by dying to put away our guilt, and by the Spirit of God sent to dwell within us.

The Scribe approved of the reply of Jesus (32, 33). He felt its convincing power, and was constrained to express admiration for it. Evidently, too, he had seen some glimpses of moral and spiritual truth behind the ceremonials of the Old Testament. He embodied in ver. 33 the teaching of 1 Sam. xv. 22; Ps. li. 16, 17; Micah vi. 6—8. Jesus recognises the wisdom of his reply. He saw "that he answered discreetly"="sensibly, intelligently."—Morison. And, therefore, he was "not far from the kingdom of God" (34). His clear apprehension of the truth showed that his judgment was already enlightened; he only needed now the surrender of his will. Are not many of our scholars in this condition? Knowing the truth, but not yielding to it. Though "not far from the kingdom," he was not in it. And we do not know whether he ever "crossed the line." It is possible to be very near to salvation, and yet to miss it at last. No one remains "near to the kingdom" for long. He either enters, or goes back from it. And the bitterest regret he can ever feel will be because of his having been so near without having entered.

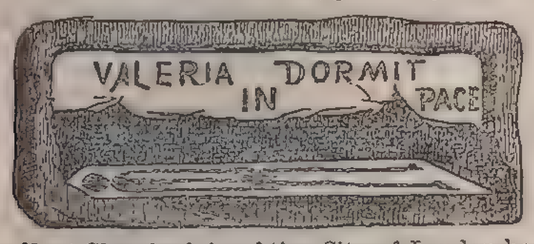
One God.—In his "Mission to the Mysore," Rev. W. Arthur tells of an interview he had with an old man, to whom he had formerly given a religious book. The man described it as "a very wise book," but it had "one fault which greatly surprised all who had read it." "What was the fault?" After some hesitation the old man replied, "It would not allow of any God but one! Now, what do you say to that?"

Love the Lord thy God.—Dr. Milnor, a distinguished lawyer of Philadelphia, returning to his home, was met by his daughter, saying "Papa, do you know I can read?" "No," he said, "let me hear you." She opened her Bible and read, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." The message went home to him as a solemn admonition. He retired to his room, and there sought the Lord, and was saved. Though over forty years of age, he abandoned politics and law for the ministry, and was for thirty years the rector of St. George's Church, Philadelphia.

LADY DUFFERIN'S FUND for supply of medical aid to the women of India (says The Queen) will effect a quiet revolution in the social state of India. Its immediate effect is to ameliorate the sufferings of the women of the country; its future will be to assist in softening the injurious effects of caste prejudice, and to unite more firmly the various races that inhabit the vast peninsula of Hindostan.

BETHNAL GREEN FREE LIBRARY.—Last week the Lord Mayor visited Bethnal Green for the purpose of presiding at the thirteenth annual gathering in connection with the Bethnal Green Free Library, London-street. The number of persons attending the library, lectures, and classes, was stated to be 50,000 for the year, being an increase upon the previous year of 8,000. The institution is not supported by a rate, and is dependent upon voluntary contributions. The Lord Mayor said it seemed to him that one of the most gratifying signs of the times was the recognition everywhere of the necessity of doing something towards the promotion of the higher education of the people. When that library was first established it was considered by many to be a very bold step, but it had blossomed into one of the most useful institutions in the Metropolis, and that showed the experiment was not a failure but a wonderful success. He could not help thinking there ought to be more institutions of a similar character. A resolution was adopted expressing the hope that definite steps would be taken towards the erection of new library premises which would provide sufficient accommodation.



CHILDREN'S CLOTHES FOR HOLIDAY HOMES.—At a drawing-room meeting held last week at Devonhurst, Chiswick, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Watts, the fact came out that the children who have opportunities for passing a fortnight in summer at the many Holiday Homes, founded by the Ragged School Union, are sometimes sadly inconvenienced by want of clothes. It occurred to Mrs. Watts that a good purpose would be answered if holiday clothes for boys and girls for use at the Homes exclusively, were provided; and accordingly, those who attended the meeting were enabled to see what the needles of about a dozen volunteer ladies had effected since the end of last year. A large apartment of the mansion presented the appearance of a show-room at a wholesale outfitters, so extensive was the provision of all that boy and girl holiday keepers could require, including even strong boots and hats and caps. The boon conferred will thus be very considerable; but while youthful hearts will be gladdened, the direct effect will be to prevent the spread of infection which may come from cheap second-hand garments which the poor, without thought of consequences, purchase for their children at rag-fair. The meeting at Devonhurst was the last of a series.

"The excellent Chamberlain of the City of London has given in these pages a clear and accurate account of the interesting remains of early Christianity in the CATACOMBS OF ROME."

The Bookseller, Feb., 1889.

"Mr. SCOTT'S object in this work is to derive from the CATACOMBS a vindication of pure and primitive Christianity, and an exposure of the corruptions of Romanism.' He has attained a high degree of success, and produced a valuable and standard work. We rejoice in its continued circulation. It is remarkably cheap."

Baptist Magazine, March, 1889.

"Little wonder that these Lectures, wherein the story of Rome pagan, Rome Christian, and Rome apostate—as revealed in the CATACOMBS—is so admirably told, should have won a wide welcome."

Word and Work, Feb. 8, 1889.

"A powerful vindication of pure and primitive Christianity. The value of the book is enhanced by a great number of fine Illustrations! The public have given this book a very hearty reception, as it has now reached its fourth edition. May it reach a thousand more editions! Mr. SCOTT has done his work well. This book will well repay a careful perusal. Mr. SCOTT has something to tell; and he tells it in a most fascinating manner."

NOW READY. IMPORTANT WORK BY DR. PIERSON.

"Many Infallible Proofs."

The Evidences of Christianity;

Or, THE WRITTEN AND LIVING WORD OF GOD.

BY ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D., of Philadelphia.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day; and found too that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"

Methodist Times, Feb. 7, 1889.

"Every preacher and teacher ought to know something of the 'Evidences'; and it would be hard to find a better popular work on the subject than this. The author divides his book into two sections—The Bible; and the Person of Christ. With the second portion of his subject Dr. Pierson deals with special freshness and force—though the whole book is admirable. We strongly advise our readers to get it if they can."

Local Preachers' Treasury, March, 1889.

"The majority of people believe because they believe; and if called upon for a reason (we avoid for obvious causes the use of the word 'proof,' which is so frequently in our author's mouth), they are unable to give one. It is for the pupose of aiding those who have begun to think for themselves, and have fallen into doubt, that Dr. Pierson has written his book. It conveys clearly and vigorously the argument for the truth of the Scripture, and the evidence upon which the Christian religion is founded. In this respect it may favourably be commended."—Publishers' Circular, Feb., 1889.

"In this book the able author has met a great want, and laid a large class under obligation. It is too often the case that treatises on the Christian Evidences are so learned and scholastic that they are of use to students only. Here, however, is a book of such a plain, practical, common-sense stamp that it cannot fail to be highly popular."—Footsteps of Truth, March, 1889.

"A book which is the result of its author's own struggle with doubt, and victory over it, can never be worthless. Dr. Pierson's argument for the supernatural origin and unique power of the Bible is lucid, comprehensive, trenchant, and conclusive. The parts which deal with the moral beauty and sublimity of the Bible and with the Person of Christ—are exceedingly good. Those who honestly weigh the successive stages of Dr. Pierson's argument can reach but one conclusion."

Baptist Magazine, March, 1889.

"A book like this deserves a place beside Cooper's 'Bridge of History over the Gulf of Time,' as a forcible and interesting evidence of the truth of Christianity. Dr. Pierson tells us in his preface that, having himself been in the dense thicket of doubt, he is desirous of leading others out by the pathway by which he emerged into the light of faith. This volume reiterates the unshaken proofs of the Bible as a Divine Revelation, and also shows how Jesus Christ was none other than the Son of God. It is neatly bound, and has a portrait of the writer."—The Bookseller, Feb., 1889.

"This is an able and scholarly book, from the pen of a gifted American writer and preacher. It is full of instructive matter from its opening to its closing sentence. In thoughtful and eloquent terms Dr. Pierson has gone over the MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS that the Christian Religion is Divine. The author of this book is a safe and able guide to those who are troubled with the darkness of doubt. We have great pleasure in recommending Dr. Pierson's book. It should be in all our Sunday-school and Y.M.C.A. libraries. It s a splendid book to bestow on a young man. We hopethis volume will have a wide circulation."

Irish Congregational Magazine, March, 1889.

GENEVA.—The Popular Evangelisation Committee has decided to devote more attention than hitherto to the work of definite instruction in Christian truth. This will, it is believed, give increased force to the Gospel appeal. Converts are in future to be combined in bands, the members of which will pray for and encourage one another, as well as work in loving association for the glory of God and the good of men.

"A more suggestive and helpful volume it would not be easy to name: and it is so tenderly persuasive in its tone that few will be able to read it without deriving spiritual benefit from the perusal."
Christian Leader.

"Every page is full of stimulating thought for Christians; and we can heartily commend its earnest admonitions and stirring appeals for a HIGHER LIFE. From beginning to end it is a live book, and is worthy of a place in every Christian's library."—Christian Commonwealth.

"Like all Mr. MEYER'S writings it is delightfully practical and experimental. His teaching gives no uncertain sound, and the way in which he corroborates every statement by appropriate passages of Holy Scripture is truly admirable."

THE "CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE BAND" PLEDGE BOOK.

Paper covers, 6d.; Cloth boards, 1s.

"I haven't taken up teetotal work, but teetotal work has taken me up! Morgan & Scott made me accept a big, handsome Pledge Book, in February; and somehow the thing has fairly caught fire here. One led to another, and yesterday, boys were coming all day to sign! I had twenty-five recruits yesterday alone, and a whole squad more are coming this evening! and we are going in for getting EVERY boy in the whole village!—and now, 'Please, miss, mayn't the girls sign?' So I have got to open a girls' branch as well! So the work grows."

"Does 'Member' know the Pledge Card used by Miss F. R. Havergal, and published with corresponding book, by Messrs. Morgan & Scott? It strikes the highest keynote for all Temperance Work, for it is worded thus:—

"'IN VIEW of the great dishonour done to our most gracious God and Saviour; and in consideration of the damage, temporal and eternal, to our fellow-creatures, through the drinking of strong drink, I AGREE to abstain from all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage, and to discountenance their use by others (John xv. 5; 1 Thess. v. 22; Philippians iv. 13).'"

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

SEVERE BRONCHIAL ATTACKS.
RIGHT LUNG AFFECTED.
CASE of MISS HUNT, near NEWNHAM.

In the summer of the year before last, Mrs. HUNT, of Ruspidge, near Newnham, Gloucestershire, having heard of benefits received from my treatment in her neighbourhood, wrote to consult me on her daughter's case.

The patient had never been strong. She had had a cough for a long time. Expectoration had become difficult, attended with severe pains in the side, chest, and shoulders. Breathing spasmodic and very bad on the slightest exercise. The appetite was failing. The secretions were all wrong. Hectic flushes and night perspirations troubled her. Two doctors had examined her. One said there was a deformity on the right side. Another said the right lung was affected.

I advised her, and following my advice she got so much better that the parents expressed themselves as getting "quite hopeful of her." After this she had a relapse (at the end of August). But they persevered, by such help as I readily gave them. In February, thinking she needed a tonic, in addition, I ordered steel and quinine.

She continued to get on well, and writing me on the 2nd January last, the mother says:—"With thankful heart I write to tell you my daughter has had no attack of the bronchitis since we last wrote. Your medicine seems to have effected a cure, for which we are all truly thankful. You can make use of this if you think proper."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Making and mending boots and shoes,
Manufacturing all sorts of brushes,
Carpentering and joinering,
Box-making,
Wood-chopping,
Tailoring,
Baking huge piles of bread, and perhaps Blacksmithing.

Her Majesty's Hospital for Sick Children, adjoining, can also be inspected, with its various pretty wards, the neat cots of which contain so many poor young sufferers.

Then at 3.15 exactly the new Gymnasium will be opened for a public Meeting, over which Dr. Barnardo himself will preside. At this Meeting the Chairman will tell some wonderful stories of the work. The Rev. W. J. Mayers will delight his auditors, old and young, by his touching address, entitled, "Life's Lights and Shadows as they fall on the Children," illustrated by several beautiful cartoons. Mr. Mayers will also sing several Sacred Solos, one of which will be accompanied by the music of the bells.

The little Scotch Pipers in full array will march to and fro, playing their thrilling music.

The Hand Bell Ringers will also perform selections upon their sweet peal of 100 silver-toned bells. One little boy will play on the dulcimer, another will give cornet solos illustrative of Home life, while yet a third will produce distant echoes of fairy bells.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the Rev. Canon J. McConnell Hussey, of Christ Church, Brixton.

With reference to the biographical sketch of the late John Bright, which appears in our present issue, a ministerial friend writes:—

When preaching once in Rochdale, a lady wished to take me round the neighbourhood in her carriage. I asked to ride by the coachman on the box. He was a Christian man, and had been in some position in Mr. Bright's household. He spoke strongly of the Christian character of the statesman, and said, "I used to see his Bible. It was well thumbed."

Nothing could be more appropriate for meditation in connection with the day which commemorates the Lord's death than the early chapters of Leviticus, which form the present subject of our "Notes on Daily Bible Readings." Christians, generally, need to be much better acquainted than they are with the varied aspects of the cross of Christ.

We are informed by the proprietors of "a new Radical Sunday penny paper" of its near advent into the journalistic world, and are asked to say that it "should prove to be a success." We have no desire to see any further aggravation of a great evil, and we cannot, therefore, do other than hope that it may prove a decided failure.

The Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society does noble work in relieving the wants of those left destitute by loss of life at sea. Just now it is making strenuous efforts to strengthen its "Special Disaster Fund," out of which grants are promptly made to bereaved relatives. In view of the terrible and destructive storms that so frequently visit our coasts, we trust that the Society will be well sustained by the generosity of a sympathising public.

Few more wonderful narratives of missionary effort have been recorded than that of which Dr. A. T. Pierson writes in the March Missionary Review (Funk & Wagnalls, Fleet-street). He tells of the remarkable conversion of an intelligent Cuban, Captain Diaz, in New York; how, with yearning of heart, he went back to Cuba, and gathered first his own kindred in the room of a hotel in Havana; how, becoming new creatures in Christ, they and others formed a Christian society; how Romanism sought to crush them how the Lord protected them, and so prospered the work that in two years 1100 Cubans have been baptized, six churches organised in the cities of the island, 4600 dollars contributed by converts in a single year, seventeen missionaries set apart, 3000 children brought under Protestant instruction, and 8000 persons, among them an eminent priest, are now awaiting baptism. Dr. Pierson adds: "Such a work has never been surpassed in the history of modern missions."

In relation to foreign missions, the rapidly progressive influence of women is among the most notable signs of the Spirit's operation. It was in 1878 that for the first time missionary women took part in the proceedings of a missionary Conference (at Mildmay), and read papers. How prominent and powerful was the presence of missionary women in last year's London Conference is known; and it is in harmony with these facts that a young Christian lady in New York was honoured of God to bring out of Popish darkness the Cuban Captain to whom the foregoing note refers.

The Tablet, a Roman Catholic organ, gives an account of a visit paid by our Queen to the Bernardine Nuns at Biarritz during her recent stay on the Continent. The report says Her Majesty sat down in the chapel "and listened to the sweet prayers of the Bernardines, who likewise sang the Salve Regina, which the Queen heard with marked emotion." This Salve Regina is a prayer to the Virgin Mary, in which she is spoken of as "our life, our sweetness, and our hope," and is entreated as "our Advocate" to turn on the petitioner her merciful eyes. As loyal Protestant subjects of Her Majesty, we cannot but deeply regret that she should have countenanced such unscriptural and Popish errors.

It is gratifying to learn, from the Report of the Fourth Indian National Congress, held at Allahabad in December last, that the earnest exertions of British Christians, in advancement of the cause of temperance and purity in India, are duly appreciated by the educated classes of the Empire. The unrighteousness and folly of the Government "out-still" and excise policy, and the State regulation of vice are quite patent to ordinary observers, and were condemned by English and native gentlemen alike, in terms doing credit to their sense and judgment. Twelve hundred in number, assembled from all parts of the Empire, the delegates expressed their desire to co-operate by all means in their power in attaining the total abrogation of the laws and regulations which shock their sense of right and purity.

The statements in Mr. Runciman's article in The Fortnightly Review are borne out by the concise but equally terrible assertions of two clergymen recently with reference to the gambling mania. At the London Diocesan Conference, Rev. E. A. Stuart said that the time had come for the church to make "as strong a protest against gambling as against drink and immorality. While drink and immorality slay their thousands, gambling is slaying its tens of thousands." And in the Lower House of the Northern (U.S.) Convocation, Rev. W. R. Sharrock, of Cleveland, asserted his conviction, as a parochial clergyman, that gambling "presents more obstacles to the progress of church work, and causes a clergyman more disappointment, than even the great vice of drunkenness." This growing evil requires to be promptly dealt with, and a law dealing with the thousands of bogus clubs throughout the country, which are simply betting houses under a legal name, is urgently required. Will not some Christian member of Parliament do the State signal service by boldly taking up the matter in the Legislature?

Disloyalty to the throne, and to the reigning House of these realms, must bring evils upon us. But have not the people a claim? When Sunday-school teachers labour, through summer heat and winter's cold, to rescue the young from gambling and immoral associations; when temperance reformers deny themselves daily, and spend wealth and time to protect the people from drunkenness and disorder; can it surprise us that the District Temperance Union of Leicester should have met, and not only passed the following resolution, but requested that copies of it should be sent to the Prince of Wales and to the Press:—

That we earnestly deprecate the visit of the Prince of Wales to Leicester races, as the gambling and intemperance caused by them, and intensified by his visit, are very great and serious public evils, and a curse to a large number of men and women in this town and neighbourhood.

Public opinion has won great victories in England, and has just now its very solemn duties. On this account we may rejoice that the Nonconformist ministers of Leeds have petitioned the Town Council against demoralising theatrical advertisements.

There is much to be said for Archdeacon Farrar's view in this month's Expositor that there was a previous relationship between most of the Apostles and our Lord. If so, the fact is full of valuable suggestion. As Galilean youths, they would hear of the years of Christ's life before his ministry commenced. They may have been so impressed as to desire that He should manifest Himself to the world, and, when called to follow Him, have instantaneously complied. Such a probable state of things—and only thus do we refer to it—would be in harmony with the effect we may be sure the life of Jesus produced during those thirty years of which it has pleased God that so little should be recorded. The obedience to his call of those who knew Him earlier would thus go to confirm the Gospel history.

We are glad to see that the "Shop Hours Regulation Committee" have prosecuted several traders in the West-end of London for employing apprentices undue hours. In one case a lad had been kept at work 82½ hours per week, and fined half-a-crown for refusing to work during a supposed meal hour. The "sweating" of grown men and women is bad enough, but this overworking of comparative children is worse. We do not think that any sentimental sympathy should be allowed to interfere between the law and the offenders in these cases, who simply are making haste to be rich at the expense of the health and happiness of their young servants.

A little common sense action is frequently worth more than a great deal of sentimental theorising, and we are glad to see that a County Council have passed a resolution stating that they will require from all contractors "a declaration that they pay the rates of wages, and observe the hours of labour, generally accepted in their trade." In the event of the contrary being proved against them, the tender is to be refused. We trust this worthy example will be followed generally by our corporate and other bodies, as such action would go far to lessen the evils to which public attention has of late been so strongly directed.

The London County Council, among its many other functions, will have the licensing and the control of music-halls in the Metropolis. We are pleased to see that some of the earnest-minded members of the Council feel the responsibility that rests upon them, and are agitating for the appointment of a special committee that will make investigation into the character of the entertainments at these places of amusement, before licensing-day comes round. It is a most rational and desirable proceeding, and we trust no obstacles will be thrown in the way of thoroughly carrying it out. If the Council can purify and disinfect the moral atmosphere of these too popular resorts, they will deserve well of their generation.

Mr. J. W. Stevenson, of the China Inland Mission, writes from Shanghai:—

One fears for the famine fever. It is coming on. I trust that friends at home who contributed will pray that the distributors may be preserved. As far as we can see, funds will be urgently wanted for the next two months for the north.

We are gratified to receive from C. D. F., Queen's College, Cambridge, particulars showing that the late Mr. John Rylands did not confine himself to benefactions by bequest after his death, but gave largely and liberally during his life:—

A gift of £20,000 to the Manchester Ship Canal.

A yearly donation of £500 to Owen's College, Manchester.

The total maintenance of a Free Clergy Rest Home in Ryde, Isle of Wight.

Total maintenance of several Homes for destitute children; also for women; the same for aged and poor gentlemen.

The purchase of a large printing press in Rome, whence he issued for free distribution several thousands of New Testaments in Italian.

The total cost of maintenance of a number of men collecting the choicest hymns from all over the world.

Total cost of printing a new and unique Bible, containing analytical notes and comments, the compilation of which occupied over 20 years.

These are said to be only a few of the good objects on which Mr. Rylands bestowed his wealth.

Readers of Thomas A. Trollope's wonderful and accurate historical account in "Paul the Pope and Paul the Friar," of the jobbery and deceit which accompany the election of a Pope, will be interested to know that already the Cardinals are carrying on intrigues to secure the election of Rampolla to the Papal Chair, and it is said that the Pope himself is secretly negotiating with foreign powers in regard to his successor. If the latter statement is true, Leo XIII. can scarcely have read Mr. Trollope's powerful history before it was condemned to be placed in the "Index." What a comment is all this upon the claim to infallibility, and the professed belief in the Pope's possession of it!

Dr. Pierson on Missions.

In this missionary century, every day is a crisis and every hour a pivot of destiny. What are we doing? The cry of retrenchment startles our missionary workers, at a time when our motto should be not only nunquam retrorsum, but semper prorsum. Retrenchment! Why, if at such a time the Church of Christ restricts her missionary work, hesitates to follow the moving and luminous pillar, God may let back upon his own hesitating hosts the waters which He has heaped up to give us a dry path through the very deep. A Church that with such world openings before her—the last of the hermit nations coming forth from exclusion and seclusion to welcome the contact of the Gospel missionary, Ethiopia stretching forth her hands unto God, the isles of the sea waiting for his law and within thirty years rearing thousands of churches on the ruins of idol shrines and cannibal ovens—if the Church now fails or even falters with such Divine voices calling, such doors opening, such fields inviting; with harvest ripening so close upon the sowing that the ploughman is overtaken by the reaper—such a Church may well ask whether there is not a risk of apostasy from God in the matter of missions!

The time for trifling is past; we must go to work in dead earnest. The time for defensive movements is past; we have something better to do than to use spades and throw up earth-works and trenches. Out from behind all walls where we have sought shelter from the fire of the foe, let us move with all the weapons of aggressive warfare, and drive back the enemy by the boldness and promptness and unity of one combined movement. The best apologetic defence of missions is an energetic prosecution of missions. Let the Word of God be scattered in every part of the field; let the children of the kingdom sow themselves side by side with the Word of God, content to die and be buried if need be, in order, dying, to live in the fruits of their heroic devotion to Christ and souls. Let no part of the world be left without the witness of the Gospel; let money be poured out in rich abundance that all whom God makes willing may be sent forth into the harvest-field; let there be above all else a new revival of covenant prayer throughout the whole Church of God, for a new effusion of the Holy Ghost; and while critics are complaining, and owl-eyed worldly-wise men are blinking, we shall have compassed the globe with missionary effort, and our sufficient answer to all antagonists shall be found not in the counterfire of argument, but in the waving harvests of a thousand fertile fields! —The Missionary Review.

MISS WHATELY'S WORK IN CAIRO.—The schools and mission established in Cairo by the late Miss M. L. Whately will be carried on by her sister, Miss E. Jane Whately, who is well known as the biographer of her father, the late Archbishop Whately, and as a frequent contributor to various periodicals. She will have the valuable aid of Mrs. Shakoor, the widow of a Syrian gentleman, who voluntarily assisted Miss Mary Whately in her work until his death some years ago. Mrs. Shakoor had for many years been the devoted friend and companion of the late Miss Whately.

"WITHOUT SUFFERING."

A Christian friend said to me, "Pray to God to spare my mother suffering; I am ready to give her up if only He will deliver her from pain." There are many of Christ's little flock who forget we all need to pass through the refining furnace of affliction that we may be made like unto gold purified in the fire.

I visited a poor dying cabman in the West-end of London, and was grieved to hear him ask, with a look of sad perplexity, why God still kept him here in pain and weariness. He had not the joy of knowing that the Great Refiner, in infinite love and wisdom, was only perfecting his work in his precious jewel, and that not one instant longer than necessary would the fiery ordeal be permitted to touch the object of his tender care. A baptism of pain is generally the precursor to a baptism of glory. Our blessed Lord said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished." A clergyman said to me recently, "I would almost court suffering for the sake of the purification wrought through it."

Many suffering Christians would receive fresh courage could they but realise that a longer "abiding in the flesh" in meek submission to the will of God would work out for them "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." It has been well said, "Going to glory is only part of our destiny, walking in Christ's footsteps, bearing his cross, and patiently waiting his time, neither wishing to delay nor to hasten it, are quite as important parts of our duty." We must first be partakers of Christ's sufferings, and then in his own time we shall be sharers of his joy. I. M.

MORE ABUNDANT LIFE.

Our gifted and earnest friend, Rev. F. B. Meyer, has had a very interesting and profitable series of services in Glasgow. They were held for three days in St. Paul's Parish Church, there, under the leadership of his warmly attached friend, Rev. Jas. Paton, the pastor. The meetings grew in numbers and in intensity, a very considerable number of ministers being present at each service, a series of themes were expounded, leading up from "our standing" in Christ, till the very crown of our calling was reached in "the baptism" of the Holy Spirit. Anything more joyful than the quick response with which the people followed and drank in point after point, could not be desired by any preacher. The Scotch, especially the old Presbyterians, are not over demonstrative, but in their own solid way they showed how deeply they were impressed.

Mr. Meyer's winsome manner, and finely analytic expounding of Scripture, gained the heart and kindled the intellect in a marvellous degree. The closing meeting, and the dedication prayer, in which from seven to eight hundred people, largely a congregation of men, bowed in a solemn hush, was a scene than which nothing could bring human souls closer to God. Mr. Meyer has a great mission to lift up Christian people to a higher idea of life in Christ. The Lord prosper him in it more and more. Prester James.

A very telling pamphlet is published by Messrs. Dyer Brothers (1d.) on "The Employment of Children in Public Entertainments." It ought to be well distributed among the families of the poorer classes.

Messrs. James Nisbet & Co. have in the press a truly remarkable book from the pen of Mr. James Runciman, entitled, "A Dream of the North Sea." Mr. Runciman has been through the scenes he describes. The book is suitably illustrated by Messrs. J. R. Wells and C. J. Staniland, R.I., and will be published at 5s.

THE RISEN CHRIST.

AN ADDRESS TO GLASGOW BUSINESS MEN,
By Rev. G. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

The Incarnation and the Resurrection constitute the foundation upon which the whole superstructure of Christianity rests. These are both historical facts. The incarnation is like that part of the foundation which is underground; it is not subject to the ordinary rules of historical inquiry. In the nature of things it would be impossible to prove the fact. Resurrection is like that great cope-stone that crowns the structure, and is open to historical confirmation.

The resurrection of Christ is the historical point against which all criticism has been directed. With reference to the resurrection from the dead, the unbeliever asks, "How?" God does not answer the philosophical inquirer. He says, in effect, "Never mind the how; there is the fact." Meet the fact, not the speculative question concerning it. The sceptic rejects both the Incarnation and Resurrection, because, he says, they are supernatural, or profoundly mysterious; and it is impossible for us to know the how. The believer accepts the supernatural, not knowing the explanation but content to wait. In the meantime he enters into practical fellowship and relation with Jesus Christ, and into the experimental knowledge of his power. The Apostle Paul says, "That I might know Him and the power of his resurrection," that is, that he might come to experience in his own life what were the practical and real benefits of that resurrection to him.

Let us consider four great experimental practical benefits springing out of the resurrection of Jesus Christ in connection with the believer. In the first place, the resurrection of Jesus Christ guarantees the fact of the Incarnation. In other words, it is the guaranteeing to us of the truths and the statements in revelation that Jesus Christ is the Son of God—that He is God manifest in the flesh. We are thus brought face to face with the conclusion that if Jesus Christ is the Son of God, then we must either by a personal faith and acceptance of Him come into relationship with Him; or by a rejection of Him confirm our alienation, and continue in open opposition to Him. If Christ be the Son of God my relation to Him determines both my relation to God and my destiny. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, says that Jesus Christ "was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom. i. 1—4).

Jesus Christ, from the beginning of his controversy with the Jews until the time of his crucifixion, was questioned as to his being the Son of God. In the temptation Satan said, "If Thou be the Son of God, demonstrate it by leaping from the pinnacle of the Temple." When on the cross, they said to Him, "If Thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross, and we will believe Thee." When Jesus was before the Sanhedrim, indicted and tried for blasphemy, He said He was the Son of God. The high priest said, "I adjure Thee, by the living God, that Thou tell us whether Thou be the Christ, the Son of God." He answered, "Thou hast said: nevertheless, I say unto you, hereafter thou shalt see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." "Though you destroy Me as to my flesh, I will survive that destruction, and you will yet see Me coming in the clouds of heaven."

The second thing that comes out of the fact of the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead is that it justifies the atonement. It makes the atonement of Jesus Christ the sufficient and accepted ground of the sinner's justification. "What the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and for sin (or by a sacrifice for sin) condemned sin in the flesh" (Rom. viii. 3). God has found a way through the incarnation and voluntary sacrifice of Jesus Christ of taking up the question of sin (as that is the ground of controversy between God and man) and of settling that controversy. Jesus Christ by his death, through the eternal Spirit, according to the determinate counsel of God, settled the question of sin, so that you and I do not need to offer a settlement of sin. Personally, we could not; but God, in Christ, has finally and completely settled this matter. It is not now—What will you do with your sins? but, What will you do with Jesus Christ, who has dealt with your sin? Will you accept the settlement?

You may say, "How am I to know that that sacrifice is satisfactory to God, and is a settlement of the question of sin?" Rom. iv. 25 gives the answer: "Jesus...was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." When God raised up Jesus Christ, it was God's receipt in full to the whole world for sin. God, as it were, says: "I am satisfied. I take the man Christ Jesus, upon whom your iniquities were laid, and whom I judged for these sins. I raise Him from the dead, which is the extreme penalty for sin measured out in all its length and breadth, and I set Him, the man Christ Jesus, upon the right hand of the throne of the Majesty on high, and I offer you pardon on that ground alone." The Resurrection is, therefore, God's guarantee to the sufficiency of the sacrifice for the expiation and atonement of my sin. When I accept Jesus Christ, I accept that settlement of sin which God is pleased with; that makes peace. "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. v. 1).

In the next place, the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead guarantees the Word of God. In the guarantee of that Word, it guarantees every promise He makes in his Word, including forgiveness of sin, and justification from sin. On the authority of his Word, and by his death and resurrection, He sets us right with the moral government, or law of God. Whosoever believeth in Him passes out of death into life. He sets us right also by regeneration, by bringing us out of the moral obliquity of sin. Jesus Christ by his resurrection, and on the ground of his resurrection promises, "Because I live ye shall live also." There are thirty thousand promises in the Scriptures that bear on the temporal, spiritual, and eternal welfare of man. The resurrection of Jesus Christ is the certification of every promise made in the name of Jesus Christ. What boundless sufficiency there must be in Jesus Christ raised from the dead for every believer in Him. God, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, has certified to us thirty thousand promises; if these precious promises are not being fulfilled to us day by day, it is because we do not use these certified promises, calling upon God that raised his Son from the dead to make them good to us.

In the next place the resurrection gives to you and me, not a dead Christ, but a living Saviour. We have not simply One who has expiated sin and set us right before God, but a living, personal Saviour who stands by us throughout the whole battle of life, from the time we accept Him until He puts us, without spot or blemish in the presence of his glory. One of the mistakes that believers make is this—whilst they accept Christ as their atonement, and as the ground of their forgiveness and justification with God, they seek to go on looking exclusively to the cross for the benefit it gives.

Some years ago, one Sunday night in the church of which I was pastor, in Brooklyn, New York, the well-to-do congregation that gather there had listened to their usual evening address. There was a poor fellow sitting away in one of the back seats. He sat there with his head bowed down on his knees. He was ragged and dirty. His face was bloated, and he had two black eyes. He was one of the most pitiable objects you could look upon. The congregation passed out and looked on him, as the priest and Levite did when they saw the man who had fallen amongst thieves. They wondered how such a dirty drunkard had got into their respectable church. The church officer came to me and said, "Mr. Pentecost, there is a man down there." "Who is he?" "I don't know." "What does he want?" "I don't know." "Well, I'll go and see."

I went and sat down in a pew in front of him, and put my hand upon his shoulder, and said, "Well, my friend, what is the matter?" Then he lifted up that foul face, and said, "Will you listen to my story a minute? I came into this church to-night. I don't live within four miles of it. I have not been in a church for many years. But," he asked, "is Jesus Christ alive from the dead?" I had been preaching on the Resurrection. I said, "Yes, my friend, He is alive from the dead." Then he went on to tell me a little of his sad history. "When I was sixteen years of age I believe I was converted. For four years I went to the church, and to the prayer-meeting, and read my Bible, and rejoiced in Christ Jesus. I got a taste for strong drink, and was overcome by it. I confessed my sin, and rejoiced in the forgiveness of my sin. I stood for some time, then I fell; I stood again, and fell again, until I was utterly discouraged. I said to myself there was no help for me, and I gave myself up to drink for about sixteen years. During that time I have been a miserable drunkard. I never go to church. I oftentimes think of those early days. I thought there was no help or salvation for me. But, if Jesus Christ is alive from the dead, and He is the Son of God, do you think He would help me yet?"

I said, "Have you not always known that He was alive from the dead?" "I supposed so, but I never thought of Him as alive from the dead and able to help me." He had grasped the blessed fact that He died for sinners and because He has died God forgives sin. But he had never followed Him to the grave and up and out of it to the glory, there seated at the right hand of God, a living Saviour able to help in every time of need. But that night, in his drunkenness, and after sixteen years of wretched debauchery, he got a glimpse of Christ as a present, living Saviour at the right hand of God. He fell on his knees, and cried to this living, risen Saviour to help him, to save him there and then. He arose with tears of penitence and sorrow streaming down his face, giving, as the poor fellow said, what was left of his miserable life back to Him who died for him and rose again. It is six years since that happened, and that man has since lived and walked in the beauty of holiness, and in the power of God, because he knew Christ as a risen Christ.

We lose power when we lose touch with a living Almighty Saviour. We are apt to deal too much with a dead Saviour, not realising that He is alive from the dead, and able to give resurrection power to every man that will stand on resurrection ground with Him. The resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead has assured us that death, that last enemy, that foul destroyer and tyrant, that has reigned with undisputed power from Adam till now, both without law and under law; death that has robbed the cradle, and has broken up and made homes desolate; death, that knows no distinction, but comes to the king on his throne, and the peasant in his hut; death that has come to our homes again and again, and demands that we should give up without qualification our dearest ones; death that defies human power and human wealth, at last has met its master.

He hangs on the cross, and they say, "Come down from the cross, and we will believe." But Jesus, the Son of God, did not come down from the cross. According to a purpose that death and hell knew nothing about, He voluntarily hung upon that cross, bound by the cords of love, and not held fast by the nails that pierced his hands and feet, until He had finished man's redemption. Did it ever occur in this world that a dying man cried with a loud voice? Men generally die of sheer exhaustion. But with a loud voice Jesus said, "It is finished!' and He bowed his head and dismissed his spirit. Death did not drag his soul from his body. Having voluntarily accomplished the work of redemption, He took up the challenge; He leapt from the cross and chased death through the grave down into hell, and triumphed over every enemy that lies between man and the throne. On the third day God raised Him up from the grave. After forty days, in which He showed Himself alive, He sped away into the presence of God, carrying a redeemed human nature there with Him, leaving a direct pathway from the cross, and the grave, into the presence of God. Now, He says, "Be of good courage, I have overcome the world." "Because I live ye shall live also, and he that liveth and believeth on Me shall never die."

ASSISTED EMIGRATION.—For some years Miss Armitage, of Farnley House, Chelsea, has been helping promising but poor young men to emigrate to Canada. Observing that some of the young men attending a week-night Bible-class, which she conducts, were unable to get work, and that others would be better off if quite away from old companions, Miss Armitage began to help them to the great Dominion of the West. Two or three have gone each spring, and several have done very well. Five are now wanting to go, the cost being about £8 each.

THE PASTORS' COLLEGE.—In sending out his invitations to the usual College meeting and supper, Mr. Spurgeon says:—"At the supper a large part of the pecuniary supply has always been given—last year more than ever. If you count me worthy, please help me again this year. I cannot express my deep gratitude to faithful friends who have these many years held up my hands. I give my time and labour with no reward but the joy of serving my Lord, which is more than a sufficient recompense. I hope to have your presence and help on Wednesday, May 8. My trust in the living God is firm, and my conviction of the truth of the old Gospel of the Lord Jesus is deeper than ever. He will maintain his own cause."

For the Young.

FOR ENGLISH BOYS AND GIRLS.

My Dear Young Friends,—

I told you in my last letter that I would, if possible, tell you how Volvent looks in her winter dress. We are just returned from a visit there, which we made in the interval between two snow-storms; our jardinière was the first to cross the col between La Motte and Volvent through the deep new-fallen snow, so I think we have seen Volvent at its best. In the village itself, the narrow dirty streets were covered a foot deep or more with sprays of box or fir, so that everything was either green or white, and the steps of those who passed made no sound, though everyone wore the ugly but comfortable sabots.

All round and so close to us were the beautiful mountains, everything rough and bare and desolate covered by the deep soft snow. I thought they would always look the same, but they seemed to change continually—sometimes a strange blue shade, then dead white, then a soft grey, and then, when the sun came out, they were dazzling and almost blinding to look upon. How silent it was when the wild wind ceased; but that was not often, for the storm that began the day after our arrival lasted with short intervals nearly ten days. The roads were blocked, and getting away would have been impossible, if we had wished to go. How glad we were to be there just at the best time, when the people were most at leisure, for outdoor work was impossible, and feeding the goats, sheep, and pigs, three times a day, seemed to be all the men had to do.

It was well that our one room was vast and bare, for it had to serve for mission-hall as well as for parlour, and kitchen, and bedroom. Every night the Protestants of the village came and a few others, the boys to sing and admire the "Rayons de Soleil" of which we had a stock, and the others to learn the hymns and to listen to the Bible stories, which were as new to the grown-up people as to the children. Then, after a few days, we showed our magic lantern; a few views at first, and then the boys, I suppose, told the others, and they came too. M. le Curé was very angry, and went from house to house denouncing us, and warning the boys that those who came near us would go "droit en enfer," but they only laughed and came all the same. It was sad to see them, for it seemed to me it was just the way to make infidels of them. The men came first, young men and middle-aged, and then the women; all were much delighted, and it was a great privilege to announce the Gospel, and to pray that the seed might fall into good ground, and bring forth fruit one day a hundredfold.

We found our old friend still confined to bed, and still hungering for the Word of God. One day she was in such pain that I thought it no use attempting to read, but she gasped out in patois: "Take the Book, and find the place, and read 'quand même.'" It was wonderful how soon the moans ceased, as I read, "Let not your heart be troubled!" The Curé came to see her after our last visit to Volvent; but, as she asked him to read to her from her Bible, and assured him she needed nothing else, he went away hurriedly, and did not come back. She makes the same request of all her visitors, so those who only go to sit and gossip have left off going. We were only twice able to get to Rostan, where the paralysed girl lives. We found her crouched by her fire in her dark, desolate-looking room. The floor is rock and earth, and the snow had drifted half across the floor, but she did not seem dull. She had a pretty white hen beside her, and her little nephew, and, as she said, "Ca garde de languir." She has got into the way of asking her visitors to read to her from her Testament; she told us the last chapter she had heard was the last of Revelation. "How beautiful it is!" she said. We gathered the women and children of the little hamlet in her room, and had a nice meeting with them.

Our last Sunday was a lovely day, and all the distant Protestants came in for a meeting. We have promised that if possible we will go again for Pâques. The snow melted rapidly all Sunday, and Monday was mild as May. The deeper drifts only remained, and we had little difficulty in recrossing the Col de La Motte, where we took the diligence for the Drôme Valley, very glad and thankful for the goodness and mercy which had followed us all the way.

—Your sincere friend, S. R. Geldard.

WHERE DO YOU LIVE?

I knew a man whose name was Horner,
Who used to live on Grumble Corner;
Grumble Corner, in Cross-Patch Town,
And he never was seen without a frown.
He grumbled at this; he grumbled at that;
He growled at the dog; he growled at the cat;
He grumbled at morning; he grumbled at night;
And to grumble and growl were his chief delight.

He grumbled so much at his wife that she Began to grumble as well as he;
And all the children, wherever they went,
Reflected their parents' discontent.
If the sky was dark and betokened rain,
Then Mr. Horner was sure to complain;
And if there was never a cloud about
He'd grumble because of a threatened drought.

His meals were never to suit his taste;
He grumbled at having to eat in haste;
The bread was poor, or the meat was tough,
Or else he hadn't had half enough.
No matter how hard his wife might try
To please her husband, with scornful eye
He'd look around, and then with a scowl
At something or other begin to growl.

One day, as I loitered along the street,
My old acquaintance I chanced to meet,
Whose face was without the look of care
And the ugly frown that it used to wear.
"I may be mistaken, perhaps," I said,
As, after saluting, I turned my head;
"But it is, and it isn't, the Mr. Horner
Who lived so long on Grumble Corner!"

I met him next day; and I met him again,
In melting weather, in pouring rain;
When stocks were up, and when stocks were down;
But a smile somehow had replaced the frown.
It puzzled me much, and so, one day,
I seized his hand in a friendly way,
And said, "Mr. Horner, I'd like to know
What can have happened to change you so?"

He laughed a laugh that was good to hear;
For it told of conscience calm and clear,
And he said, with none of the old-time drawl,
"Why, I've changed my residence, that is all!"
"Changed your residence?" "Yes," said Horner,
"It wasn't healthy on Grumble Corner,
And so I moved; 'twas a change complete;
And you'll find me now on Thanksgiving-street."

Now every day as I move along
The streets so filled with the busy throng,
I watch each face, and can always tell
Where men and women and children dwell;
And many a discontented mourner
Is spending his days on Grumble Corner,
Sour and sad, whom I long to entreat
To take a house on Thanksgiving-street.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Some Remarks on the Papers of "A Missionary."

III.—The Early Church and its Missions.

WE now turn from the Gospels to the Acts and Epistles. We have seen how far the Master's own example and teaching are correctly represented in the articles of "A Missionary." We must now inquire how far he draws a true picture of the earliest Christian missionaries. Let me repeat that I entirely concur in his great principle of looking to the Word of God for guidance. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." But over and over again in these articles there are statements regarding the Early Church for which there is in Scripture no evidence whatever.

(1) In the very first paragraph of the first article a statement is made regarding the Apostles, upon which almost the whole of the subsequent arguments are based; and yet it is a statement without any evidence at all. A striking picture is drawn of the disciples returning from Olivet after the Ascension, oppressed with the burden of the great work before them. "What was their resource?" it is asked. "They betook themselves to 'the very words of Jesus.' They obeyed his detailed instructions." Then, in subsequent articles we are told that the regulations of Matt. x. were the "very words," the "detailed instructions," which the Apostles obeyed. But the Bible does not say so! The proof offered is this, that they actually did obey those regulations; and that this shows their belief that the regulations were binding on them. On this point more presently. I am now only showing how much is built on a foundation which simply does not exist. It is merely a specimen of what is called arguing in a circle.

(2) But I shall be asked, Is it not certain that, as a matter of fact, the Apostles would refer back to the very words of Jesus? I do not doubt it for a moment. Of course they would. They would delight to talk together of all his sayings and doings; and of two things in his ministry (the first cleansing of the Temple, and the public entry into Jerusalem), we are expressly told that when He was risen from the dead they remembered them, and then understood them (John ii. 22, xii. 16). If I were to imitate the method of expounding Scripture adopted in these articles, I might remark that of the two incidents thus specially remembered, one was a case of Jesus using physical force (not indeed a "sword," but a "scourge of small cords"), and the other a case of his using a "convenient appointment of travel," to wit, a young ass to ride upon. This, in my judgment, would not be a fair application of Scripture; but it would be quite as fair as much that finds place in the arguments of "A Missionary."

(3) One of the offices of the Holy Ghost was to bring all things to their remembrance whatsoever Jesus had said unto them (John xiv. 26). He was not to "speak of Himself"; "He shall glorify Me" (xvi. 13, 14). It is a lovely picture of his gracious work on the minds and hearts of the disciples. But it is a very different thing from the scene presented to us in these articles of the disciples "betaking themselves to the very words of Jesus," as if they were all at a Bible-reading with reference Bibles on their knees, and then fixing on one discourse, and resolving unanimously, "Yes, we have a tremendous task before us: we need our beloved Master's well-remembered counsels; and these were that we were to take no purse, no wallet, no change of clothes," &c. I am constrained to say that, when, in the great Missionary Society I am connected with, the solemn farewell "instructions" of the Committee are given to departing missionaries, they are occupied with far higher things than purses, and wallets, and changes of clothes. They deal with the spiritual work to be done, and with the spiritual power in which alone it can be done. No! when the Apostles, in loving gratitude, recalled their Master's directions, they were not thinking of the external accidents of dress, and baggage, and money, but of the wondrous example He had set them of love, and patience, and wisdom. They would remember that when He said, "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you," He was referring specially to his having washed their feet (John xiii. 15), and the spirit He then manifested would be the spirit they would seek to cultivate, and if occasion should arise, they would be quite ready to "wash one another's feet." But would they set about a literal and formal imitation of that significant act? No, that was left to the Popes of Rome on Maunday Thursdays in ages yet to come.

(4) The Day of Pentecost came and went; and that blessed period of infant Church life followed which we read of in Acts ii., iv., v. The features of that life are wonderfully beautiful, and full of teaching for ourselves; but "A Missionary" passes over without notice all of them but one, viz., the community of goods. On this I will only say, first, that we do not find this feature reproduced in any other church. There is not a hint of it as prevailing at Antioch, or Philippi, or Corinth, or Ephesus, or Rome; nor is there a word in the Epistles suggesting that it ought to have prevailed. And, secondly, beautiful as it was as a manifestation of brotherly love and dedication of all things to the Lord, it was, as far as we can see, only temporary and partial even at Jerusalem. Peter does not blame Ananias and Sapphira for only giving the Church part of the proceeds of their land, but for professing to give what they were not giving. "Whiles it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power?" But "A Missionary" may reply that Ananias and Sapphira were not missionaries, but private Christians, and, therefore, were entitled to have moderate possessions. What, then, becomes of the community of goods? But take Barnabas, who certainly was a missionary, and who is specially commended. He had land, and he sold it, and gave the money to the Church. This is exactly what some missionaries in our own day have done. I could tell of some on the roll of the Church Missionary Society. But did they leave themselves without a penny? Did Barnabas? There is no hint that he did. His sister Mary, at all events, continued to hold property; for she had a house in Jerusalem big enough for "many" disciples to have a prayer-meeting in (Acts xii. 12).

(5) All that "A Missionary" says about the place of money in the New Testament is most extraordinary. First of all, he asks, "What do we read of money in relation to the work in the Holy Ghost's book upon foreign missions—the Acts of the Apostles?" And he answers, "NOT ONE WORD." Is there anything so very startling in that? Take up the biography of any "average modern missionary," or the history of any "average modern mission"; how much will you find in it about money? In the Life of George Maxwell Gordon you may find it mentioned that he spent his fortune upon the Lord's work; and in the "Story of Uganda" you may find an allusion to the two gifts of £5000 each that started the Mission; but these are parallel with the record of what Barnabas did, or Dorcas, or Lydia. But beyond this you will find "not one word." What Paul and Barnabas and Silas and Timotheus paid as passage-money on their numerous voyages is not recorded; neither does any missionary report record things of the kind. But the silence in either case does not imply that nothing was paid. That regular "fares" were not unknown in Bible lands and days we see by Jonah paying his "fare" to go to Tarshish! But, really, the Acts, though not a missionary report, but a history, is not unlike even a modern report, which has to "provide things honest in the sight of all men." The last annual report of the Church Missionary Society is about five times as long as the Acts. The finance paragraphs in it occupy a space relatively equal to about three verses.

(6) Then the remarkable statement is made that no disciple in the New Testament is mentioned as possessing or accumulating money, except Judas Iscariot and Ananias and Sapphira. In passing, observe that we are not told of Judas "possessing" money, though he stole some, and sold his Master for more. There is no reason to doubt that, like the rest of the twelve, he had "left all and followed Jesus." So that even on that side the statement is misleading. But what of the women who ministered to our Lord of their substance? What of Joseph of Arimathæa? What even of Zacchæus, concerning whom there is no hint that the fourfold compensation for his extortions made him a poor man? What of those at Ephesus, whose "silver and gold and apparel" (Acts xx. 33) Paul had not coveted? What of the Corinthians, whom Paul exhorts to large liberality? What of the "rich," whom Timothy is to charge so solemnly—not to "sell all," but "to do good," to be "rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate"?

(7) We are told that the only instances of commendation of giving in the New Testament are: (1) the widow casting her mites into the treasury; (2) the Philippians and other Macedonians helping St. Paul's collection for the poor Jewish saints; (3) the same persons contributing to Paul's personal need. Yes; and very significant these are! The first was a gift to church expenses, the second to the poor, the third to the support of a missionary! If this were the rule and proportion of Christian contributions, I should be quite content.

(8) We are told that there are only two gatherings of money in the New Testament, and that neither was for missions, but both for the poor. It is dangerous to argue from the silence of short and fragmentary accounts like those in the New Testament. Suppose I were to say that of the twelve Apostles only Peter and John ever did any missionary work. Nothing is recorded about the others. Would that be reasonable argument? There were very special reasons why the distribution to the widows and other poor persons at Jerusalem should be mentioned, and still more important reasons why Paul's Gentile collection should be mentioned. This latter is one of the most interesting things in the New Testament. It was much more than a collection for the poor. It was a peace-offering to unite the Jewish and Gentile sections of the Church. The scattered but cumulative evidence about this is of extreme interest; but I must not occupy space by detailing it.

(9) One thing very striking we learn from the accounts of these two collections. Both were taken charge of and administered by what we may fairly call finance committees! It is a popular thing now to speak contemptuously of committees. "A Missionary" does so more than once. But the Word of God is against him. In Acts vi., because the Apostles would not "serve tables," they suggested a committee of seven, on purpose that there should be fairness, and regularity, and system in the apportionment of the money; and that committee was duly elected by the votes of the members of the society! In 2 Cor. viii. we find Paul explaining that he sends Titus and two others to Corinth to make the collection there, and that these (or one of them at all events) had been elected by the contributors ("chosen of the churches") to travel with him all the way to Jerusalem in charge of the money. The names of these, and others elected by other churches, are no doubt given in Acts xx. 4. But why all this careful machinery and organisation? "Avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us, providing for honest things, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men." It is a wonderful thing that, amid all the lofty spiritual teachings of the Epistles, the Holy Ghost should condescend to such a matter as the importance of having a finance committee to manage church funds!

(10) To revert now to the missionary work of the Apostles and early Christians. A very glowing picture is drawn of it in "A Missionary's" first chapter, for which I find no evidence in Scripture. He tells us that "many thousands, greatly outnumbering those we have in the field, and all young converts in the glow of their first love, 'went everywhere, preaching the word,' with memorable success. They were flushed with constant victory; they were supernaturally preserved and sustained; they had the mighty power and demonstration of the Spirit, 'the Lord working with them, and confirming the Word with signs following.' Their commission was to 'preach the Gospel to every creature.' This, the Apostle Paul tells us, they did. To all the then known world they gave the glad tidings." I venture to say that this is almost pure imagination. Certainly there is nothing like it in the New Testament, nor does Church history give the least warrant for it.

(11) In the first place, two totally different things are confused. Mark's Gospel does say that "they went forth and preached everywhere," and St. Paul does speak (though in obviously hyperbolical terms, Col. i. 23) of the widespread proclamation of the good tidings. But this was done, in the main, by the apostles and evangelists, not by the "many thousands" of the early believers at Jerusalem. The statement about these latter in Acts viii. 4, that "they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word," is quite a different thing. What are the facts? Under Saul's persecution the Jerusalem believers were "scattered," and wherever they went they made known the Saviour they had found, But where did they go? Evidently, for the most part, not beyond Judæa. Philip's going to Samaria is mentioned as the most important immediate result of the scattering. And how did they go? "A Missionary" pictures them (article 6) going "shorn of outward comforts," and contrasts them with modern missionaries going forth with outfits and backed by societies. Really it is hard to comment on this with patience! The scattered disciples were not missionaries at all in any proper sense of the word. They were private Christians of various occupations who fled before violent persecution. They were, indeed, probably "shorn of outward comforts" by the persecution (though we are not told so); but this was not a voluntary poverty adopted in obedience to Matt. x. When the persecution ceased (Acts ix. 31), many (to all appearance the great majority) came back again to the city; see Acts xxi. 20, and the many references to "the poor saints at Jerusalem." Some, indeed, of the scattered ones ultimately went beyond Judæa; but the limits of their travels are given in Acts xi. 19, "as far as Phenice and Cyprus and Antioch." But it is evident that they were private Christians, and the wonderful results of their preaching at Antioch are a striking illustration of what the informal and volunteer evangelisation of private Christians may do. When the Church of Antioch afterwards sent forth missionaries, it was not "many thousands," but three men, Paul, and Barnabas, and Mark, of whom one came back almost immediately.

(12) But, again, "A Missionary" repeatedly tells us that these "many thousands" of missionaries went without purse, wallet, change of raiment, &c. I ask for the evidence of this—I ask for the evidence that even the Apostles did so. There is not a shred of it! Not a single verse is adduced in proof. In point of fact, the Acts is almost silent on this subject. We do, however, find mention of the "baggage" of Paul and his companions (Acts xxi. 15, see R.V.), and from the same passage (ver. 16) we find that it was arranged beforehand at which house they should sojourn while at Jerusalem. They certainly did not arrive there without purse, and wallet, and change of clothes, nor did they have to take their chance for a lodging. On this latter point, see also Philemon 22, where Paul writes beforehand to his friend, and asks him to "prepare him a lodging." To me it seems extremely probable that the Church of Antioch, in the first instance, provided Paul and Barnabas with what was needful for their missionary journey. It does not seem likely that the Antiochene Christians would be less careful of their own honoured leaders than the barbarians of Melita were, who, says Paul, "laded us with such things as were necessary" (Acts xxviii. 10). I cannot prove this; but what evidence is there to the contrary? Silence is no evidence, for, if my conjecture is right, there is no reason to suppose that the fact would be recorded. Even modern missionary reports do not give details of this kind. On the other hand, Paul and Barnabas may have been at their own charges. I have already expressed an opinion that Barnabas was probably well off. How was the "two whole years'" rent for Paul's "own hired house" at Rome paid? I cannot say; but this I can say, that the unconverted heathen did not pay it.

(13) It is urged sometimes (though not by "A Missionary") that Paul maintained himself by his tent-making. The allusions to this in the Epistles suggest that he only did so occasionally, either in case of actual need, or for a special purpose, as at Corinth (2 Cor. xi. 8)—"I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service." Observe that he did "take wages" of some churches; so a "stipend" can hardly be such a wicked thing, after all. I do not suggest, of course, that St. Paul received regular remittances from a missionary society! It is quite true that there was no elaborate organisation. But so it is true that ships in those days, on that voyage from Egypt to Italy, would stop some months "to winter" in the harbours of Crete and Melita (Acts xxvii. 12, xxviii. 11), which voyage now takes a few days. In both respects the progress of civilisation has brought large changes. But is there any more harm in fixing dates for the payment of the missionary's "wages" than in fixing dates for the departure and arrival of the steamer that carries him?

(14) But is not the normal practice in the Early Church revealed to us in a passage not mentioned by "A Missionary," 3 John 5—7?—"Thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers; which have borne witness of thy charity before the Church: whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort (R.V., 'worthily of God'), thou shalt do well; because for his name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles." Here we see the primitive missionaries, not depending upon the heathen they went to, nay, "taking nothing" from them, but supported, and travelling arrangements made for them, by well-to-do Christians. Had Gaius lived in the nineteenth century, he would have been a leading member of a missionary committee, "setting forward" (R.V.) missionaries on their journeys, that is, providing for their passages and outfits, and doing so without stint or grudging, but "worthily of God."

(15) Another question is that of miraculous power. I will not enlarge on this, as "A Missionary" does not lay great stress upon it. But I agree with him that we have no warrant for saying that the age of miracles is past for ever, and no right to limit the honour it may please God to put upon faith. I would only observe that he attributes far too much to miracles in the early Church. They were really very few and far between, so far as we know. Many were wrought in Jerusalem in the very first days. Except those, we only read of miracles being worked by Peter, Paul, and Philip. Paul certainly could not command the power always. It was not a question of faith only. God strictly kept the power in his own hands, and permitted its use on rare and special occasions. The idea that the "many thousands" so incorrectly supposed to have gone forth as missionaries had or used any such power, is, at all events, without warrant in Scripture.

(16) "A Missionary," in common with most people, estimates far too highly the results of primitive missions. On this much might be said. It is, according to the best authorities, extremely improbable that the results achieved in the first century were equal to those achieved in the nineteenth century. I suppose all will acknowledge that Bishop Lightfoot is facile princeps as an authority on early Church history. In an extremely able and interesting lecture by him, "Comparative Progress of Ancient and Modern Missions" (published by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts), he examines the evidence very carefully, and concludes that, two centuries and a quarter after Christ, the Christians were one in 150 of the population of the world; and the vast majority of them were people speaking one language. And in the towns, too, chiefly. Even then, the rural population was scarcely touched; and so markedly was this the case, that the very word "villagers," pagani, came to be used as an equivalent for heathen, and our word pagans is the perpetual reminder of the fact. There were, in fact, none of the "Pentecostal scenes" which "A Missionary" describes, after the first Pentecost; and that "Pentecostal scene," be it remembered, had nothing to do with missionary work among the heathen. Our progress in the one century that missionary societies have been at work among all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, is proportionately much greater. Certainly it ought to be greater than it is. With our enormous resources we ought to have done much more. Still, God has blessed what we have done, and it is unthankful to minimise what his own grace has accomplished.

A VILLAGE MISSION.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—Never, it is said, in the memory of the oldest inhabitant has there been such a stir in the village of Stevington as during the last ten days, and well might any stranger, visiting the village at eventime, have asked, in the words of the favourite hymn—

> What means this eager, anxious throng,
> That moves with busy haste along?

when seeing the numbers that thronged the street on their way to the old parish church; and more struck still might such a one have been had he seen the attentive congregation that nightly filled that venerable building to take part in the mission services there.

The origin of the mission was rather peculiar The introduction of Mr. Sankey's new hymns to the neighbouring village of Pavenham had proved a wondrous means of stirring up the believers there, and chiefly through the agency of "The Pavenham Brass Band," the sweet airs of this book were retailed through the neighbourhood, till the mission choir and band got several invitations to aid in evangelistic work at other places.

Going over to Stevington, at the request of the vicar, the Rev. J. R. Hare-Duke, the music and addresses were so owned of God in arresting the attention of the villagers, that this gentleman at once recognised the desirability of continuing the work, and, with only a week's delay, arranged for a Church mission, which, with regard to the numbers gathered under the sound of God's word, and also its apparent results, far exceeded the expectations of anyone connected with either the Church or the parish. The missioners were Rev. A. C. Downer, vicar of St. Cuthbert's, Bedford, and Rev. J. E. Linnell, vicar of Pavenham.

A HOLIDAY HOME has been opened at Pitsea, near Southend, by the friends of the Abbey-street, Bethnal Green, Sunday and Ragged Schools, for the poor children of that neighbourhood.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

XXVI.—FAITH AND ITS EXPLOITS.

Hebrews xi. 1.

Society rests on the faith which man has in man. The workman, toiling through the week for the wage which he believes he will receive; the passenger, procuring a ticket for a distant town, because he believes the statements of the time-tables; the sailor, steering his bark with unerring accuracy in murky weather, because he believes in the mercantile charts and tables; the entire system of monetary credit, by which vast sums circulate from hand to hand without the use of a single coin—all these are illustrations of the immense importance of faith in the affairs of men. Nothing, therefore, is more disastrous for an individual or a community than for its credit to be impaired, or its confidence shaken.

There seem to be three necessary preliminaries in order to faith. First, someone must make an engagement or promise. Second, there must be good reason for believing in the integrity and sufficiency of the person by whom the engagement has been made. Third, there follows a comfortable assurance that it will be even so; in fact, the believer is able to count on the object promised as being not less sure than if it had already come into actual possession. And this latter frame of mind is precisely the one indicated by the present author, when, guided by the Holy Spirit, he affirms that faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the persuasion or conviction of things not seen. In other words, faith is the faculty of realising the unseen.

These three conditions are fulfilled in Christian faith. The same faculty is called into action with respect to the things of God. At the outset we are sure that a Voice has spoken to man from the page of Scripture; not voices, but a Voice. Next, we are sure that this Speaker is infinitely credible. Our assurance rests on several grounds—we find that his words have ever come true in the experience of past generations; we have seen them accompanied by the introduction of miraculous phenomena, indicating in their beneficence and power the goodness and glory of the Worker; we discover in our own hearts the assent of our own moral nature to their evident truth; and for all these reasons we hold that the voice which speaks deserves our credence. And, therefore, lastly, we may calculate on whatever has been promised as surely as if we saw it, and may reckon on it as certainly ours.

Let us emphasise again what has been said. We look on the words which God speaks to us from the Scriptures as being altogether different from any other words which may claim our attention from the lips of men, not only because of the character of the miracles which accompanied them, but because they touch us as no other words do, and elicit the spontaneous assent and consent of our moral nature, though sometimes in condemnation of ourselves. That must be the Book of God which so exactly coincides with the best emotions and intuitions of our moral nature, and not of ours only, but of the noblest and best of our race—"The mighty God, the Lord hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same." And if we are once assured of this, then there is no limit to the restful confidence, which not only counts the promises as credible, but actually begins to enjoy in anticipation the boons they offer. The maxim of human experience runs thus: Seeing is believing; but with the child of God the reverse is true: Believing is seeing. We are as sure of what God has promised as we should be if we saw it already before our eyes. Our vision could not make us more sure than we are that God loves us, that there is a Father's house with its many mansions, and that some day our mortality is to put on immortality, so as to live for ever in a state of existence which is absolutely sinless, sorrowless, and nightless.

Such faith as this is begotten in our souls, primarily by the study of God's Word, appealing, as we have seen, to our moral consciousness, which, as it is more and more developed, is more and more satisfied with the Book which called it into being and has done so much for its education. But sometimes faith seems to be given us in respect of some special matter, which is not directly indicated in Scripture, but which we feel able to claim—yes, and as we pray and think over it we are still more able to claim it—and when we find such a conviction forming in our hearts we may be perfectly sure of it. "Whosoever shall say to this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass, he shall have whatsoever he saith." Thus the child of God may begin to praise for blessings of which there is no outward sign, being as sure of them as though they had risen above the horizon, like the little cloud, no bigger than a man's hand, to Elijah's prayer. "We have the petitions that we desired of Him."

Do you want a greater faith? then consider the promises, which are its native food! Read the story of God's mighty acts in bygone days. Open your hearts to God that He may shine in with his own revealing presence. Ask Him to give you this wondrous faculty to which nothing is impossible. Put away from you aught which might clash with the growth of your heart in faith and love.

Faith greatens men.—Run through this roll-call of heroes. You must admit that those whose names are mentioned stand in the first ranks of our race, shining as stars. But their claim to be thus regarded was certainly not natural genius. Enoch, for instance, and his line, being Sethites, may have been inferior to many of the family of Cain, so far as mere intellectual or artistic attainment went. But his faith lifted him out of the ranks of mediocrity to a species of primacy amongst men; and should faith become the master-principle of your life and mine, it would similarly enlarge and enrich our whole being.

Faith mightily affects our ordinary human life.—With most men you can determine pretty nearly how they will act in given circumstances; you can enumerate the influences at work, and their value. But you can never be sure in the case of the Christian, because his faith is making real much of which the world around takes no thought whatever. The tyrant, anxious to save some young Christian confessor, approaches him with flatteries and promises, things that attract the young, and is surprised to find that they have no charm: he then approaches with suffering, obloquy, and death, things that sadden young hearts, and is equally astonished to discover that they cause no alarm. The cause is inexplicable, and is set down to obstinacy; but in point of fact the eyes of that young heart are opened on a world of which the tyrant has formed no conception. Faith is not careless of time, but more mindful of eternity. Faith does not underrate the power of man, but she magnifies omnipotence. Faith is not callous of present pain, but she weighs it against future joy. Against ill-gotten gains, she puts eternal treasure; against human hate, the recompense of reward; against the weariness of the course, the crown of amaranth; against the tears of winter sowing, the shoutings of the autumn sheaves; against the inconvenience of the tent, the permanent city. None of these men would have lived the noble lives they did, had it not been for the recompense of reward, and the gleams given them of the golden city amid the sorrows and straits of their lives.

Faith is possible to all classes.—In this list are women as well as men. Sarah and Rahab, as well as Abraham and Joshua; the widow of Shunem, and the mighty prophet who brought her son back to life; Moses, the student of Egypt's wisdom, Gideon, the husbandman, Isaac, the grazier, and Jacob, the shrewd cattle breeder; Barak, the soldier, David, the shepperd, and Samuel, the prophet. Their occupations and circumstances varied infinitely, but there was not one of them that did not live under the influence of this master principle. Whatever may be a man's lawful calling, he may abide therein with God, under the influence of faith. Like the fir or pine, faith grows in any soil.

Faith is consistent with very different degrees of knowledge.—It would be difficult to enumerate more varieties of religious knowledge than are summarised in this catalogue of names. Abel's idea of sacrifice would differ widely from David's. The degree of acquaintance with God would be much intenser with Moses than Samson. And, compared with the clear views of truth held by these Hebrew Christians, those of the world's grey fathers were but as baskets full of fragments. But, notwithstanding all these differences, the same principle of faith leaped upwards from each heart. And the woman who touched the hem of the garment was animated with the same spirit as that which in her sister elicited the wonder of Jesus: "O woman, great is thy faith."

Faith can master insuperable difficulties.—It is difficult to be singular, but faith enabled Abel to offer a more excellent sacrifice than Cain. It is difficult to walk constantly with God, when wickedness is great on the earth, and all flesh has corrupted its way; but it is not impossible, for Enoch walked with God on the very margin of the flood, and obtained the testimony that he pleased Him. It is difficult to lead a pilgrim life, and such difficulties would be probably as keenly felt by the patriarchs; but what faith did for them it will do for others. It is difficult, amid the cares of business or public office, to keep the heart fresh, devout, and young, but it is not impossible to faith, which maintained the spirit of patriotism and devotion in the heart of Joseph, though sorely tempted to sink into an Egyptian grandee. It is difficult to face the loss of all things, and the displeasure of the great, but Moses did both, under the spell of faith in the unseen.

There are many difficulties before us all. Stormy seas forbid our passage; frowning fortifications bar our progress; mighty kingdoms defy our power; lions roar against us; fire lights its flaming barricade in our path; the sword, the armies of the alien, mockings, scourgings, bonds and imprisonment—all these menace our peace, darken our horizon, and try on us their power; but faith has conquered all these before, and it shall do as much again. We will laugh at impossibility; we will tread the shores of the seas, certain they must make us a way; we will enter the dens of wild beasts and the furnaces of flame, sure that they are impotent to injure us; we shall escape the edge of the sword, out of weakness become strong, turn to flight armies of aliens, and set at nought all the power of the enemy; and all because we believe in God. Reckon on God's faithfulness. Look not at the winds and waves, but at his character and will. Get alone with Him, steeping your heart and mind in his precious and exceeding great promises. Be obedient to the utmost limit of your light. Walk in the Spirit, one of whose fruits is faith. So shall you be deemed worthy to join this band, whose names and exploits run over from this page into the chronicles of eternity, and to share their glorious heritage.

VI.—MARTIN'S PICTURES.

Twenty years ago and more missions were few, and after-meetings a matter of great suspicion and distrust. They were regarded as a kind of confessional, or something worse.

On one occasion there was present a bishop. He was standing in a dark chancel, looking through a narrow arch into the chancel aisle, which was lighted, and full of anxious people. His lordship, I was afterwards told, had listened to what he thought a very exciting sermon; and wondering what the result would be, he had placed himself among the tombs and monuments of marble and alabaster, which were in that place, to watch what was done. He intended to see and judge for himself. As I did not know he was there, and he did not declare his views to me, I will say no more about him.

This after-meeting was a fairly representative one, and I was thankful to hear that his lordship had been there to witness it. There was a deep spirit of anxiety and inquiry awakened among the penitents who were assembled, as I have already said, in that chancel aisle.

During the meeting we heard how one had been anxious a long time, and had found peace during the sermon. Another testified that he had been awakened by the same sermon to see his mistake, and was determined now to give himself to God for salvation. Another had been revived from a cold backsliding state, and so on.

At last we came to a lady, who was at first too much overcome to speak. When at length she was brought into liberty, she said: "Some years ago I went to an exhibition of pictures in Manchester. I looked about at many of them, admiring some, and caring nothing for others. At length, I came to Martin's picture of heaven, from which I could not take myself away. It held me as if spell-bound. 'I shall never go to such a place as that. Shall I ever see anything so glorious?' Something seemed to say to me, 'No, never! heaven is not for you!' You might have knocked me down with a feather. I felt as if I was finally refused access to that glorious place. My niece came to me, and said, 'Aunt, what is the matter with you? Sit down and rest; you are faint, are you not?'

"Yes indeed I was, and I felt I might just as well give up now as later on—there was no hope for me!"

"But," I said, "why did you give way to this false idea? God does not say, 'Heaven is not for you—you are a sinner, go and be lost!' The fact is, heaven is for sinners. Christ died for us, that we sinners might be admitted there, and behold better things than it ever entered into the imagination and powers of men to conceive or paint."

"I do not know," said the lady. "I could not help myself, I was wretched. After resting for a little time, my friends roused me up to go forward and see more pictures. This I did, until I came to Martin's picture of hell.

"Ah, here, I said to myself, is my place, I see. I could not tear myself away from the spot. I was most miserable, and yet there was a kind of morbid pleasure to me in looking at that dreadful picture."

"When Christ says," I rejoined, "'Look unto me, and be ye saved,' you should look at Him. Behold Him in his death, resurrection, ascension, and coming again. Why trouble yourself about heaven or hell, when you may look at Christ? Heaven cannot be without Him, and hell cannot be where He is. Is He with you? That is the question."

"I do not know about these things," said the lady, "but I do know that these pictures had a great effect upon me. I was deeply impressed somehow that I was not to go to heaven, and that I was to go to hell. There was to be no reprieve or alteration in the sentence."

"Poor woman," I said, "I am afraid you were very unhappy under these cruel delusions. But who is to blame, if you go looking at pictures, instead of reading and trusting the words of the Bible—I mean, taking your impressions from pictures of man's painting, instead of taking them from the everlasting Word of Divine inspiration. God does not say heaven is for good people, or hell for bad."

"Does he not?" asked the lady, with surprise. "I always thought so."

"No," I answered; "Jesus came to call, not the righteous, but sinners, and heaven is open for them. Many shall go into a higher and better place than angels have, if they as sinners believe in Christ. Hell was not made for sinners, but for the devil and his angels; and those who will not believe in Jesus will have to go there; remember, not because they are bad, but because they do not believe. This unbelief is the damning sin, for which there is no forgiveness, either in this world or the next. He that believeth not is condemned already, because he believeth not."

"Yes," said the lady, "I know all that to be true, now. I have been most wretched. I do believe in Jesus; He has saved me, and your sermon has assured me of this most completely."

"Thank God," I said, involuntarily.

"Yes, indeed I do," she replied; "but how can I forget what misery and despair I have been in for years?"

"I cannot tell," I said, "nor can I wonder at your distress. If people will not look at light, they will not see light. There is no darkness in Christ. Therefore when people are in darkness, it is because they are not looking at him, but at themselves. Look to Jesus crucified."

Oh, eyes that are weary, and hearts that are sore,
Look off unto Jesus, and sorrow no more;
The light of his countenance shineth so bright,
That in earth as in heaven, there need be no night

"Let us sing this hymn," I said. We did so, emphasising the words by repeating them. The lady soon took them up, and joined in happy song.

Singing has a great effect upon anxious people, and repeating verses often impresses the sentiments more deeply upon the soul.

Salvation does not mean going to heaven, or escaping hell, but being united with Christ in a saved state, even as we were united with Adam in a lost condition. After all, our salvation is but a secondary matter—a kind of means toward a higher end, even the object for which we were created, that we might glorify God, and do good to others. If you go from this truth, you may float away to pictures, visions, dreams, or temptations of all kinds. Give yourself to God to live for Him, and He will accept you. He knows you cannot have this life until you are born again, therefore He will give you that new birth by the way, and lead you forward into the life of usefulness besides. There is a work prepared for every one of us, and we can only be really as happy as God wills us to be when we are in it.

That after-meeting was the first of several others, which were even more blest, and to more people.

Our friend, the lady in question, became in the mission time a good worker. Putting herself into God's hands, she was made useful and helpful, night after night, in pointing anxious souls to Jesus. It was her privilege to turn them from darkness of all other things to the light of the glorious Gospel, and from the power of Satan with his manifold temptations and delusions to God, to receive forgiveness of their sins.

It was a blessed time of awakening in that parish, and from it the work spread to other parishes beyond.

Many well-meaning persons who were living in the idea that only good people could go to heaven, were brought out of this fatal delusion. Would that many more could also be brought to see, that it is not by works of righteousness we can do, but by God's mercy alone we are saved; and that it is He alone who continues to cleanse us by the washing of water by the Word, and goes on to keep us by the renewing of the Holy Ghost.

A TON OF TRACTS.

Miss Weston, of the Sailors' Rest, Devonport, writes that in response to a recent appeal, between 20,000 and 30,000 publications have been put into the hands of sailors, marines, stokers, artificers, and others in the Navy. All have received them gladly. Pronounced infidels have read them; some have given up their infidelity, and are new creatures in Christ Jesus, from reading these tracts.

Infidelity, however, is pushing on, and every effort is being made to spread its teaching. This must be met by prayer, that the Holy Spirit would lift up the standard against the flood of evil; and by work, pouring in a stream of teaching of the right kind. Mr. H. L. Hastings' book, "The Inspiration of the Bible," is known well on the lower decks of our ships of war, and has done grand work. Mr. Hastings has sent to Miss Weston a ton weight of anti-infidel tracts for the seamen, Mr. Alexander Allan, of Glasgow, also sending it on to Devonport from Glasgow free.

We are now (says Miss Weston) commencing their distribution. I shall be pleased if accredited workers among merchant seamen apply for them, to send them grants free, on their paying the carriage. But I feel that we ought to repay Mr. Hastings the £70 he is out of pocket, the bare cost of printing and paper. Who will help us to raise this amount for such a splendid object?

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION. — Dear Sir,—Tracts are an absolute necessity for our work, and many of them are received by those who otherwise would never have the Gospel brought before them. Now that our "season" is upon us, we need large supplies. I hope many of your readers will make us free grants, or send us the means wherewith to purchase them.—Yours faithfully,

Gawin Kirkham, Secretary.

BRITISH GUIANA. — The readiness of the people to hear (writes Mr. Sparrow from Georgetown) is such as I have never witnessed before. One has but to go out into the street with a handful of tracts or small books, and in five minutes you will have a good company round you, willing to listen as long as you can spare time to speak to them. Happily, the police have no orders here to tell us to move on, or to forbid street preaching; and if we had strength we could preach all day long. At Arcadia, which we visited on the 4th inst., we were delighted to see the people coming in crowds, some bringing chairs on their heads, and others forms, and soon we had a good congregation. —Echoes of Service.

Young Men in the City.

Whatever achievements the institution known as the Young Men's Christian Association may have accomplished in the past forty-five years of its existence, one thing is certain—plenty remains for it yet to do. If anybody doubts that, we refer him to certain figures submitted (on sufficient authority, we presume) to the annual meeting of the Aldersgate-street Association, at the Mansion House, last Friday. The statement circulated was to the effect that London has 800,000 young men; that 80,000 of these may be reckoned as Christians, and that, as many more attend places of worship. This leaves a vast multitude of 640,000 who are outside the orbit of Christian influence. In view of these terrible figures, it is not a little startling to be told, as we were told by one speaker at the Mansion House, that the churches are supposed to be somewhat jealous of the operations of these Associations. We have heard the same thing hinted at before, but for the credit of our common Christianity we prefer not to believe it. One oarsman in a lifeboat, rescuing those ready to perish in the engulphing waves, jealous of another toiler in the same boat! Perish the thought. Surely the modern Church of Christ has not backslidden so far from the primitive model as that!

Reverting to the meeting at the Mansion House, we are glad to record that in point of numbers, at any rate, it was a great success. The present Lord Mayor seems to be singularly happy in his arrangements. He has only to espouse a good cause by inviting its friends to his official residence, and they respond in shoals. His Lordship, of course, took the chair on Friday, and the Lady Mayoress sat by his side. Before the meeting closed, he was obliged to retire, in consequence of indisposition, and we had therefore to dispense with the words of hearty good cheer he would have uttered.

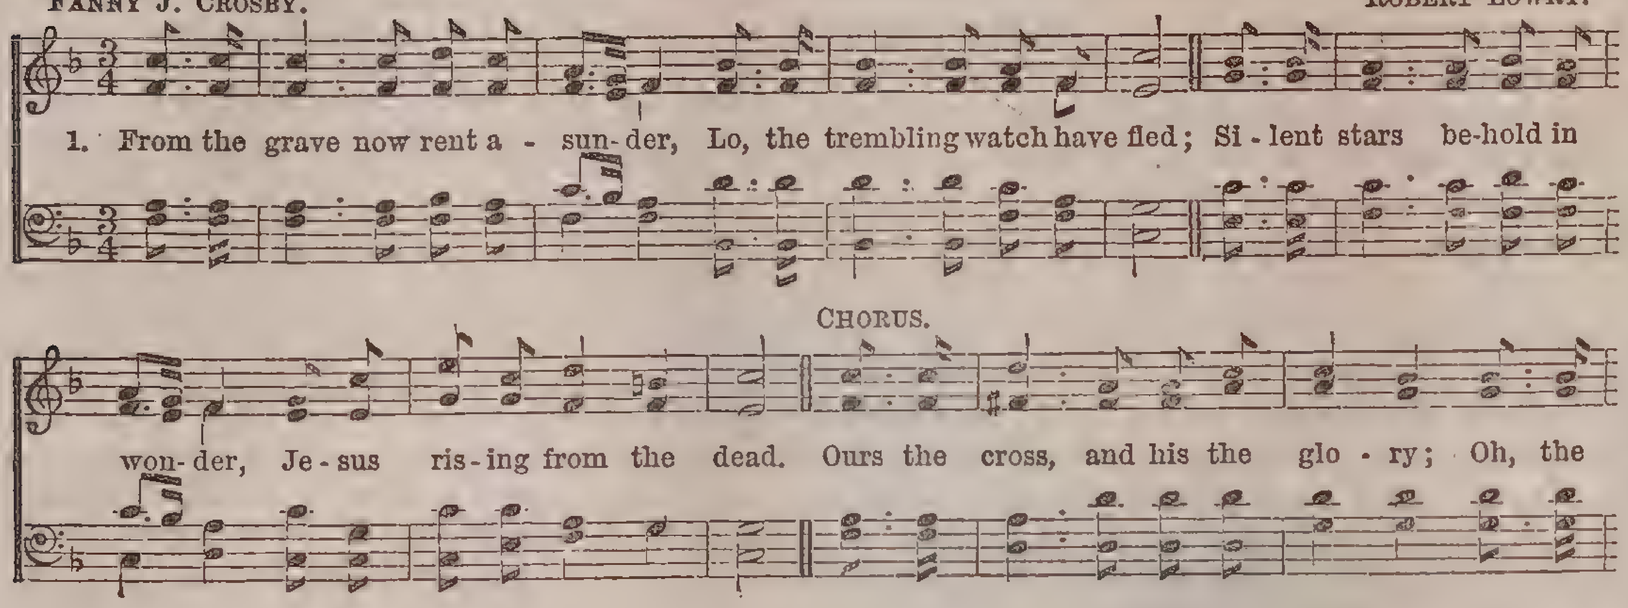
But there was no lack of speechifying. First of all came the brief and businesslike statement of that most genial of secretaries, Mr. Robert Burn. He recapitulated the main lines of Association work, emphasising the fact that its prime object is the salvation of young men; and that this end is sought to be attained through the agency of young men themselves. It was very pleasant to hear that some 2000 young city fellows are in direct connection with the Aldersgate-street branch. After being told that, we could well appreciate the longing of Mr. Burn and his fellow workers to have a new building that will be in some degree adequate to the necessities and the importance of the work. Certainly the Association ought to be far more "in evidence" externally among the thousands of our budding business men, and that it will never be till it gets a new habitat on some well-placed site. We should like to see it occupying the whole block that faces Cheapside looking eastward. Mr. Burn had many things to say about the intellectual, the social, and the physical, as well as the spiritual aspects of the work; but that has now become an oft-told tale, and we need not re-tell it. The secretary closed his report by an acknowledgment of the need of more spiritual power for the equipment and the endowment of the workers. Passing to matters financial, he lamented a deficit in the year's balance sheet of nearly £1000. Some tried friends had come to the rescue and subscribed liberally, but Mr. Burn wants to get more regular subscribers, so as to extend the area of support. Seeing that the Association "caters for young men at the beginning of their business career, when they are in receipt of small salaries," and cannot contribute much to the funds, his aspiration is a very reasonable one.

Two set addresses filled up the greater part of the hour. Rev. E. A. Stuart was most vigorous and practical in his advocacy. He pressed home on City merchants their indebtedness to the Association, because of the shelter it holds out and the benefits it confers on the working bees of our business houses. Mr. Stuart insisted that the Christian flag must be kept flying mast-high, and not be lowered at the beck of secularism or intellectualism. He went on to speak of the peculiar loneliness of the homeless young man in London on the Sabbath evening, and the danger that he may then be lured into devious paths. The Association ought to make a strenuous endeavour to fill this hiatus by an attractive and pleasant Sunday evening programme. The evils of gambling were very strongly commented on, and a closing appeal was made to young men to seek that it might be said of them, in all circumstances, as it was of Joseph, "The Lord was with him."

Rev. John McNeill was unusually discursive, and a little too prolonged, in his preamble, but when he warmed up he was powerful and convincing. The Y. M. C. Association, he remarked, meets the young man at the right moment—his coming as a stranger to a strange city. The churches as a rule do nothing in the way of watching for these new arrivals, and if the Association did not step in to help the neophyte to a good lodging, there is no saying where he might land. Mr. McNeill pointed this moral by telling of a very narrow escape he once made himself in the matter of apartments, on going from the country to the town. Addressing himself specially to Christian parents whose boys have gone out from under the family rooftree to carve their upward way in the world, he appealed for all possible help and countenance in keeping the exchequer of the Association well supplied. Last of all came a thrilling appeal to any young men who might think that their lives were already wrecked, not to yield to despair, but to stand firm in the struggle with evil, being well assured of this, that to the honest and courageous soul God will bring present and eternal deliverance. The only drawback with respect to these exhortations was the comparative absence from the meeting of the class for whom they were specially intended. As the assembly was an afternoon one, the audience stood more largely, we should judge, by employers than employed.

It only remained for Mr. George Williams, who had taken the vacant chair on the Lord Mayor's departure, to plead once more the claims of the Association on heads of homes and of business houses, and to move the thanks of the meeting to the host and hostess. Mr. Hugh M. Matheson and Mr. T. A. Denny backed up the latter proposition in no formal way, and of course the delighted company responded with a will.

We may add here that Mr. R. Burn, the secretary, left London on Wednesday last on a visit to the United States, as a delegate to the American Y.M.C.A. Conference at Philadelphia next month. He is accompanied by Mr. R. McCann, of Belfast.



STEREOTYPED PRAYERS.—There are laymen who do not like to hear a sermon preached the second time, who yet give their pastors the same prayer every week at the devotional meeting, that is, fifty-two times in the year, with occasional slices of it between meals. If they made any spiritual advancement, they would have new wants to express and new thanksgivings to offer.—Dr. Talmage.

DR. TALMAGE ON THE BIBLE.—In all the world of literature there is no such live book as the Bible. These paragraphs throb with omnipotent energy. Nearly all the verses of the Bible have a quick step. The trumpets of salvation never sound a dead march. The sacred writers did not go around in clumsy and unmanageable armour, but with keen, sharp scimitar keep striking rapidly. The Bible does not go round about a sin, but swoops on it like a hawk. It cleaves iniquity asunder with one awful swing of the battle axe, crashing through from helmet to sandal. It has a style of writing, for the most part alert, sharp-edged; to the point, electric, hewing away at the heart of things.—New York Observer.

"His the Glory."

(AN EASTER SONG.)

Fanny J. Crosby. Robert Lowry.

2 He has purchased full salvation,
Thro' his offering once for all;
And to-day, with adoration,
At his sacred feet we fall.

3 Jesus lives, and heaven rejoices;
He shall suffer death no more;
Loving hearts and happy voices,
Tell the news from shore to shore.

4 On his holy name believing,
We, like Him, from death shall rise;
Everlasting life receiving
In a world beyond the skies.

ON THE BLACKDOWN HILLS.

A PLEA FOR OUR VILLAGES.

Much effort is being put forth, and rightly so, on behalf of our larger towns and cities. But while the cry is raised on behalf of "the masses," is there not a danger that the equally needy souls in our villages may be overlooked? Comparatively few seem be exercised before God for these. Can it be that evangelists and others treat our village populations with unconcern because the congregation must be smaller than in large centres, and the roll of converts necessarily fewer still? Or is it because the amount of labour bestowed must obviously be much greater in proportion to results? We do not like to think so; yet how difficult it is to find evangelists as ready and happy to preach to a hundred souls in an out-of-the-way village as to five hundred or a thousand in a town!

The utter ignorance that prevails in our villages, among the poorer classes especially, is truly appalling. This is not the result of deliberate rejection, or wilful neglect and unconcern, but from the sad fact that they have not the light held out to them. In some cases there is but little opportunity of throwing the light upon them except by house to house visitation. In more than one parish with which I am somewhat acquainted, it is an impossibility to obtain either a public room or a cottage in which to hold a Gospel service, or a site on which to pitch a Gospel tent. The inhabitants would gladly welcome a messenger of peace, but are either prohibited from doing so by the lectures and anathemas of a Jesuitical priest, or terrorised by an ungodly squire, who owns the land, and seeks to establish his claim upon the bodies and souls of his tenantry. Thank God, these are exceptional cases; but I am bound to say that in scores, if not hundreds, of villages there exists to-day a sad need of true Gospel light.

On the Blackdown Hills we have lately had much to cheer us in our work for the Lord. Every village hamlet seems eager for the Gospel in its grand simplicity. We have been holding an eighteen days' special mission on the hills, being assisted by Mr. Herbert Veasey, an earnest evangelist from Torquay. In seven districts in which we have held meetings we have not only been cheered by seeing goodly numbers attending the services—sometimes crowding the mission-rooms—but we have seen distinct fruit in professed conversions in every place. Many have gone away, we believe, with the arrow of conviction in their souls, to be "brought out" in time to come.

Never do I remember seeing a more open door in some of these places than exists to-day. In each locality visited there is the desire for more of the Gospel—a proof of the need felt—and I firmly believe that were we enabled to send an evangelist to each locality for a week or fortnight's special meetings, scores of souls would be won for Jesus. We purpose to visit some of these needy districts with our Gospel tent during the summer months.

One feature that has struck us very forcibly in the work around our own immediate neighbourhood of late has been the number of former Sunday and day-school scholars who have been led to the Saviour. We have been greatly cheered to hear one and another say they received their first spiritual impressions while in the Mission day or Sunday schools or Bible-classes. I mention this to encourage workers among the young. I would ask for continued prayer on behalf of the work of God in our hands, and add my cry to that of others on behalf of "Our Villages."

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.—The nineteenth annual report states that there are 113 inmates in the eight Homes of this charity. Altogether over 300 persons have been sheltered and cared for, and many of those now in residence are of advanced age. During last year twelve new inmates were admitted. The Homes, which are situate in Notting Hill, West Kensington, and Paddington, are now full, and there are still over seventy applicants waiting for admission. There are mortgages to pay off some of the property before the charity can be enlarged, so as to prove a blessing to more poor and aged people. The qualifications for admission are that applicants be fully sixty years old, of unquestionable respectability, and unable to obtain from any source a larger income than 6s., or, if married, a common income for the couple not exceeding 10s. per week. The charity is worked with extreme economy, all the official labourers being unpaid. The hon. sec. is Miss Harrison, 5, Grandacre-terrace, Anerley.

"WHY WEEPEST THOU?"

"Why weepest thou?" Sweet Easter salutation!
As though a mother kissed a tearful child;
Let every mourner hear the consolation,
While Jesus asks to-day, in accents mild,
John xx. 15. "Why weepest thou?"

"Why weepest thou?" So ask a thousand voices:
The birds, the brook that murmurs through the vale;
And while, in newest robes, the earth rejoices,
This is the whisper of the balmy gale—
Song ii. 11—13. "Why weepest thou?"

Why weepest thou?—unknowing who is tending
His Eden; for with tears thine eyes are dim;
The Heavenly Gardener over thee is bending,
Each drooping floweret is a care to Him.
John xx. 15. Why weepest thou?

Why weepest thou?—depressed by persecution;
Let them that hate thee rather be afraid;
The day is nigh, the day of retribution;
To thee, but not to them, hath Jesus said—
Mark xvi. 3. "Why weepest thou?"

Why weepest thou? Thy way is dark before thee;
But dost thou look for Jesus in thy grief?
His smile of love shall soon beam brightly o'er thee;
Thy sun shall rise, thy woes shall find relief.
John xx. 1. Why weepest thou?

Why weepest thou, and, seeking, canst not find Him?
Have heartless strangers borne away thy Lord?
Lo! from the grave He breaks; bands cannot bind Him
Behold He comes! to thee He speaks the word—
John xx. 13. Why weepest Thou?

Why weepest thou for sins yet unforgiven?
And askest, Who shall roll the stone away?
Lo! Christ hath borne thy guilt. He speaks from heaven,
And tells thee all is done, and seems to say—
Mark xvi. 3. "Why weepest thou?"

Why weepest thou?—to yon turf hillock wending;
Because, thou sayest, there some loved one lies.
The dust alone is there. Through Christ, ascending,
The God-breathed spirit joins its native skies.
Luke xxiv. 5. Why weepest thou?

Why weepest thou?—whose feet have vainly hasted;
Whose costly offerings seem an idle pain:
Nay, love bestowed on Jesus is not wasted:
Thy early tribute is not brought in vain.
Luke xxiv. 1—3. Why weepest thou?

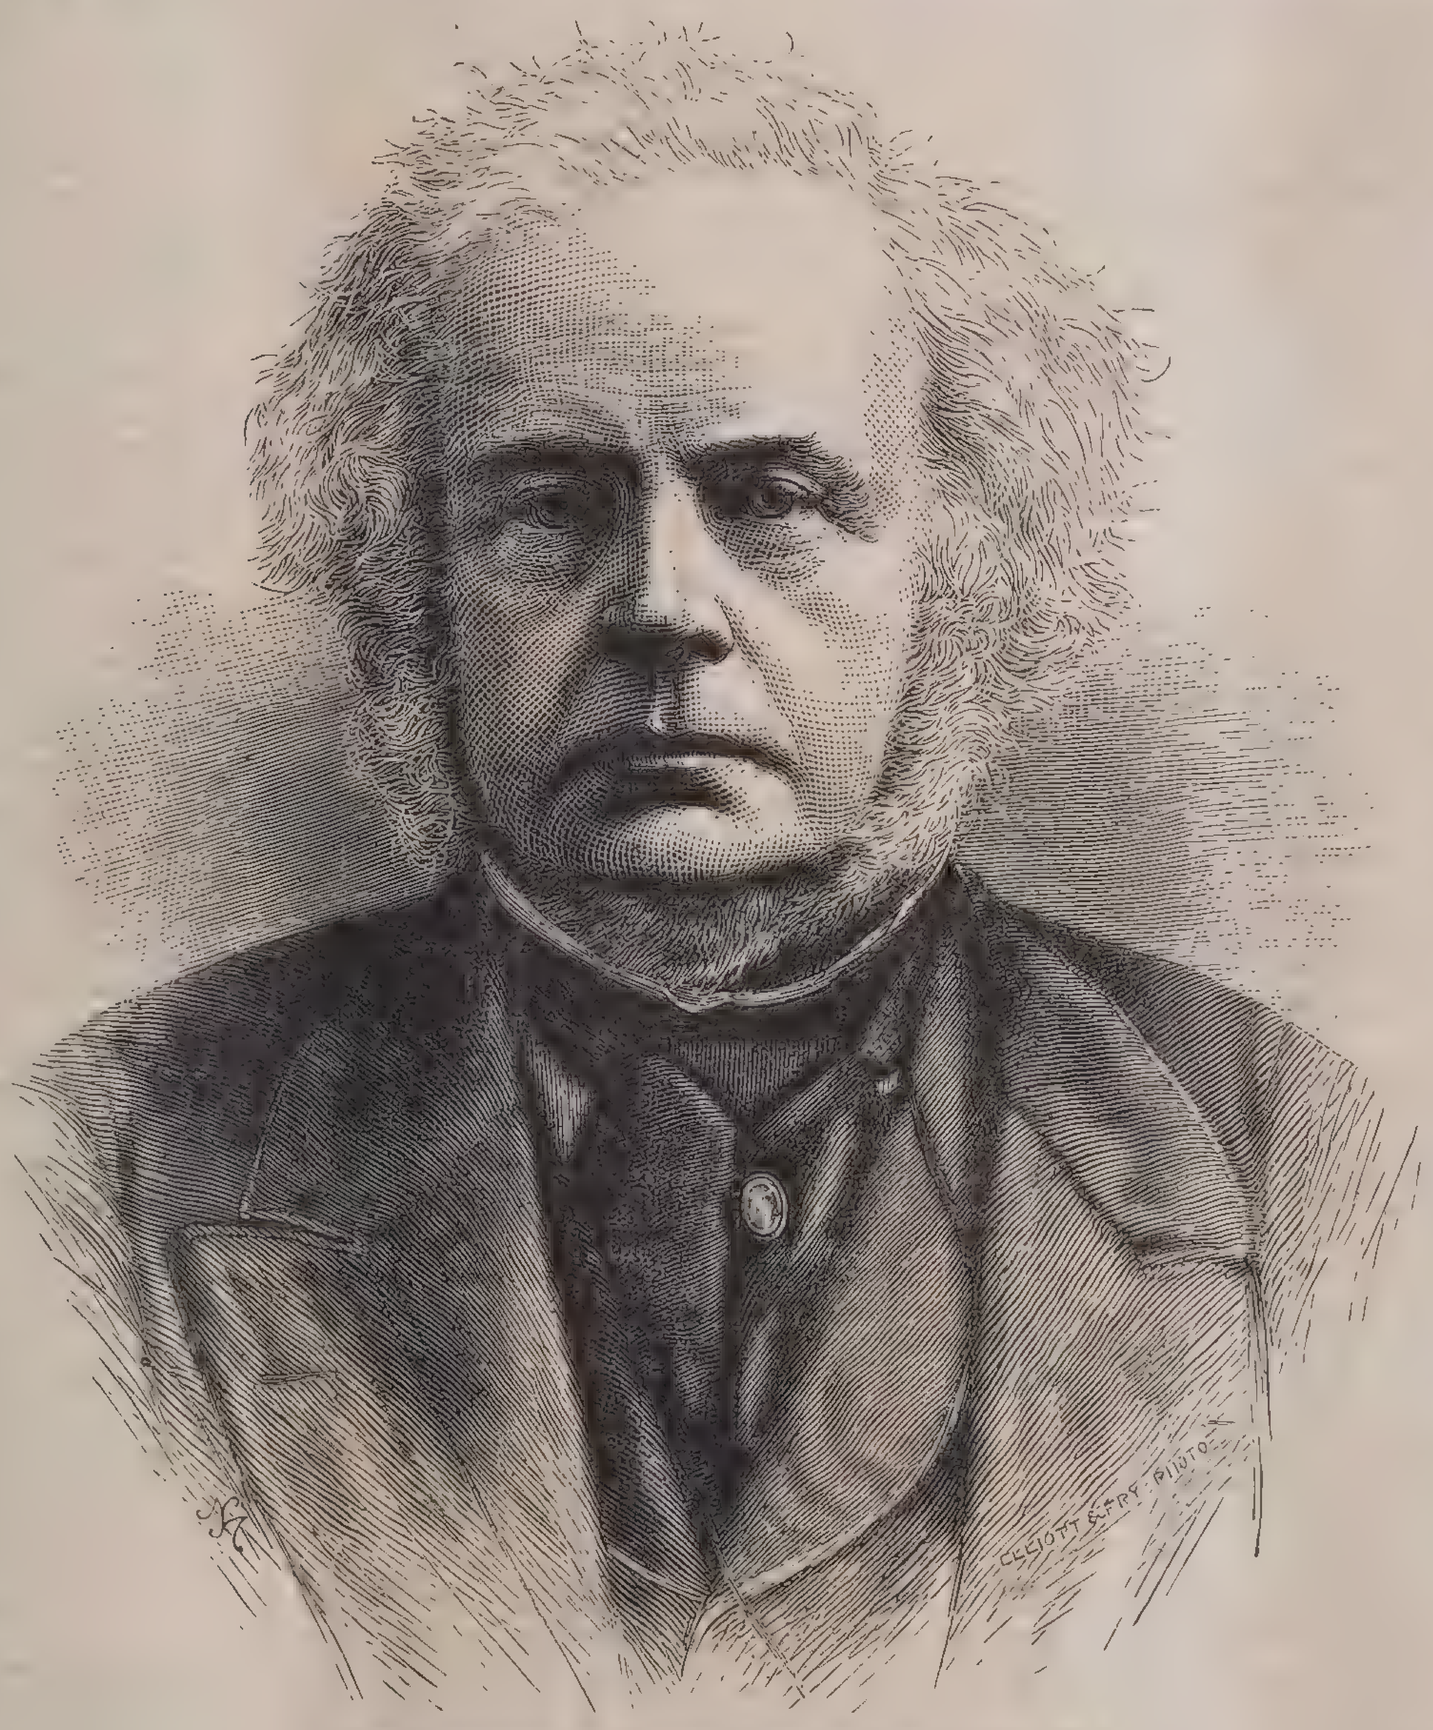
Why weepest thou?—poor pilgrim faint and weary,
Impatient till thou to thy Bridegroom come:
Ere long thou shalt have crossed this desert dreary;
His welcome waits thee in his Father's home.
John xiv. 3. Why weepest thou?

Why weepest thou? Give ear, thou child of sorrow!
Thy Saviour speaks: dismiss thy groundless fears;
To-day let faith discern the bright to-morrow,
When those shall reap in joy that sowed in tears.
John xvi. 20. Why weepest thou?

"Why weepest thou?" O Christ! thy tender greeting
Becomes a healing balm for every wound.
I seem to hear the heavenly host repeating
This word of thine, while all their harps resound—
Rev. xxi. 3, 4. "Why weepest thou?"

G. W. Butler, after the German of Karl Gerok

PUNDITA RAMABAI gave an address at the opening of the School Home for Indian Child-widows, at Chowpati, on March 11. A large company of English and Hindoo ladies and gentlemen were present. The institution, though intended for high-caste native child-widows, will not be closed against others, and widows who cannot pay will be admitted free.



SOCIETY FOR DISTRIBUTING SCRIPTURE TRUTH.—The Committee of this Society has been enabled during the last two years to extend its work by the issue of some of its publications in foreign languages. The price of all the Society's publications has lately been reduced to one half, from which reduced price a still further large reduction is made to subscribers for free distribution. Free grants are likewise given to recognised institutions, and orders for rolls, books, &c., as well as contributions, should be addressed to Mr. F. Woodhouse, the secretary, 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne.

The Late Right Hon. JOHN BRIGHT.

WHATEVER animosities Mr. Bright had excited by the vigour of his political denunciations, "as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice," death has destroyed them, and all classes of politicians have agreed in the high eulogy that he was "one of the noblest figures we have ever known in Parliament." All sorts and conditions of people have praised his strong and active sympathy with suffering, the transparent honesty of his character, and the Puritan simplicity of his life, which stood upon an elevated platform of Christian morality. Even the stately walls of Westminster Abbey have resounded with unstinted commendations of the life of this illustrious member of the once persecuted and despised Society of Friends—an unparalleled incident. The events of that life have been repeated in numberless newspaper columns since the great "Tribune of the People" fell on sleep. It would be needless and unfitting to do so in these columns. This brief sketch is intended merely to indicate the Christian and philanthropic character of Mr. Bright's career.

The dominating spirit of his public life he described in the account which he gave of the way in which he was led to enter its strife. In 1841 Mr. Bright's young wife, whom he had married in 1839, died. Said he:—

> At that time I was at Leamington; and on the day when Mr. Cobden called on me I was in the depth of grief, I might almost say of despair, for the light and sunshine of my home had been extinguished. All that was left on earth of my young happiness was lying still and cold in the chamber above us. Mr. Cobden called on me as my friend, and addressed me, as you may suppose, with words of condolence. After a time he looked up and said, "There are thousands of homes in England at this moment where wives, mothers, and children, are dying of hunger. Now, when the first paroxysm of your grief is passed, I would advise you to come with me, and we will never rest until the Corn Law is repealed."

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, London, W.)

In that appeal there was no breath of selfish ambition, but a call for the sacrifice of personal feeling in devoted and sympathetic labour for other sufferers. Mr. Bright responded to it, and found, as many others have done, that the best way to bear one's own sorrow is to take upon one's self the sorrows of others.

The struggle for the repeal of the Corn Law was to Mr. Bright a holy crusade on behalf of the poor, "those to whom taxes meant hopeless toil to the father of a family, penury through his life, a cheerless old age, and at last 'the little bell tolled hastily for the pauper's funeral.'" His faith was that of the body of Christians to which he belonged by birth, by education, and by conviction. The Society of Friends believe in the direct revelation by God to the believer of his will concerning all the acts of their lives. It was this belief which gave so much force and resoluteness to Mr. Bright's character, which made him unsusceptible to the blandishments of fame and fashion, which caused him to be wholly unaccommodating to what he saw to be wrong, which gave a prophet-like violence to his noble indignation against oppression and oppressors, and which enabled him to stand firm during tempests of unpopularity which never diverted him even by so much as a hair's breadth from the conceived path of rectitude. This belief in Divine guidance was evinced by his silence on some subjects as well as by his eloquence on others. Some questions he left alone, because he felt no clear guidance with respect to them.

He was one of those Christians who testify their faith by their lives more than by their words. The tongue of spite, even in the days when he was most venomously attacked, never dared to asperse the purity of his life, either public or private. He sweetened and ennobled politics by carrying into them the example and reproof of a religious life. His unswerving allegiance to Christian rectitude of conduct is the most cogent evidence supplied in late years in support of the contention that it is not impossible for Christians safely to take a prominent part in political life. Though his life is not conclusive proof, for not to all is given an eye so clear and so swift to mark the golden thread of eternal truth amid all the warp and woof of public affairs as his was.

He set himself from the beginning of his public career to preach that the standard of virtue for private life ought equally to be the standard for public life. In 1882 he said, "I have endeavoured from time to time to teach my countrymen an opinion and doctrine which I hold, which is, that the moral law is not intended only for industrial life, but is intended also for the life and practice of States." Many examples of this teaching might be quoted but for the limitations of our space. We give one from a speech delivered at Birmingham on October 29, 1858. He then said, "I believe there is no permanent greatness to a nation except it is based upon morality...May I ask you, then, to believe as I do most devoutly believe, that the moral law was not written for men alone in their individual character, but that it was written as well for nations, and for nations great as this of which we are citizens. If nations reject and deride that moral law, there is a penalty which will inevitably follow. It may not come at once, it may not come in our lifetime; but, rely upon it, the great Italian is not a poet only, but a prophet, when he says:—

> The sword of Heaven is not in haste to smite,
> Nor yet doth linger."

He often quoted with felicity and effect passages from the Bible, passages of tenderness or of terrible warning. His frequent recourse to the Bible for his illustrations also proved that he had a great acquaintance with the Holy Scriptures. His Scriptural illustrations were not made rudely and irreverently, as is the disgraceful manner of some, but reverentially and decorously. Thus, at Manchester, in May, 1851, he said, "We have not, as the chosen people of old had, the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, to lead us through the wilderness of human passion and human error; but He who vouchsafed the cloud and the fire has not left us forsaken. We have a guide not less sure, a light not less clear; we have before us the great principles of justice and mercy which Christianity has taught us...Let us trust these principles; let us believe that they exist for ever unchangeably in the providence of God; and if we build our national policy upon them, we may rest assured that we shall do all that lies in our power to promote that which is good."

On one occasion he explained the secret of his oratorical power. Quoting from John Milton the words, "Yet true eloquence I find to be none but the serious and hearty love of truth," he observed thereupon, "I have endeavoured, as far as I have had the opportunity of speaking in public, to abide by that wise and weighty saying."

It may be said he was distinguished by the moral force of his advocacy of those questions in which he interested himself, but he was not the advocate of many moral questions. In one, at least, of his antagonisms, he permitted a fallacious political opinion to lead him into opposition against a great philanthropic movement. An endeavour was being made to induce the Legislature to afford some protection to factory operatives. Mr. Bright resisted that endeavour. He was not adverse to shorter hours of labour, or to an improvement in the condition of factory hands, but he objected to State interference with the labour market. He thought the operatives could take care of themselves. He omitted to consider the unscrupulous use which is made of their enormous power by capitalists, and to remember that there are many so helpless as to be compelled to submit to whatever grievous conditions manufacturers can impose upon them. Although Mr. Bright's opposition succeeded in delaying, it did not prevent the ultimate adoption of the Factory Acts.

Though he turned the light of his genius upon many subjects, such as intemperance, capital punishment, the opium traffic, slavery, and war, history will dwell chiefly on his antagonism to war, "the inevitable parent of innumerable crimes." He was the greatest political advocate of peace Christendom has known. Therein he was the exponent of one of the main tenets, and at one time almost a distinctive doctrine, of the Society of Friends. Indeed, throughout his career he was the political apostle of applied Quakerism. His peace principles cost him something. It was his opposition to the iniquitous war with China in 1857 (following as it did close after his scathing denunciations of the criminal Crimean war) which lost him his seat in Parliament for Manchester.

The immediate good results of his advocacy of peace were not very apparent, but unquestionably it contributed largely to make it impossible for England to take part in the Franco-Austrian, the American, the Danish, the Franco-German, and the Russo-Turkish wars.

He was a regular and reverent worshipper at the meetings of Friends, either at the Meeting-house, St. Martin's-lane, Westminster, or at the Meeting-house at Rochdale, when not attending Parliament. One who is well qualified to speak of Mr. Bright's life among his own people at Rochdale has said:—

> No one was more popular than he, either with his own workpeople or the great body of his townsmen. Though the chief work of his life had been towards political reform, no good local work—social, educational, or moral—passed without the assistance both of purse and counsel, of the great orator.

Born November 11, 1811, he was in his seventy-eighth year when, in the morning of March 27,

> In calm trust, the pure and tranquil-hearted
> Lay down to die.

He was buried in the little burying-ground which adjoins the Friends' Meeting-house at Rochdale. He was one of earth's heroes, but that mausoleum of notables, Westminster Abbey, was unsuited for the resting-place of his remains. Mr. Cobden once said as he looked upon the monuments in that place, "My spirit would not rest in peace among these men of war. No, no, cathedrals are not meant to contain the remains of such men as Bright and I." So, with out circumstance of pomp or pageant, in the simple manner of the religious body whose doctrines he had adorned by the chaste simplicity of his life, the great historic figure, the pre-eminent orator, the homely Quaker, the valiant Christian, was consigned to the grave, whilst the nation which he loved and served so well mourned his departure home.

> God calls our loved ones, but we lose not wholly
> What He hath given;
> They live on earth, in thought and deed, as truly
> As in his heaven.

Those who wish for a complete but compressed biography of the deceased Christian statesman, cannot do better than read Mr. George Barnett Smith's work just issued in a cheap form by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. It contains all the biographical material to be found in the author's well-known larger work, "The Life and Speeches of Mr. Bright," and the memoir is now brought down to his death. By the condensation of Mr. Bright's public and parliamentary utterances, and the compression of the information upon the great political movements of his time, the author has been enabled to construct what will unquestionably prove a popular biography. Illustrating great principles, and enforcing important lessons, this is a "life" that cannot but be read to profit by all classes. To those who follow political movements it is a specially valuable body of information on many large questions. The volume is embellished with an admirable portrait of Mr. Bright.

CAPE GENERAL MISSION.

The Cape General Mission, South Africa, of which Mr. W. Spencer Walton has undertaken the directorship, promises to be an agency of much good in a region that has very pressing needs. In a penny booklet, just published by Marshall Brothers, 10, Paternoster-row, Mr. Walton relates the story of his interesting work in South Africa last year, and unfolds the plans he has formed for thorough mission work on returning to the colony in the near future.

Mr. Walton enjoys the confidence and esteem of Christian workers in this country, as he also secured the loving admiration of the many whom he came across in South Africa. A council has been formed in London of gentlemen well known for their active interest in good works, Mr. H. W. Maynard, St. Aubyn's, Wimbledon, being hon. treasurer. Setting forth the claims of South Africa, Mr. Walton says: "During my visit I was enabled to travel nearly 2000 miles, the ravages caused by sin and Satan being too manifest on all sides. One of the great questions out there is, how to keep the coloured people from the drink; not only is it degrading them to a fearful extent, but destroying them by thousands."

Kimberley and Johannesburg, with their thousands of labourers in the diamond fields and gold mines, are centres of earnest Christian testimony, but the effort is by no means proportionate to the great need. To keep the coloured from temptation, the mineowners have devised what is called the "compound system," whereby the labourers are engaged for periods of several months, and, regarding themselves as self-made prisoners, live day and night within the mine enclosure until the expiry of their term of engagement. To a large extent the natives are heathen, but they are willing to listen to the Gospel when lovingly proclaimed. Christian labourers willing to enter the "compounds" have grand opportunities to work for God, while earning their living; for some of the "compounds" have hundreds, and even thousands, of men in them. Mr. Walton says that a Soldiers' Institute is sadly wanted at Wynburg, near Cape Town, and many established agencies require reinforcing.

On returning to South Africa, Mr. Walton intends to provide, as far as possible, for evangelisation in the diamond and gold districts, to start several new and special operations, over which he will exercise a personal oversight in addition to engaging in efforts to help and cheer other Christian workers in the colony. The co-operation of self-supporting missionaries will be welcome. Altogether, it is estimated, the first year's expenditure will be a little over £2000. Mr. Walton's present address is Clent Villa, Versailles-road, Anerley, London, S.E.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.—At a recent meeting on behalf of the South London Auxiliary of the Open-air Mission, held in the Carter Home for Boys, High-street, Clapham, some sensible remarks on open-air preaching were made by Colonel H. G. MacGregor, Aide-de-Camp to Her Majesty, and brother of "Rob Roy," the founder of the Mission. He started by insisting on fairness on the part of the preacher. There are two sides to every subject, and the questioner, instead of being "shut up," should be allowed to have his say. Then there must be faithfulness. We cannot improve the Gospel, but must give it as we get it. Specially must the preacher beware of being led away by his imagination, or he will soon step off the line and preach his own falsehoods instead of God's truth. Heartiness was insisted upon. "Speak from the heart as well as from the head." Naturalness and sincerity were commended. We speak best on those subjects with which we are most familiar. Aping other people is a dismal failure. Humility was the last point touched upon. The other speakers were Dr. Eugene Cronin (the chairman), Rev. Robert Culley, Wesleyan minister, and Mr. Gawin Kirkham, secretary of the parent Society.

eneral Booth's 60th Birthday.

ERE were great rejoicings in the camp of the lvation Army when, on Wednesday of last eek, General Booth attained his sixtieth birth-y. The event had been eagerly looked for-ard to by his followers, and invitations had en extensively issued to his friends and sup-orters to meet him at a luncheon to be held at e Clapton Congress Hall. Accordingly, some vo thousand persons were present to offer him eir congratulations and wish him God-speed his future work. Immediately supporting him ere Mr. T. A. Denny and Mr. F. W. Crossley, Manchester. The hall was elaborately ecorated with mottoes and texts, and a athetic interest was attached to the gathering y the presence of Mrs. Booth, who has so long een laid aside from active service. Amongst he decorations two were especially prominent, earing the words, "Health to our beloved Irs. Booth," and, "God bless and heal Irs. Booth," and loud were the expressions of oy when the General announced that, "at the lose of the luncheon, his precious wife would e present, determined," as she had said, in spite of her weakness, to see their faces nce again." Accordingly, when the time came subdued cheer, mingled with many a fervent Thank God!" arose as Mrs. Booth, weak and ottering, entered the hall, leaning on the arm f her eldest son.

Commissioner Railton then, as senior officer, xpressed, on behalf of himself and his com-ades, the grateful feeling with which they ailed this epoch in the life of their chief, and heir "sense of thankfulness for the great lessing which he had been to them in their wn spiritual life." He announced that there were no less than whose entire lives were given up and subject to the General's direction, and that 2000 more were on the books waiting to be received under similar conditions.

But expressions of goodwill and sympathy not only emanated from those present, for letters and telegrams had been received from all parts of the world bearing messages of love and encouragement, most of which also contained gifts or promises for the strengthening of the sinews of war. In fact, it is doubtful if there is a family under the sun that turns such events as marriages and birthdays to such good account for the furtherance of the Gospel as does that of General Booth; for, though personal presents are declined, ample scope is afforded for the generosity of friends in the subscription of a substantial sum for the maintenance of the work. On this occasion the amount proposed was £5000, "but," drily remarked Mr. Denny, "if we are charged £5000 now the General is 60,

WHAT WILL IT BE WHEN HE IS 65?

And it will be an expensive business for those who have the privilege of living till he is 70!"

But results showed that the figure had not been placed too high, for Mr. Railton was able to announce that before the luncheon commenced no less than £4500 had been guaranteed. Whereupon, Mr. Crossley promptly raised the standard to £7000, adding £100 to the £500 he had already given. Amongst other named donors were Messrs. T. A. Denny, W. S. Caine, M.P., Benjamin Scott (City Chamberlain), Lord Blantyre, Messrs. Miles McInnes, M.P., and Richard Cory (of Cardiff). The sources from which some lesser gifts came invested them with a touching interest, and must have filled the General's heart with as much joy as did the larger amounts. For instance, the girls in the Rescue Home (which, by the way, is one of the most valuable branches of the Army's work) had from their slender means given a penny each, and those who had not a penny to give than usual in order to earn it by extra work. Then, again, the "dossers," who frequent the Shelter provided for men out of work in the West India Dock-road, of their own accord subscribed a halfpenny each, a hundred and one of them placing their names or marks upon the list. Once more, a servant girl in Aberdeen knitted a pair of stockings which she sent to the General; and thus from near and from far, from rich and from poor, came the one wish, "God bless General Booth and the work in which he is engaged."

GOT UP TWO HOURS EARLIER

After these announcements, a duet was sung by Mrs. Oliphant and Miss Stirling, the latter of whom had spent fifty-five days in the prison of Chillon for holding meetings. Then Mr. Denny made one of his warm-hearted speeches, in which he spoke in the highest terms of his experience of the General and his wife, alluding tenderly to Mrs. Booth's affliction and with some anxiety to the health of the General himself, whom he strongly urged to take a month's entire rest.

Mr. Crossley followed, and attributed the undoubted success of the Army's work to the fact that its members "hoist their colours to the top of the mast, and nail them there; for if our colours are not at the top, where are they to be?" he asked. "If they are not at the top, they will be fixed a little lower, and a little lower, and when we see a flag only half-mast high, we know

THERE IS SOMEBODY DEAD!"

He also rejoiced that the members of the Salvation Army did not look around for their pleasures and joys, but found them in their work itself.

Then General Booth at some length gave a survey of his career from the time when, as a lad, converted at the age of sixteen, he had become imbued with love for souls, up to the day when, after many vicissitudes, the Lord called him, as he was convinced, to form the organisation of which he is now the head. Three great principles had formulated his Christianity: (1) He saw that men were living in actual rebellion against God (and on this account a sympathy with God was created in his heart); (2) that, as rebels, men were in great danger on account of God's superior power; (3) that God had Himself provided a wonderful remedy in the sacrifice of Christ, and that if men would only lay down their weapons of rebellion, God would as surely forgive and bless them. Then, as a practical application to himself of these convictions, he concluded that he ought to be reconciled to God, and endeavour to lead others to Him also. With earnest gratitude he spoke of the invaluable assistance he had received throughout from his wife, and told how, through much trial and sorrow, she had been a wise comforter and counsellor.

Following his remarks, Mrs. Booth, assisted to the front of the platform, essayed to speak, but for some minutes was overcome with mingled weakness and emotion, while many eyes amongst the audience were moist with tears. In a very low voice at first, but gaining strength as she proceeded, she said, "God has done the work without our efforts. He has carried out his own purposes, and has led us by a way that we have not known, and has caused all our trials to be swallowed up in rejoicing." She then described how for thirty-four years she had stood by her husband's side in the forefront of the battle, and in a few earnest words exhorted her hearers to "be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might."

Another meeting in the evening, addressed by the General and several speakers, terminated the public proceedings of the day.

AMONG THE ROMAN POOR.

Mrs. Wall's excellent work among the poor of Rome has, we are glad to learn, been greatly blessed of late. Among the working classes of the city there has been much distress, some of which has been alleviated by mission workers, who have not been slow to embrace the opportunities thus afforded of speaking to the people of the Saviour from sin and misery and death. The premises at Trastevere, associated with many happy recollections, have been demolished for the improvement of the Tiber embankment; the new room, at 35, Piazza in Lucina, being much too small for the crowds of people who flock there, more commodious premises have just been purchased, and are now in course of adaptation.

The medical mission is highly appreciated, the new officer, Dr. Baruffi, being very popular among the people. During last year between six and seven thousand persons availed themselves of medical advice and treatment in connection with Mrs. Wall's work. The report, just published, gives some touching incidents. One of them, at once pathetic and encouraging, is about an invalid young man, formerly a student for the Roman Catholic priesthood, who, with his sister, a sweet-natured girl, visited the medical mission, and not only gladly availed himself of the treatment, but listened attentively to the reading of the Bible. The two lived in a room some distance from the city, uncomplainingly struggling with want as well as bodily weakness. Both fell a prey to consumption. On one of Mrs. Wall's visits a priest put in an appearance; he told the young man he would certainly get well, and spoke of everything but the one thing needful. The priest having gone, the emaciated young man took Mrs. Wall's hand, and said: "He never prays with me: will you pray? In the night, when my cough won't let me sleep, I find my comfort in prayer." Grateful for temporal blessings, and trusting in the Lord Jesus, this young man's end was perfectly peaceful. The girl died shortly afterwards, finding her joy in Christ Jesus. Some of the other cases of the working of grace among the Roman poor are also full of interest. Articles for sale in aid of the work, and clothes for distribution among the poor, will be forwarded direct, if sent to the Baptist Mission House, 19, Furnival-street, Holborn.

MISS SKINNER'S FRIENDLY LETTERS are a very useful series of envelope tracts. The four latest issues are addressed to maid-servants, soldiers, Japanese ladies, and deists in India. The last two were, we understand, written at the request of missionaries labouring in Japan and India. These "Friendly Letters" are as terse and interesting as their many predecessors.

BOOKS FOR THE BLIND.—The forty-first annual report of Moon's Society for Embossing and Circulating the Holy Scriptures and other useful Books for the Blind, states that the number of readers among the sightless increases, although many of the very aged are every year removed by death. The proportion of the young to the adult blind is comparatively small, the greater number of the blind being over thirty years of age. More than half the readers of Moon's type, which has been adapted to many languages, are above fifty years of age, and so simple is the character that, although the fingers may be hardened by work, the letters are easily distinguished by those who have learned the system. The blind are continually applying for a larger variety of books, and with increased funds more might be embossed and put in circulation. The total number issued by the Society up to the present exceeds 175,000. The friends of the blind will be glad to learn that everything is so arranged throughout the embossing establishment, that if Dr. Moon, who has now entered upon the jubilee of his labours for the blind, were unable to render much assistance himself, the work could be carried on uninterruptedly. The hon. treasurer and secretary of the charity is Dr. Moon, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

The cause of this Mission was pleaded with much ability and earnestness at a meeting held in the Mansion House, on Friday afternoon last, when the Lord Mayor still further added to the obligations which the Christian community is under to him in giving assistance to important home and foreign evangelistic and beneficent efforts. At the outset, Mr. J. M. Weylland made a statement as to the encouraging progress of the Mission, which now supports nine workers.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe called upon the meeting to recognise the importance of the work of the Mission, and to assist in enabling it to extend its operations. Going back, he recalled his own experience, twenty-five years ago, among French people at Lille, where for a period of ten months he performed pastoral duty. Domiciliary visitation is essential to successful work, and he rejoiced to find that the City Mission largely used that method of taking the Gospel to the people. France has, he maintained, special claims upon the Christians of England, because, owing to her nearness to us, intercommunication has developed to a large extent, and the state of Paris must greatly affect the state of London. Though there is much religious indifference in France, yet there is also a remarkable readiness to receive the truth. This fact Mr. Peploe illustrated by relating incidents of his own ministry in the North of France, showing how some who, from ignorance and prejudice, were inimical to his motives and endeavours, became firm friends on learning something of Christ and the Gospel of God's grace.

Sir Robert Fowler heartily commended the Mission to public support. What the London City Mission has done for the Metropolis of England, the Paris City Mission is endeavouring to do for the pleasure city of France.

Rev. S. H. Anderson, a member of the committee of the Mission, after speaking of the glorious record of France in years gone by, dwelt upon the country's present great need. To-day the obstacles which have so long stood in the way of Christian testimony have been removed, but unhappily the people have rebounded from Roman Catholicism into infidelity. There is preaching out of doors as well as in the halls; there is nothing sensational in the service, but simply reading the Word of God exposition of the Gospel, with singing and prayer, and yet the people are waiting to hear the preacher night after night. Mr. Anderson related some conversations on religious matters with generally intelligent and well-to-do people, disclosing extreme ignorance of the Gospel. The proprietor of a large business establishment confessed that he had never heard of the Bible; another man thought Protestantism was a species of freemasonry; a third asked Mr. Anderson whether he was the author of the Gospel of Matthew. One man was unable to understand why Mr. Anderson should distribute Gospels, and persisted in suspecting that the books were advertising something or someone. Asked to be frank in explaining his zeal in distributing the books, Mr. Anderson joyfully admitted that the books advertised Christ as the Saviour of men, and his Gospel for the good of France. The rejoinder of the darkened man was in words as true as they are saddening: "You come very late!" In conclusion, Mr. Anderson asked that France should not be forgotten by Britain, now that, in the providence of God, she is doing much to disseminate the Gospel throughout the world.

Words of cordial sympathy having been spoken by Messrs. G. Williams, F. A. Bevan, and G. H. Benson, and Revs. R. McAll and J. Gritton, D.D., Mr. Weylland intimated that several promises had been received of help towards increasing the number of missionaries, which is specially desirable in view of the Exhibition soon to be opened.

The Lord Mayor, in the course of a few remarks, observed that anything done for the good of France is also for the good of England. He expressed a sincere hope that the work would be largely extended and blessed in the highest as well as secondary senses to the people of the neighbouring Republic.

MISSION AT BESSBROOK.

Miss Smith and Miss Bax, of Southsea, have concluded a successful mission at the temperance town of Bessbrook, co. Armagh, Ireland. The population of Bessbrook is about 3000, two-thirds being Protestants.

The Public Hall, which seats some eight hundred, was at times insufficient to accommodate the attentive audience. A very solemn influence rested on the people, and large numbers, through the convincing and quickening power of the Holy Spirit, were led to decide for God. The work, though embracing all classes, has been chiefly among the young; it has brought a large increase to Y.M. and Y.W.C.A.'s, and called forth testimony from many Sunday-school teachers that numbers in their classes have professed conversion. The children's meetings shared the power in large measure; many lambs have entered the Good Shepherd's fold.

Three remarks in connection with these services: (1) Prayer before it began and while in progress was strikingly answered; (2) the importance of the conversion of the young, for as age increases the probability of accepting salvation decreases; (3) public-houses being absent, the Gospel is more likely to be received.

HOSPITAL NURSES.—Major Meares, 43, Gordon-square, W.C., writes to say that he is anxious to meet with friends who are interested in the matter, to arrange a plan by which hospital nurses could have a couple of hours' driving or boating once or twice a week during the summer, either early in the morning or in the afternoon. He says that two hours in the fresh air, with a cup of tea, would send them back to their work all the fresher and better.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—Arrangements have been completed for carrying on this work under the superintendence of Mr. C. T. Lipschytz, who has been for some time connected with the Mission. An interesting meeting was held on Tuesday, last week, in Albion-place, London-wall, in connection with the Mission. About 150 poor Jews from the East-end, chiefly German and Polish, sat down to a substantial tea. Isa. xl. was read in three different languages, and the meeting was afterwards addressed by Revs. Gordon Calthrop (chairman), J. H. Scott (rector of Spitalfields), J. B. Barraclough, and E. A. Wesley in English, and by Mr. Goldenberg and Mr. Lipschytz (superintendent of the Mission) in German. Meetings are held every Saturday from three to five in Albion Hall. Rev. Gordon Calthrop is president, and Rev. E. A. Wesley, hon. sec. of the Mission.

THE PROTESTANT ALLIANCE gives a good account of its last year's work in the thirty-sixth annual report, recently published. The object of the Alliance is to maintain and defend, against all the encroachments of Popery, the Scriptural doctrines of the Reformation and the principles of religious liberty, as the best security under God for the temporal and spiritual welfare of the British Empire. The many manifestations of Romish activity during the year fully justified the continued effort of the Alliance to stir up public opinion. The Executive Committee has kept a vigilant eye upon political and social events, while in association with auxiliaries throughout the country, the Alliance has assisted in many meetings and conferences. It is hoped that the result will show itself in a more general appreciation of Protestant principles, and that the appeal of the Alliance for increased support to enable it to extend its important work will be heard and answered. The office is 9, Strand, London, W.C.

THE HEBREW OLD TESTAMENT.

Those of our readers who study the Old Testament with the original Hebrew under their eyes, will rejoice to hear that Dr. Ginsburg's revised text is so far advanced towards completion that the Committee of the Trinitarian Bible Society, under whose auspices it will be given forth to the world, has been enabled to go to press. Up to the present no edition of the Hebrew Bible has been based on a full view and collation of the many manuscripts treasured up in the great libraries of Europe. This edition will embody the important results of Dr. Ginsburg's critical researches, as prosecuted during a period of thirty years. The outcome will be not only a text as near perfection as untiring diligence and careful study can produce from the materials at disposal, but a text accompanied by various readings from valuable manuscripts which have never before been collated. The student who is not above jots and tittles will find much that is fresh to engage his attention, and the results will also go far towards helping to a faithful interpretation of passages as to the precise drift of which there has been difficulty ever since the Hebrew Bible was first printed.

We have seen the first sheets of this great work, and are glad to say that it is being set in a bold type, which will greatly delight Hebraists. At the very outset the student finds new divisions, which are not only after the best manuscripts, but according to the logical progress of the story. The "higher" critics may prepare themselves to discover that legitimate endeavours such as these of Dr. Ginsburg's will go far to show the utter worthlessness of some of their theories; while those who, following Christ and his Apostles, maintain the integrity of the writings of Moses and the prophets, may look forward to a thousand new reasons for a full assurance of faith in the Old Testament. It has been said that the Old Testament is "in the crucible"; well, if it is, it is coming forth fully tried, and to occupy as secure a position as ever. We trust Dr. Ginsburg will be blessed with health to carry his important work to completion.

SWEDISH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—From the Society's Station at Mukimbungu, on the Lower Congo, the sad news has been received that Miss A. Andersson, who went out to Africa in the spring of last year, died on January 22, of typhus fever. The stations of this Society on the Congo are now marked by the tombs of three of its workers, who await the resurrection morning.

THE MISSIONARY CHURCH OF BELGIUM last year enrolled 500 new members. All that the twenty-two pastors can do, with the help of a few evangelists, is to strengthen and develop the disciples which gather around them, and to minister to their spiritual needs. The work of conquest, or recruiting, is almost solely accomplished by the zeal of the Christian men and women in the churches, and the young men of the Christian Associations. Last year the Gospel was preached in 7970 meetings. The financial difficulties have been increased by new movements that have occurred in different places. The deficit for the year is more than £1400. The general secretary is Rev. Kennedy Anet, 123, Chaussée d'Ixelles, Brussels.

MONTE CARLO GAMBLING HELL.—Its existence is a disgrace to Europe, and ought no longer to be tolerated. One by one all the older gaming palaces of the Continent—Homburg, Baden-Baden, and the rest—have been put down, because the Governments of the States in which they flourished found that the large revenue their proprietors were glad to pay did not compensate for the evil and scandal of which they were the prolific source. It is time that the same fate should overtake Monte Carlo. Nominally the Prince of Monaco, in whose territory it is situated, is an independent potentate, but there need be no doubt that if the French Government chose to put an end to the nuisance it could speedily do so; and it is not creditable to the Republic that so obvious a duty has been so long neglected.—Scottish Leader.

YOUNG WOMEN IN LONDON.

On Thursday evening the annual meeting of the London Young Women's Christian Association was held in Exeter Hall. The audience filled the spacious building, and the proceedings were characterised by much enthusiasm. The choir of the Normal College for the Blind, Upper Norwood, sang at intervals, and many friends from the country attended and encouraged the large number of London workers present. Lord Kinnaird presided, and in the course of some appropriate remarks emphasised the fact that the Association is above all things an evangelistic agency.

Mr. W. T. Paton, finance secretary, after a reference to the death of the Dowager Lady Kinnaird, whose life was one of great devotion to the cause of the young women of London, made a brief statement. He characterised the year as one of steady progress in all directions. The incubus of debt was cleared off, and with a substantial balance in hand at the beginning of the present year four new branches were established, bringing the number up to 140 in London, with a membership of 16,142, an increase of 1332 on the year. The educational classes have become increasingly popular, and the importance of physical education has been recognised by the opening of a second gymnasium. The Holiday and Sick Aid Club has assisted 550 members to the enjoyment of several weeks' change, about half of them being sick cases. The work among the young women employed in factories and laundries is extending, and promising important results. Major Lombard, secretary at Morley Halls, Regent-street, made a general statement on the Association and its varied operations. From all parts of the world very encouraging reports have been received. In the east as well as the west many branches have of late been quickened into renewed activity; there is increasingly happy union in prayer, and also a growing delight in Bible study.

Rev. John McNeill delivered an address which was highly appreciated. The large audience of young women before him could not but impress him with the great opportunities of the moment, and he improved the occasion by powerfully presenting the Gospel and enforcing its appeal. Having remarked upon the potency of young women as agents of Satan, he pointed out that those who are not using their influence on the side of Christ are certainly against God and holiness. He proceeded to expound and apply the Gospel story of the poor woman who was healed from a longstanding disease by just touching the hem of Christ's garment. He took it that the object of the story was to show how little one must do to be saved. Twelve years earlier, not feeling her need, the woman might have held Christ in contempt, as the Pharisees and Scribes did; twelve years later she might have lost her opportunity. When she touched Christ, in a moment the burden of twelve years was gone, and life, health, beauty, and freshness came. In solemn tones, warning them that life means trial and disappointment, Mr. McNeill asked the young women to imitate the poor woman. Drawn by love, driven by need, he besought them to exercise the faith which touches Christ. When the Lord proceeded to say that "somebody" touched Him, the woman came forward and "told Him all the truth." Then Christ ennobled her, made her a princess of the blood, saying, "Daughter, be of good comfort." So when we have been healed by faith in Christ, we must confess Him before the world. There must be no shrinking or shirking. To act as the poor woman did is to be dignified indeed, and to rise to the flower and crown of true womanhood. In some concluding words, Mr. McNeill said that those who would shrink from the open confession of Christ may be so successful that at the last He will say, "I never knew you."

Miss Leitch, of Jaffna, Ceylon, spoke of the Church's duty of making the Gospel known throughout the world, and called upon young women to recognise their individual opportunities and responsibilities. She urged wholehearted consecration to Christ, and her earnest words went home to many.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. E. P. Telford has held a five days' mission at Stockport. Many have declared their decision for Christ. Mr. Telford has since been having good meetings at Halifax.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is holding a mission at Crediton, N. Devon, which is to be continued until next Sunday week. There have already been cheering results of the meetings held during the past twelve days.

Mr. Charles Garnett, the Wesleyan evangelist, has concluded a Gospel mission at Silvertown, London. His preaching has made a deep impression, and there have been a goodly number of professed conversions.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Powers have conducted a three weeks' mission in the village of Stoneferry, near Hull, with good results; many have professed salvation, the Church is greatly quickened, and the work is still spreading.

Stornoway, Lewis, N.B.—Mr. Samuel Mackenzie has concluded his mission at Stornoway and left for Cromarty. It was intended at first that he should remain for only ten days, but his work was so greatly blessed, large numbers having decided for Christ, that he lengthened his stay to five weeks.

Major Whittle, who, with his son and Dr. Moxey, of Edinburgh, has been having good meetings in Dundee, left there last Saturday for Aberdeen, where he will remain until April 29. His subsequent engagements are:—Stirling, April 30 to May 10; Inverness, May 11 to 25; Jedburgh, May 26 to June 6; Hawick, June 7 to 21.

Battersea.—A company of earnest Christian workers, calling themselves "The Europa Band," have for some time been taking the message of the Gospel to the dwellers in and around Little Europa-place, a squalid part of Battersea. There have been weekly open air services, house-to-house visitation, tract distribution, &c. Some hopeful cases of conversion have resulted.

Dr. Pentecost in Glasgow.—The merchants returned last week to the second series of addresses with greater eagerness than they attended the first. Standing-room was at a premium; the deepest interest was manifested. The addresses will continue through this week, and possibly a third week. Dr. Pentecost then closes his mision in Glasgow, and goes to Edinburgh, for a month's work in the west end of that city.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has conducted two weeks' meetings in Coatbridge, near Glasgow. The Gospel was preached with power, and several professed to pass "out of darkness into light." On some of the evenings Mr. Moodie gave very interesting lectures on the Holy Land, illustrated by very fine views. He has profited much by his visit to Palestine last year, and speaks in a very effective way on that ever-interesting subject.

Major Cole.—A correspondent of the Chicago Record of Christian Work writes:—Major Cole, wife, daughter, and Mr. Jewett, continued with us in revival meetings at Macon City for three weeks. It was conceded to be the most gracious revival ever held in this city, resulting in about three hundred professions of religion. The meetings were held in the spacious court-house, and were participated in by four churches. Men and women of dissolute lives and character came to the altar. Brother Cole has access to God and man, and moves stubborn hearts as few can. His wife and daughter rendered the most valuable aid. They are now at Brookfield, Mo., in a meeting, and from there expect to go to Little Rock, Ark.

Brixton Open-air Mission.—We are soon to commence the second season of our work, and would ask Christian men and women who have time and opportunity to join us. We need preachers, singers, players on any stringed or reed instruments, tract distributors, and earnest, prayerful men and women to carry on a systematic round of services in the crowded thoroughfares of Brixton. Our central service will be held near Brixton Church and Acre-lane, commencing April 28. Helpers are invited to communicate with me.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

Can the words in Heb. xiii. 10, "We have an altar," be rightly used to justify the substitution of the word "altar" for "table," as uniformly used in the Book of Common Prayer? A Ritualistic clergyman adopts this plea; but does not St. Paul refer solely to our one altar, Jesus Christ? I should be glad to know. C. F. J.

Truro, April 8.

Heb. xiii. 10 lends no sanction to the idea that the Lord's table is an altar. "If," asks Dr. Kay, in the Speaker's Commentary, "the fire of that antitypal altar was the eternal Spirit—'the fire of love'—what could the altar itself be but Christ's own Divine-human personality?"

A NEW SERIAL.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have added one more to their many existing claims on the gratitude of the reading public. They have begun the serial issue of a work entitled Conquests of the Cross, which will set forth, through competent pens, some of the wonderful triumphs of Christianity. Many known narratives of successful Gospel effort among benighted heathen races will be re-told, and others not so familiar will be brought to light. We can scarcely conceive of any better way of meeting the adverse criticisms that are passed on the Christian faith in these days, than to recount some of the more striking of its achievements in revolutionising the lives of men and of peoples.

The new work will, of course, be amply illustrated, and presented to the public in the attractive form for which these publishers are famous. A splendid coloured picture, representing the meeting of Livingstone and Stanley in the heart of Africa, is given with the first part.

OGLE MEWS RAGGED SCHOOL.

At the annual gathering, last week, of the friends of this Institution, situated near the Middlesex Hospital, the chair was occupied by Sir Robert Phayre, and an excellent account of work done was rendered. The report referred to the continued success of the general school work, and showed that special efforts are made to counteract the effects of pernicious literature. Sir Robert Phayre spoke of the work as an example of practical Christianity. Sir George Bruce said he had asked the superintendent if School Boards should not do away with the necessity of such an institution as Ogle Mews; but the answer was that the ragged-school gave a spiritual tendency to its teaching, and enforced Gospel truths in a way that would be impossible in Government schools. Mr. John Priestley gave some account of the state of things in the old days of forty years ago. Rev. Duncan Sillars showed the importance of giving the first attention to the godly upbringing of the children of the poor.

Addresses were also given by Mr. E. Compton, Comptroller of the Post Office Savings Bank, Col. Davis, and Mr. J. Pearce. As a memorial of the late Sir Robert Carden, who was a liberal helper of the work, an attempt is being made to raise £2000.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—Praise, for much blessing at Seaton, Devon, the past week, in connection with services conducted by Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, Mon.——Prayer, for blessing on special services being held at Seaton by Mr. Opie Rodway.——For blessing on the labours of Mr. and Mrs. J. Woolley, in connection with the Sedgley Temperance Home Mission.——That much blessing may attend the distribution of tracts and special mission effort at the Exeter "Easter Fair," April 19 to 24.

THE PROTESTANT COMMITTEE OF LYONS has for over thirty years supported works of love and mercy among the Protestants scattered in the region known as the valleys of Felix Neff. Material help is the Christian manifestation which most powerfully commends the Gospel to these poor people, whose ills have to be sympathised with, and in some measure alleviated by the promotion of schemes of emigration. Towards this work help is rendered by friends in many lands, including Great Britain. English contributions, with intimation of their special purpose, may be sent to Messrs. Smith Payne & Smith, 1, Lombard-street, London.

Northern Light.

A travelling correspondent of The Dundee Advertiser has sent an account of an adventure in Peking with Chinese monks. The account of the treatment he and Mr. Warner, of the British Legation, received at the hands of these ruffianly followers of Buddha is disgraceful, and very saddening. They had literally to bribe their way out of the Llama, or great temple, and were glad to escape with their lives. Over 1000 Mongol and Thibetan monks, the most of them debauched wretches, utterly beyond control of the Chinese authorities, are in this temple, which contains a wooden image of Buddha 70 ft. high.

On a recent Sabbath, Rev. J. J. Fuller, from West Africa, preached in Aberdeen on behalf of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society. A public meeting held on the following day awakened much interest on account of the details of mission work given by Mr. Fuller.

The ratepayers of the Granite City very properly protest against an increase in the number of licenses being granted at the ensuing licensing court. At Dundee an influential deputation on similar good work intent, waited on the magistrates, and had the satisfaction of hearing that their representations would receive every consideration. Those who know the hold intemperance has on Dundee can sympathise with those who long for a much greater reduction in the number of licenses.

The evangelistic spirit is spreading in Glasgow. Last week meetings were held in Tent Hall, Mizpah Hall, and Bethany Hall, not to speak of Dr. Pentecost's Pollokshields work, and his renewal of mid-day meetings for business men.

The series of evangelistic meetings held in Coupar Angus F.C. Hall, and conducted by Mr. Canning, of the London Evangelisation Society, have not been attended with much success. The second week's attendances were better than the first, but the results are discouraging to the workers.

For the China Famine Relief Fund Glasgow has already remitted £1400 to the Mansion House. The committee aim at a contribution of £2000, which sum kind hearts in Glasgow are hopeful of raising.

Mr. Richard Hunter, secretary of the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society, 200, Broomielaw, would be grateful for gifts of used books and periodicals to brighten Jack's leisure hours at sea. Last year, through the kindness of friends, 863 bags and parcels of books were given out to sailors. The stock has run out, and, in prospect of long and dreary voyages, Jack's eyes are growing wistful for more.

CHRISTCHURCH, NEW ZEALAND.—An occasional correspondent writes:—We have been having times of great blessing; our open-air meetings are wonderfully used of God, and we are rejoicing all round in a general revival of God's work. Our number of workers is increasing, and altogether we are in a healthy spiritual state in this distant land.

THE LEPER HOME AT JERUSALEM.—The story of 1888, as told in the seventeenth report, is one of quiet perseverance in well-doing, in the new and spacious buildings, which are now quite paid for, and the unencumbered property of the Moravian Church. Mr. and Mrs. Müller are still at the head of the establishment, assisted by two nurses, and a young native catechist named Elias Daughan. Having been taught to regard their fatal disease as an emblem of the deadly leprosy of sin, the inmates have in many cases come to acknowledge the claims of Christ, and have also shown patience in their sufferings and holiness in their lives. At the close of last year there were thirteen male and six female patients in the Home. During the year three of the inmates died, two of them rejoicing exceedingly in Christ and his redemption. Contributions towards the support of the Home may be sent to Dr. W. V. Drury, Lingmoor, Dean Park, Bournemouth.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S HOME.

The annual meeting of this Home was held on Wednesday, April 10, at the Y.W.C.A. Central Institute, Old Cavendish-street. Mr. Joseph Weatherley, as chairman, spoke of Miss Mittendorff's residence in Switzerland from ill-health; while deeply regretting her enforced absence, he acknowledged with thankfulness that her substitute, Miss Macgrath, proved herself indeed sent of the Lord. By her strong faith and untiring zeal in the work, the Council felt they had one to whom they might leave the responsibility of the Home. Reference was pathetically made, both by the chairman and other speakers, to Mr. Denham Smith, who had always been present at this annual gathering, and by his happy remarks impressed upon the audience the value of such a harbour of refuge for the little ones.

Mr. George Holland, of Whitechapel, spoke with touching power of the great needs of Homes like this, rescuing girls at an early age, and training them to habits of usefulness. With regard to the temporal needs of such Homes, he urged trust in the Lord and waiting on Him for guidance. He gave a thrilling account of his own experience of answer to prayer, for the encouragement of those who are carrying on this work of housing, training, and sending forth into the world the seventy-five now under their care.

Dr. J. K. Picard, Dr. Gilbart Smith, Mr. Woodhouse, Deputy Surgeon-General Partridge, Mr. George Williams, and Mr. West each spoke a few words telling of need supplied, and urging more earnest devotion to the work of the Lord in helping to save some of the destitute girls from growing up to be centres of sin and misery. Mr. George Williams expressed the hope that a portion of the mantle of Mr. Denham Smith's loving spirit might fall upon all assembled, that each might endeavour to help to fill his vacant place in this work.

DOWN LODGE HALL, WANDSWORTH, continues to be the centre of good wook, attended by much blessing. Essentially undenominational in character, the mission has several departments, all in active operation. The Bible-classes are well attended, and those who conduct them have been encouraged by sceing the good effects of sound spiritual instruction upon the lives of the young people. A clothing club has proved of great service to the poor. The hall exists with the special object of facilitating the religious and educational advantage of the working classes, and it deserves hearty support. The hon. secretary is Mr. C. F. Davis, Earlsfield, Wandsworth Common, S.W.

THE BEDFORD INSTITUTE.—A truly grand work is being done in the most needy parts of London by the Bedford Institute First Day School and Home Mission Association. At Spitalfields, Bethnal Green, Ratcliff, Clerkenwell, Deptford, and Bunhill Fields, young and old are educated and advised, sympathised with and helped, by earnest Christians, who are encouraged to see some fruit of their devoted toil. The twenty-second annual report, just published, shows what a large number of agencies, culminating in evangelisation, may be successfully worked when the determination is, without regard to praise and in spite of difficulties, simply to serve God and assist in raising the fallen. The secretary of the work is George Armatage, the Bedford Institute, Spitalfields, E.

SPAIN.—Mr. T. Wilkes writes from Corunna to Echoes of Service:—The work is going on quietly but steadily, and the Lord encourages us in many ways, both in the villages and in the meetings here. Last week Mr. Chesterman and I went to San Clodio to visit the few Christians who live there among the mountains. We found them all well and full of joy in the Lord. It made our hearts rejoice to see their real earnest desire to hear God's Word. Mr. Chesterman preached the Gospel every evening, and sometimes we had meetings twice in the day, although some of the believers had to walk a considerable distance to them. There are four or five candidates for baptism, whose testimony seems very clear, and Mr. Chesterman hopes to pay them another visit soon in order to baptize them.

OBITUARY.

MISS SARAH ABBOTT.

Miss Sarah Abbott, of Liskeard, Cornwall, departed this life on the anniversary of her birthday, March 28. An intimation being given at the close of her few days' illness that recovery was improbable, she remarked, "Had it been the Lord's will I should like to have lived a little longer to comfort the sick and the sorrowing, but I am in God's hands." She was never ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, but in all circumstances and amongst all classes she spoke of Him whose service was her delight.

MRS. HUISH, OF BONCHURCH, I.W.

A few days ago this lady, widow of the late Captain Huish, entered into rest, after a long life spent in the service of Christ. It is thirty years since, with her husband (who died over twenty years ago), Mrs. Huish retired from active work in London. A valued correspondent writes respecting her:—

"By the death of Mrs. Huish the upper classes of the Undercliff, and indeed of the Isle of Wight, have lost a greatly-esteemed friend, and the poor a benefactress who never failed them. For many years during Captain Huish's residence near London, it was his custom to gather large parties of the missionaries of the London City Mission at his home, and when he retired from official life, he devised the scheme of the Home at Ventnor, which, soon after his death, Mrs. Huish presented as a free gift to that Mission. Extending her sympathies she founded the Young Men's Christian Association and Mission-room in the village of Bonchurch, and for sixteen years, as president of the Y.W.C.A. in Bonchurch and Ventor, she was able to help young women of every class in different ways, temporal and spiritual. But her untiring energy was shown in the different meetings and missions which she either established or supported: every Monday she held a mother's meeting in the Bonchurch Mission-room, whilst a weekly Bible reading open to all was held in the dining-room of Coombe Wood."

FOLKESTONE Y.M.C.A.—New and commodious premises in Church-street have just been erected by this Association. At a public meeting in token of the happy event, the hon. secretary, Mr. Martin Henry, reported that the Association has now ninety members and forty associates. Visitors to the town have much cheered and helped the workers on some occasions; their support and influence are highly appreciated. The young men do not attend the Bible-classes and religious meetings so constantly as could be wished, but improvement in this all-important direction is the subject of earnest prayer and lively hope. Addresses were delivered by Mr. W. Hind-Smith, of London, and a number of local friends.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE READING ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of members and branch secretaries was recently held at 56, Old Bailey, London, the chair being occupied by Lord Kinnaird. The hon. secretary, Mr. C. Waters, stated that for the present year 232,000 cards of membership had been issued, being an increase of 40,000 over the number at the same date in 1888. The catholicity of the Association was shown by a list of no less than twenty-four different religious denominations in connection with which branches had been formed. The Chairman urged the members to be in earnest. Rev. R. H. Lovell, of Bromley, in an admirable speech, dwelt upon the value of Bible study and the increasing beauty that opened up to the diligent searcher. Rev. H. O. Mackey, of Peckham, also spoke.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.—In view of the discussion of Sir Joseph Pease's motion on the opium trade in the House of Commons on May 3, Mr. J. G. Alexander, of Croydon, writes to urge that electors should write to their members of Parliament, asking them to support the motion. The Secretary of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Traffic, the Broadway Chambers, S.W., will be glad to furnish copies of a pamphlet entitled, "Our National Responsibility for the Opium Trade," specially "prepared for the use of Members of Parliament," and which contains most convincing answers to the various difficulties and objections which have from time to time been urged in defence of the opium revenue. A copy of this pamphlet sent with a private letter would be likely, under the Divine blessing, to bring conviction to any candid and independent mind.

POOR CHILDREN OF LONDON.

The merciful work of the Poor Children's Aid Society was the subject of very encouraging testimony at a meeting held on Wednesday last week at the offices of the School Board for London. The existence of the Society was more than vindicated, while the way in which it administers the funds at its disposal was shown to be both economical and efficient. Co-operating with existing agencies, it provides for the feeding and clothing of destitute school children. Last year £1138 were expended. Grants were made to many schools—Board and voluntary—as well as to missions and parochial centres. The meals reached a total of 104,640, while 5594 articles of clothing were distributed. Over 500 pairs of wooden shoes were accepted by children who would otherwise have remained barefooted. The Holiday Home at Walthamstow afforded a fortnight's happiness to no fewer than 78 children, the entire cost of the change, including railway fares, being only £43. A Convalescent Home is sadly needed, and with an intimation of this, the report, a digest of which was read by Rev. J. R. Diggle, Chairman of the Board, concluded.

Lord Cranbrook, who presided, made a speech full of hearty sympathy with the good work of the Society. He dwelt upon its humanity, remarking also upon the thorough reasonableness of the statements of the teachers that, with this provision for their comfort, the poorest children are enabled to come off well on examination days. The fact that the kindhearted teachers themselves have in some cases subscribed substantial sums towards feeding their famished scholars, was pointed to as ample evidence of the reality of the need. Alluding to the wretchedness from which many of the children are gathered, his Lordship touched upon a matter of great importance to friends of philanthropic endeavour. Sometimes when destitute children have been tenderly cared for and educated, parents come forward and claim them, to their lasting ruin. This, he said, seems wrong; it cannot be right that a reprobate father or mother should be allowed to seize upon a child, and pervert to the basest uses the very talents which have been developed through benevolent labour. The subject is beset with enormous difficulties in the way of law, but it seems highly necessary that something should be done.

Dr. Gladstone bore testimony from personal observation of the great usefulness of the work. Referring to the relation of the State to the condition of the masses of the people, Dr. Gladstone would not undertake to say what the State ought to do, but he said he was sure that those who profess to follow Him who "had compassion on the multitude" ought to exert themselves in such a cause as this.

Rev. J. F. Porter said that, as far as his observation had gone, the mothers of the poor children had gladly rendered help in preparing the food. The charity is the more acceptable because it is not the gift of any distinct church or party. Speaking of the thousands of poor families in North-east London, Mr. Porter said that ninety per cent. of them are within fourteen days of starvation, so that the Society had been a great blessing to many thousands of children in that part. Addresses were also delivered by Canon Barker, Mr. John Kirk (of the Ragged School Union), and other gentlemen and ladies.

FLOWER GIRL MISSION.—This work is in all respects worthy of support. The past winter has been a time of severe hardship; and no class of the poor suffers more in hard weather than the women, girl, and child flower sellers, whose scant livelihood depends upon so many contingencies. Having struggled through the winter, many of these poor street traders find that they have exhausted all their resources. The Committee have an Orphan Home scheme in hand, as well as the purchase of two houses in the neighbourhood, to be fitted up as a Home for working girls.

AMONG AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.

It is now many years since Mr. Daniel Matthews and his devoted wife began their work of love and mercy among the Aborigines of Australia. Recently their endeavours have been prosecuted under peculiar disadvantages, arising from circumstances described at length in the thirteenth report, just to hand. Finding that alliance with a society having at heart the temporal interest of the Aborigines by no means helped him in leading the people to Christ, Mr. Matthews has resumed his special work at the Maloga station on the Murray River.

In a circular setting forth his plans, Mr. Matthews says the entire Aboriginal population of the Australian Continent may, without exaggeration, be estimated at something like 300,000. In Victoria, with an aboriginal and half-caste population of some 700, the State and the Christian public make provision for educational and religious work. In New South Wales the Government has recently made grants of land and given substantial subsidies for promoting civilisation among a native population of upwards of 8000. In Queensland, with natives variously estimated at from 100,000 to 150,000 in number, little or nothing has been done till recently; but Mr. Matthews believes that in a few months two or more mission stations will be in active operation.

Though there has been much to discourage in the past, there has also been cause for thankfulness to God for his blessing on the efforts put forth. Mr. Matthews has many projects now in hand for the benefit of the people for whom he is giving his life. He proposes, with the object of enlisting sympathy, to visit England this summer, attended by a small party of converted Aborigines. The Maloga Mission Station is near Echuca, Victoria.

Personalia.

Dr. W. G. Blaikie, of Edinburgh, intends to spend most of the ensuing summer on the American side of the Atlantic.

Dr. Cranage, of the Old Hall, Wellington, Shropshire, and his youngest son, have returned after an absence of four months, from Egypt, very much benefited in health. On Sunday week the Doctor resumed his place in the services of the New Hall, which he had been unable to occupy for twelve months past, owing to indisposition. He is now able to take up, with greater vigour than for some time formerly, the sphere he has occupied for nearly thirty years.

Rev. John McNeill.—In a letter to The New York Observer, Dr. Blaikie, of Edinburgh, makes some interesting references to Mr. McNeill:—"One of the most striking things about Mr. McNeill is that his university and theological curriculum seems in no degree to have impaired the simplicity and naturalness of his character. That alone indicates a remarkable strength of nature. Mr. McNeill is no great scholar, and, I believe, never went deep into any of the branches of study; but he shows a mind that has been enlarged and liberalised by knowledge, and his style shows familiarity with good English authors. We in Edinburgh found it a hard thing to part with Mr. McNeill so soon. In the Free Church we have had no preacher for a long time of the calibre of Chalmers, Guthrie, and Candlish, and when one had just appeared it was rather hard to have that five-millioned metropolis spiriting him away before he had well begun his work."

SUNDAY CLOSING.—In the committee stage of Mr. Stevenson's Bill every effort will be made by its opponents to exclude London, and to minimise the benificent effect of the measure by so-called "amendments." The agitation must, therefore, be renewed with increased vigour. Meetings and conferences should be held everywhere.

William Copleston.

UNION HALL MISSION.

The twenty-ninth annual gathering of the Union Hall Mission, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, was recently held. In the afternoon the meeting was presided over by Mr. James E. Mathieson, and addresses were delivered by various friends of the work. In the evening the Earl of Aberdeen presided. One thing struck him (said his lordship) as being unique, and that was they had fathers' meetings. He knew of mothers' meetings, but had not heard much about those for fathers. He attached much importance to the gathering of the fathers for religious counsel and instruction.

Mr. Robert Paton having expressed his interest and sympathy with the work, Mr. Bilke, the superintendent, made a statement, from which it appeared there are seven branches carried on in connection with Union Hall by seven missionaries and voluntary helpers. Meetings of various kinds are held every night, all having a spiritual bearing, the object being to lead men and women to the Saviour. During the past year all the meetings have been well attended. A debt on the work was a burden which they wished to have removed, and he asked the friends present to help them liberally. Messrs. Thomas B. Miller, William R. Lane, J. E. Hawkins, J. E. Taylor, J. Jackson, E. Ives, and William Holmes, also addressed the meeting.

MANCHESTER CITY MISSION.—This Mission is preparing for its summer and autumn campaign at the wakes to be held within thirty or forty miles of the city. Last year ninety-seven of these were visited by the missionaries and deaconesses employed by the Mission, who spent 8070 hours thus: made 14,170 visits, held 1115 meetings, which were attended by 977,629 persons, and took 868 temperance pledges. The London Open-air Mission made a grant of £50 towards the expenses.

JAPAN.—An English resident in Tokio has communicated the following. Some time since two officers of the Government were thrown into prison for a fortnight because of some political offence. They had heard very little of Christianity, and were not at all favourable to it. A friend to the Gospel placed in their hands the "Life of Stephen Grellet," by Rev. William Guest (Hodder & Stoughton), which has been translated into Japanese. As soon as they were liberated, they called upon the gentleman who had given them the book to tell him they had read it, had been convinced of the truth he believed through the perusal of it, and had come out of prison no longer adverse, but themselves Christians.

CHRISTIAN WORK AMONG JEWISH WOMEN.—For more than sixty years the Philo-Judean Society has carried on quiet Christian work among poor Jewish women in East London. The old Beehive, which Miss Macpherson has so kindly placed at disposal for meetings during a long period, is closed, and the weekly sewing and Bible-class is now held in the Gospel Hall at the Victoria Home, Commercial-street, on Tuesday afternoons, instead of Thursdays, as hitherto. Many of the early supporters of this modest effort have been lost by death, and new friends are at present needed. Copies of the last report may be had from Mrs. A. E. Pridham, 12, Kemplay-road, Hampstead. Those kind friends who are in the habit of sending parcels of clothing should address them to Mrs. Pridham, at the Victoria Home.

SEDGLEY TEMPERANCE HOME MISSION.—It is just thirty years since this agency was established, and from the first its course has been much blessed. Many homes have been made happy by the casting out of the drink devil, and the introduction of the worship of God as revealed in Christ the Saviour. Mr. F. A. Homer, J.P., founder and conductor of the Mission, throws heart and soul into its many departments of work. Among the women and children, Mrs. Homer superintends praiseworthy efforts, details of which may be learned from the report just published. The Temperance Hall is a centre of great usefulness, meetings of some sort being held every evening during the week. Those who know this work cannot but speak well of it, and many are glad to render it active support. Mr. Homer's address is Sedgley, Dudley.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The widow of Bishop Fraser, of Manchester, is preparing a life of her husband, specially designed for the working men and women of Lancashire.

Dr. R. J. Crosthwaite, who is spoken of as "a decided Evangelical," has been appointed Bishop Suffragan of Beverley as assistant to the Archbishop of York.

Rev. H. H. Montgomery, vicar of St. Mark's, Kennington, has been appointed to the bishopric of Tasmania, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Sandford, now Coadjutor-Bishop of Durham.

After the usual evening service at Christ Church, North Brixton, on Sunday week, the congregation were invited to remain to hear an address by Rev. Walter Horne, curate, on the work of the Church Missionary Society. A large number responded to the invitation. The address was of an interesting character, and pointed out the great importance of the work of the C.M.S., and the duty of the congregation to give it increased support. This interesting gathering, at which (says The Record) many were present who would probably have been absent from a meeting specially summoned for the purpose, is likely to evoke increased interest in missionary work. It was evidently appreciated by all who were present.

METHODIST.

It is expected that at the next Wesleyan Conference Rev. H. S. Lunn, M.D., will be appointed as an additional minister in connection with the London West Central Mission.

The Primitive Methodists are starting a new mission to the Barotsé country in Central Africa. A missionary party, consisting of Revs. H. Buckenham and A. Baldwin, and Mr. F. Ward, is to leave England for that region on April 24.

It has been resolved to make Southwark Wesleyan Chapel a centre of the Wesleyan Mission for South London. The Methodist Times rejoices in this fact, as now something will be done for the "thousands and thousands of men and women who are wailing and perishing on every side of Southwark Chapel."

Progress continues to be made in all departments of the work of the Birmingham Wesleyan Central Mission. Large numbers of men and women who have found Christ through attending the services are now themselves actively engaged in Christian work. The latter go out in pairs every week to visit the homes of the people, and by this means much good has been accomplished. The Sunday evening services are attended by crowds of people, for many of whom accommodation cannot be found.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. L. Brooks, of Deal, has accepted the pastorate of Stepney Meeting, E., which has been vacant since Rev. G. S. Reaney removed to Manchester.

Rev. W. A. Meaton, an accredited Congregational minister, has been appointed by the Christian Instruction Society to conduct special services as mission preacher within the London postal district.

During the twenty years of Rev. J. W. Atkinson's pastorate of Latimer Church, Bow, 1300 had been received into church fellowship. The various institutions of the church are in a healthy condition.

The auxiliary meetings in connection with the Liverpool Auxiliary of the London Missionary Society have been attended with remarkable success. The auxiliary contributes £500 more than the previous year.

The members of the Lincolnshire Congregational Union were invited to afternoon tea at the Deanery, Peterborough, during their recent session in that city, and were hospitably entertained by Mrs. Perowne.

Rev. J. M. Gibbon, of Highgate Congregational Church, is giving a special evening service on the first Sunday in each month, which draws a number of the working classes. The church membership is greatly increasing.

A series of one hour services "for the people" held at Gosport, after the ordinary services, were brought to a close on Sunday week. These special efforts to reach the masses were started some three years back by Rev. G. S. Smith, and have been continued every season since. Other ministers and lay gentlemen have co-operated, and much known spiritual good has been the esult.

Rev. Dr. John Brown, Bunyan's biographer, and minister of Bunyan Meeting, Bedford, the church of which the author of "The Pilgrim's Progress" was at one time pastor, lately celebrated his ministerial semi-jubilee. Bunyan died two hundred years ago, but Dr. Brown is only the sixth in succession to him as pastor of the church. Reviewing his ministerial work, Dr. Brown testified to his deepened conviction that the only remedy for man's spiritual evils is Christ crucified.

Rev. George Wilkinson was last week presented with a testimonial on his retiring from the pastorate of London-road Congregational Chapel, Chelmsford, after a connection extending over thirty-four years. Mr. Wilkinson's ministry in Chelmsford has been a signally successful and blessed one. Previous to his going to Chelmsford he was a missionary under the auspices of the London Missionary Society in the island of Jamaica, and also held a pastorate at Enfield for six years. Mr. Wilkinson is the author of "Pentecost," a book which has done good service in awaking Christians to the need of the Holy Spirit. (Morgan & Scott, 1s. 6d.)

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Isabella Young, one of the staff of mission workers, has been recorded a minister by York Monthly Meeting. She goes to Hereford for three weeks' work there.

Arthur Pease, late M.P. for Whitby, will lay the foundation-stone of a new mission-hall at Burley-road, Leeds, where the adult school and mission work, carried on by young Friends, has been greatly owned and blessed.

Cardiff meeting has been favoured with two exceedingly interesting visits of Friends. One by Priscilla A. Fry, of Bristol, who rendered efficient help to the temperance cause. Wm. Henry Wilson, of Broughton Grange, Cumberland, followed with a week's mission to children and adults. The children's services were very successful, and the others were both instructive and helpful.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Lord Radstock is delivering a series of addresses on Monday evenings during this month in the Wood Green Presbyterian Church, with very cheering results.

Rev. J. McNeill's week-night service at Regent-square is now held on Wednesday evenings at 7.30 p.m., and may, therefore, be properly described as "a little Sabbath in the middle of the week."

The Synod of the English Presbyterian Church meets in Regent-square Church, London, on April 28. The Lord Mayor will entertain the members of Synod to tea in the Mansion House on the evening of Thursday during the Synod week.

At the sixteenth annual meeting of Notting-hill Church, Dr. Dunbar Walker, one of the elders, in reading the report, said that under the powerful preaching of their esteemed minister (Dr. Sinclair Paterson) much good is being done, and the clear and definite exposition of the Scriptures continues to be a marked feature of his pulpit labour. The schools, the work of the Kensington Mission-hall, and the Lads' Institute, continue to show prosperity.

Rev. J. B. Meharry attended a social gathering of working men held on his mission premises, Andover-road, near Crouch-hill, to learn in conference their reasons for non-attendance at church. The men stated their views of the case at some length. The working men were not wanted in the churches owing to the "caste" feeling. Ministers did not understand or sympathise with them, and the average sermon was not worth listening to. Their objections were replied to by Mr. Meharry and others.

BAPTIST.

Under the auspices of the Baptist Union a four days mission to children and young people, was held in a number of London churches during last week.

During the fifteen years Rev. J. R. Wood has been pastor of the church, at Upper Holloway, 1902 have been added to its membership. Of that number a large percentage has been from the children of families connected with the church, some of whom have gone forth as missionaries to the heathen, and some are doing excellent work as pastors of churches at home. The present membership is 952.

At Poulner, near Ringwood, Hants, on Sunday week, Mr. Wm. Lloyd (one of Mr. Spurgeon's colporteurs), of Poole, baptized four candidates, three of whom were brought to the Lord at special services held by Mr. Lloyd in February last. Three others who were converted through attending the special services are expected to come forward and confess Christ in baptism next month. The converts are all young people.

The anniversary meeting of the settlement of Rev. E. G. Gange as pastor at Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, was held on April 2. The proceedings were of exceptional interest from the fact that Mr. Gange has completed twenty years' ministry. Mr. Gange, in his address, expressed his gratitude that he had been spared through twenty years, and that God's blessing had rested so richly upon the efforts put forth in that place. Above all, he was thankful for the souls which have been brought to the Lord Jesus Christ. The number of members when Mr. Gange came there was 405, now it is 909. There have been added to the church during his ministry 1743 members.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Presbyterian Orphan Society has just added 194 children to its already large family.

The ministers' Bible-class in the Crescent Church, Belfast, has had during the past session a membership of 339.

A Church Army officer has been labouring for some time with manifest tokens of success in the parish of Tullylish.

Over a hundred persons professed to decide for the Lord in the Gospel services recently held in the Methodist Church, Portadown.

In order to reach the masses, the Presbytery of Dromore has strongly recommended that ministers should diligently conduct open-air services during the summer.

During the year over sixty communicants joined the Mountpottinger Presbyterian congregation. The Bible-classes are very large, and there are over 700 children in the Sabbath-schools.

Some Sunday-schools take up a collection during Easter on behalf of the Methodist Orphan Society, and it is now proposed that this custom should become general throughout Irish Methodism.

Miss Meredith Brown, so well known in connection with work among factory girls in London, has been visiting Belfast, where she has been giving a description of her labours, and seeking to create public interest in the work.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The Methodists have formed a congregation in Buckie, N.B. They met in the Volunteer Hall last Sabbath to the number of about 100.

Rev. R. Lawson, of Maybole Established Church, who has lately returned from India, gave an interesting address on Indian missions to the Presbytery of Ayr at its last meeting. He believed that India would be converted by the heart, and not by the head. It would not be converted theologically.

The jubilee of Rev. David Russell, minister of Eglinton-street Congregational Church, Glasgow, was celebrated last week. Mr. Russell was presented with £550. The semi-jubilee of Dr. Marcus Dods's ministry at Renfield Free Church, Glasgow, was also celebrated last week. Dr. Dods, who has obtained six months' leave of absence, and is about to leave for a holiday in Italy, was presented with £1000.

Mr. Courthope Todd, of the Theatrical Mission, London, gave two lectures last week in Glasgow, descriptive of Christian work among theatrical people in the Metropolis. The Mission, he said, was of an international character, and he was led to think that the people of Scotland would show substantial interest in it for the reason that many young women from Scotland were induced to go on the stage.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. B. H. Kennedy, D.D., Regius professor of Greek at Cambridge University.—Mr. G. D. Thompson, a prominent Christian worker connected with the Baptist Church at Brandon, Suffolk.—Rev. George Grant, of Dunstable, formerly for some years pastor of the Congregational churches at Doddington, Crondal, Middleton, Cheney, and Hockliffe.—Rev. John Grainger, Primitive Methodist minister of Stafford.—Rev. William Limmex, of Swindon, for over fifty years a minister of the Wesleyan Connexion, at one time for fifteen years a missionary in the West Indies.—Mr. William Hampton, of Potterne, Devizes, a well-known supporter of Christian effort.—Mr. William Dickson, of Mauricewood, a leading Free Churchman and philanthropist.—Rev. Robert Scott, minister of Bankhill Presbyterian Church, Berwick-on-Tweed.—Rev. J. Kilsby Jones, of Llanwrtyd, Breconshire, a popular Welsh Congregational preacher.

BIRMINGHAM, through the generosity of Mr. Richard Cadbury, is shortly to possess what it has long needed—a Free Christian Institute, whither can be gathered together under one roof the many and varied Christian agencies and religious institutions.

BOYS' AND GIRLS' INDUSTRIAL HOMES.—A friend of these Homes (affiliated with the Reformatory and Refuge Union) has made an offer of £500 towards a fund for building a new Girls' Home and laundry, the erection of which would entail a total expenditure of about £3000, to buy a suitable freehold site and build the premises. The laundry work has hitherto been carried on at a great disadvantage, with unsuitable premises and inadequate appliances. The proposed site is adjacent to the Forest Hill Baths, and fronting the Dartmouth-road. Mr. T. G. Litchfield, Boys' Home, Shaftesbury House, Perry-rise, Forest-hill, S.E., is hon. sec.

SINGAPORE (says a correspondent) is by degrees waking up from its spiritual darkness. The Methodists have got a church, and a school of about 400 boys, chiefly Chinese. The Lord has blessed and is blessing their effort. They are beginning work among the Mohammedans. A medical mission has been established. There are about 100,000 Chinese in Singapore, but there is not a single man who can preach the Gospel to them in the Chinese language. There are several workers among the Tamils. Rev. W. F. Oldham has been appointed superintendent of missions in Malaysia, and he purposes to found missions in the thousands of islands scattered about in the Malay Archipelago. The Presbyterians are also doing good work.

THE VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—Professor Stokes, President of the Royal Society, took the chair as President of the Victoria Institute at its meeting on Monday week. He congratulated the Society on its new premises. A paper upon the "Creation tablets," by Professor Warring, was read by Mr. H. Cadman Jones, in the author's absence. The writer contended that it was manifestly absurd to state, as some had done, that the Bible record was founded upon these tablets. A discussion followed, and the statements made by many speakers may be summed up by saying that the Nineveh tablets are to be attributed to about the year 600 B.C., that recent research has shown that they are founded upon pre-existing records, of which a portion, dating probably from 2,300 B.C., has been discovered at Babylon, that the oldest records tend in the same direction as the Bible record, and that as in Egypt, so in Babylonia, the most ancient discoveries show a belief in a monotheistic religion.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, APRIL 21.—Leviticus V.

THE subject of this chapter is the trespass offering which bears the same relation to the sin offering, as the meat or meal offering of chap. ii. does to the burnt offering of chap. i. As the "meal offering" presented Christ's perfect manhood meeting all claims of human requirement, as a supplement to the burnt offering which showed his satisfaction of God's claim, so the trespass offering following the sin offering, wherein God's estimate and judgment of sin in its relation to Himself is set forth, presents another aspect of sin in its injury to man, and so the trespass offering carries with it as its leading idea the thought of compensation for injury inflicted.

The first five verses set forth different kinds of sins that came under the designation of trespass, such as a witness not divulging what he has seen or heard, when adjured to do so, &c., all of which more or less illustrate what Gesenius considers the root idea of the Hebrew word for trespass—viz., "Failure of duty, negligence." In addition to the sin itself against God which calls for a sin offering on the altar, the injury which such negligence inflicts upon one's neighbour must be met by a compensation or payment of the sum which the neighbour may have lost by the injury inflicted, with a fifth part added as a fine.

The great lesson which the trespass offering teaches us has been well put by the late Rev. Wm. Howels: "I cannot offend any of my fellow creatures without offending God. Every offence committed against man is primarily to be considered an offence against God. Our soliciting and conferring forgiveness of and upon each other is oft-times little more than collusion amongst thieves. God is forgotten altogether, and there is often a vast deal of hypocrisy and deceit, malice and envy inhabiting the bosom, while we are lying with our tongues to God and to each other. We sometimes hear of two individuals who cannot agree, at length we hear of their being reconciled. It requires but half an eye to see that they hate each other profoundly, notwithstanding their professed reconciliation. Do any of you know what this is? Let me advise you to lose sight of each other immediately, and consider yourselves but as dust and ashes, and whatever offences you may have committed against each other, consider them primarily as offences against God."

MONDAY, APRIL 22.—Leviticus VI.

The first seven verses continue the subject of the trespass offering, and properly belong to chap. v., as they do in the Hebrew Bible. The view of the trespass offering, just presented in the extract above, is confirmed by the words, "If a soul sin, and commit a trespass against the Lord, and lie unto his neighbour," &c., followed by various injuries to man. The restoration of the principal, with a fifth part added, might be compensation to the injured neighbour, but the trespass, viewed in its relation to God, requires that "he shall bring his trespass offering unto the Lord" (6).

Then follow (8—13) some laws bearing upon the burnt offering, with special reference to the perpetual fire to be kept upon the altar. "The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar; it shall never go out." As the fire originally came down from God (ix. 24), so was it to be kept up as a symbol of his never-ceasing satisfaction with that great offering and sacrifice of which these Levitical offerings were but types and shadows. The word used for burning upon the altar is a different word from that used for the fierce devouring flame that consumed the sin offering outside the camp (iv. 12); that symbolised the wrath of God against sin; while this symbolises God's satisfaction with the offering, on which his justice could, as it were, feed. See iii. 11: "It is the food of the offering made by fire unto the Lord."

The peculiar sanctity of the flesh of the sin offering is pointed out in the last verses of the chapter (24—30). This seems to have been intended to emphasise the fact that when the real Sin Offering should be offered, who "once at the end of the world should appear to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself," there should be sin on Him but no sin in Him. "He hath made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin." Hence the peculiar holiness of the flesh of the sin offering. The Lord Jesus never appears in such absolute perfection of holiness as on Calvary. He was always "the Holy One of God." On Calvary He appears as "the most Holy," for it was the climax of his obedience (Phil. ii. 8).

TUESDAY, APRIL 23.—Leviticus VII.

This chapter continues the instructions to the priests, as to the laws of the respective offerings. The trespass offering, as being an extension of the Sin Offering, shares with it the characteristic noticed above, of the flesh thereof being "most holy" (see 6 and 7). Our Lord seems to speak as the trespass offering when He says (in spirit, through David) "then I restored that which I took not away" (Ps. lxix. 4), immediately afterwards appropriating the language of the sin offering: "My sins are not hid from Thee," though He who thus speaks is personally "most holy"—"the holy of God." When imputed sin is contemplated, it is the more necessary to emphasise the absolute holiness and sinlessness of the sin-bearer, lest it should be thought that the sin spoken of is his in any other sense than imputatively.

At ver. 11 commences the subject of the law of the peace offerings, containing additional and supplemental directions to those given in chap. iii. They are classified as (1) "Thank offerings, (2) Vow offerings, and (3) Voluntary offerings." The recognition of "leavened bread" (13), along with and supplemental to "unleavened bread," in the thank offering, seems to point to the presence of sin in the worshipper, though not imputed by virtue of the sinlessness of Him whom the sacrifice with its unleavened bread prefigured.

The prohibition as to the flesh of the thank, or vow, or voluntary offerings remaining beyond the morrow of the day of the sacrifice, has been explained by some as denoting that the sacrificial food was not to "be polluted by any approach to putrefaction." Others think that it was to enforce a "liberal distribution of the food, particularly amongst the poor." Perhaps an allusion to the great Antitype is the most satisfactory explanation, viewed in the light of Ps. xvi. 10.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24.—Leviticus VIII.

This and the two following chapters (ix. and x.) contain an account of the inauguration of the Tabernacle service by the consecration of Aaron and his sons to the priest's office, and their commencement of sacrifice which was at once owned of God by the descent of the sacred fire (ix. 24). It is "the only historical portion of the Book of Leviticus, with the exception of the short narrative of the death of the blasphemer."—Sp. Com.

As the consecration of Aaron and his sons to the priesthood was a ceremony in which "all the congregation" were directly interested, as the priesthood was to represent them in all sacrificial action before God, so all were summoned to (or towards) the door of the Tabernacle. As the ceremony lasted for a week (33), there would be time for all in turn to see something of what was going on. It was of the utmost importance that the divinely appointed distinction between the priesthood and the people should be clearly seen. It is a common mistake to suppose that Israel had been set apart as a "royal priesthood" on account of Exod. xix. 5, 6. What was then offered was conditional upon their obeying God's voice indeed and keeping his covenant. But this they failed to do, and so the house Aaron was taken out of the nation, and set apart to discharge the priestly office on behalf of the people, as types and shadows of a better priesthood, which should be in due time brought in in the person and work of God's anointed One.

Aaron's descendants are the only sacrificial priests whom God has ever recognised on earth. Christians, in virtue of their union to Christ and their anointing in Him, are spiritually priests, but their sphere of service is heavenly, not earthly. The sacerdotalism which prevails in the professing Church is a grievous sin before God, and as presumptuous a rebellion against God's appointment as was the rebellion of Korah. Its coming doom is clearly pointed out (Jude 11) as similar to that of Korah.

Mark the identification of Aaron's sons with him in their consecration. "Ye are an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. ii. 5).

THURSDAY, APRIL 25.—Leviticus IX.

The consecration of Aaron and his sons lasted seven days. On the eighth day (symbolising the resurrection, when the priesthood of Christ first came into operation) Aaron offers sacrifice first for himself, then for the people; this, with his blessing the people which followed (23), and fire coming "out from before the Lord" (24) to consume the sacrifice, form the subject of this chapter.

"It was a striking acknowledgment of the true character of the Levitical priesthood that the very first official act of the anointed priest should be to offer a sacrifice for his own sinful nature. 'The law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated (marg. perfected) for evermore' (Heb. vii. 28)."—Sp. Com.

In the offerings for the people (15—21), we have the order in which any combination of different offerings should be presented to God: (1) Sin offering, (2) Burnt offering, (3) Meat offering, (4) Peace offering. The double blessing of verses 22 and 23 is worthy of note. First, that of Aaron alone, who, when he offered the offerings, "lifted up his hand toward the people and blessed them." Then he and Moses retire for a short time into the Tabernacle, and together come out and unitedly bless the people, and then, and not till then, does the glory of the Lord appear. So Christ as Priest, after offering his offering and sacrifice, pronounced his first blessing: "He lifted up his hands and blessed them" (Luke xxiv. 50). He then entered into the holy place not made with hands, whence we look for Him to come again as King and Priest united in one person, when He will pronounce the final blessing, and then shall the glory of the Lord appear.

For fire coming down from the Lord to consume sacrifice as indicating his acceptance of it, see Judg. vi. 21, xiii. 20; 1 Kings xviii. 38; 1 Chron. xxi. 26; 2 Chron. vii. 1. The fire which thus "came out from before the Lord" was maintained as a perpetual fire, as directed in vi. 13.

FRIDAY, APRIL 26.—Leviticus X.

The great majority of commentators, Jewish as well as Christian, regard the sin of Nadab and Abihu as consisting in not using the sacred fire which "came out from before the Lord" as that with which alone incense should be burned. It is probable from xvi. 12 that injunctions had been given that from the time that fire came forth from God, none other should be used for incense. Thus, we are taught the striking lesson that the very fire of God which had come forth to testify his acceptance of the sacrifice became a fire of judgment to those who slighted its value by offering other fire with their incense. So the Spirit of God which came down at Pentecost to testify to the acceptance of Christ's offering and sacrifice became a spirit of judgment to Ananias and Sapphira, who worshipped God with the strange fire of their own corrupt hearts, which Satan had filled with deceit, rather than with the fire of the Holy Spirit. Natural piety or ecclesiastical will-worship cannot be accepted of God. "They that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." How much of the religion of Christendom is but strange fire calling for judgment from Him who says, "I will be sanctified in them that come nigh Me, and before all the people I will be glorified."

The prohibition following, as to the priests drinking wine or strong drink when going into the Tabernacle, makes it probable that these two sons of Aaron were under the influence of strong drink when they committed this sin.

The other two sons of Aaron, probably under a sense of their unworthiness (19), as their father explains it, neglected to carry out the law of (vi. 26) eating the flesh of the sin offering in the holy place. They are excused on account of the circumstances which Aaron pleads in mitigation of their offence. As two of his sons had been cut off by Divine judgment, so two are spared by Divine forbearance.

SATURDAY, APRIL 27.—Leviticus XI.

As creation has fallen under the bondage of corruption owing to the sin of man, the animal kingdom, in many of its forms and creatures, bears the image of sin, so that man instinctively loathes and rejects certain animals as food, and especially those creeping things that come near in appearance to the serpent, on whom was pronounced the curse (Gen. iii. 14). Hence the Lord, to inculcate lessons of holiness upon his people, uses as outward signs (or object-lessons) abstinence from certain animals which typified moral and spiritual evil, and permission to use as food those which typified holiness and spiritual life. As a rule, all creeping things were forbidden (41) as typifying the grovelling instincts of sinful, fallen man, under the influence of the old serpent, the devil. Two things, when combined, marked animals that might be eaten (3), "Whatsoever parteth the hoof and cheweth the cud." These point to the two distinguishing characteristics of the people of God. Faith, which grasps the promises and mounts up on high, as animals with parted hoofs grasp the rocks and mount up by this means. See Hab. iii. 19; Ps. xviii. 33, "He maketh my feet like hind's feet, and setteth me upon my high places." The other characteristic is meditation on the Word of God, as the ruminating animal "chews the cud." See Josh. i. 8, and Ps. i. 2, "In his law doth he meditate day and night."

It is a remarkable thing that it is in connection with these prohibitions to eat creeping things, which typify the grovelling character of the natural mind, that God reveals his "holy commandment" (2 Pet. ii. 21), "Be ye holy; for I am holy" (44). The holiness inculcated is therefore heavenly. Where there is no faith to mount to high places, nor feeding on the Word and meditation therein, there cannot be the holiness which God commands, though there may be strict morality.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, April 28.

Destruction of Jerusalem Foretold.

Mark xiii. 1—13. Golden Text: Matt. xii. 6.

The prediction with which this lesson deals was uttered on Tuesday in the last week of our Lord's life. Parallel passages will be found in Matt. xxiv. 1—14, and Luke xxi. 5—19.

Verses 1—2.—The impending doom of Jerusalem, which had prompted the lamentation of Matt. xxiii. 37—39 had begun to impress the minds of the disciples. Possibly it was with a view to know more, or perhaps with the hope of hearing that the Temple would be spared, that one of them called attention to its stones and buildings. Without doubt it was a magnificent structure. The Rabbis used to say, "He that never saw the Temple of Herod never saw a fine building." According to Josephus, "the marble was so white that the building appeared at a distance like a mountain of snow, and the gilding as dazzling as the rays of the sun. Some of the stones were forty-five cubits long, five high, and six broad." But its magnificence could not save it from destruction. Most accurately were the words of Jesus fulfilled—there was "not left one stone upon another." Dr. Schaff describes this as "a most remarkable prophecy, uttered in a time of profound peace, when nobody dreamed of the possibility of the destruction of such a magnificent work of art and sanctuary of religion as the Temple at Jerusalem; a prophecy literally fulfilled forty years after its utterance—fulfilled by Jewish fanatics and Roman soldiers, in express violation of the orders of Titus, who wished to save it." This literal fulfilment of our Lord's prediction gives Him an additional claim to our faith (John xiv. 29). How solemnly this warns against the sin of rejecting Christ. Even Jerusalem, his own city, is not spared, nor even the Temple, which He had called "his Father's house." "How shall we escape?"

Verses 3, 4.—From the Mount of Olives the Saviour would be able to look upon the city and Temple. Probably, for a time, He sat alone, musing sadly upon the doom He had foretold. Then the three favoured Apostles, with Andrew, approached Him, and asked, "privately, When shall these things be?" &c. In Matt. xxiv. 3, the question is given more fully. Evidently the Apostles connected in their own minds the destruction of Jerusalem, the Second Advent, and the end of the age; and to all these their question referred. And to these also our Lord referred in his reply. Verses 5—13 deal with the features of this present dispensation, from New Testament times down to the end of the age; verses 14—23 refer to the destruction of Jerusalem; while the Second Advent and the end of the age are announced in verses 24—37. The present lesson deals only with the first division of our Lord's reply.

According to verses 5—13, the characteristics of this present dispensation are mainly four: (i.) The appearance of false Christs (5, 6); (ii.) distress of nations arising from wars and rumours of wars, earthquakes, famines, and troubles (7, 8); (iii.) cruel persecution of Christians (9—13); and (iv.) the world-wide dissemination of the Gospel (10). The fulfilment of these, no doubt, began in the Apostles' days, and before Jerusalem was destroyed. False Christs then appeared. Probably Theudas (Acts v. 36), and the Egyptian (Acts xxi. 38) were of the number. But this feature continues to mark the dispensation. And however insignificant we may deem them, each pretender has his own circle whom he deceives. Do not the blasphemies of "Brother Prince" mark him as a false Christ? All the adherents of the Agapemone movement are his victims.

How significant it is that, instead of the peace predicted in Isa. ii. 4, our Lord speaks only of wars and rumours of wars as marking the whole of this dispensation. It is not until this age gives place to the Millennial age that "nation shall not lift up a sword against nation." The very opposite is to be expected now.

The end cannot be until the Gospel is proclaimed among all nations (10). This is not a prediction that all nations shall be saved, but that all shall hear the witness, whether they receive it or not.

And while engaged in this work of preaching the Gospel, persecution is to be expected. In some form it is sure to the true Church of Christ (John xvi. 33; 2 Tim. iii. 12).

The counsel which we are to heed is contained in the same verses. (i.) "Take heed" (5).—Unwary professors have been, and are being, deceived. Never was there greater need to warn against those who would mislead. In (9) it is "Take heed to yourselves," in view of the persecution to be endured. The Christian needs to be trained "to endure hardness." Failure in times of persecution arises, not from the strength and severity of the trial, but from a defective spiritual life (Mark iv. 16—17). (ii.) "Be not troubled" (7).—You have no need for trouble, even in the midst of distresses (Ps. xlvi. 1—3). In (11) this counsel includes freedom from anxiety as to how to meet the persecutors. For this also provision is made. How fully this was verified in the experience of Peter and John (Acts iv.), and of Paul, before Felix and Agrippa (Acts xxiv. and xxvi.). Their persecutions only gave them fresh opportunities of bearing witness for Christ (9). (iii.) "Endure to the end" (13).—Only such are saved. If we have not grace to continue, we may doubt whether we have grace at all. "Patient continuance in well-doing," when it only leads into persecution, is not easy. The danger of becoming "wearied and faint in our mind" (Heb. xii. 3) is very great. But there is a remedy in "looking unto Jesus," and trusting Him to perfect what He has begun (Ps. cxxxviii. 8; Phil. i. 6).

Illustrations of the endurance of persecutions are easily gathered from New Testament itself, as suggested above. Among others we mention the following:—

Beza, the reformer, well replied to the King of Navarre: "Sire, it belongs truly to God's Church rather to suffer blows than to strike them, but let it be your pleasure to remember that the Church is an anvil, which hath worn out many a hammer."

A soldier who was a noted prize-fighter, and a terror to all who knew him, became a Christian. His fellow soldiers noticed the change, and began to ridicule him. One of them, in order to test the reality of his conversion, threw a basin of hot soup upon him. The rest looked on in silence, fearing the worst consequences. But the man opened his waistcoat, wiped his scalded breast, and calmly said: "This is what I must expect as a Christian. I must suffer persecution."

No more splendid illustration can be given of readiness to endure hardness than Luther going into Worms. "Though there were as many devils at Worms as there are tiles upon the roofs of the houses, I would enter it."

[Students of these Lessons may get much help from Mr. Henry Thorne's "Bible Readings on Mark." Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. Morgan & Scott.]

MARRIAGE.—At the English Presbyterian Church, Paddington, on Thursday last week, Mr. Alister Gilian Fraser, second son of the late Mr. Arthur Fraser, of Culross, Ross-shire, N.B., was married to the Honourable Edith Caroline Waldegrave, eldest daughter of Lord Radstock. The service was conducted by Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser, minister of the church. The bride was accompanied by her father, who gave her away. After the ceremony a reception was given at Lady Radstock's residence, 70, Portland-place, W., and a large company was present. The wedding gifts included one from the Queen of Sweden and Norway.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Liberia imports 70,000 gallons of intoxicants for every missionary it receives.

An attempt is to be made to bring clubs within the scope of the English Sunday Closing Bill.

A writer in The Baptist laments the gambling and drinking which he alleges to be increasingly associated with football.

The St. James's Gazette says smoking concerts would not be so popular were it not for the drinking associated with them

The Wesleyan Conference, Victoria, has pronounced in favour of non-intoxicating wine at the Communion. The president hoped for the early adoption of local option in the colony.

Miss Earl has had a seven weeks' very successful Gospel temperance mission at Shiney-row, Houghton-le-Spring. Nearly five hundred signed the pledge, and over one hundred have been soundly converted.

The magistrates of Aberdeen are said to treat with indifference all petitions against liquor licences. A public meeting of the ratepayers has been called with a view to bringing public opinion to bear on the licensing bench.

Dr. Wade, of Hoxton Hall, has held a successful Gospel temperance mission at Newmarket and neighbourhood. He has the rare gift of gaining and holding the attention of his audience. In Isleham, a village called by some "Black Isleham," in one evening sixty pledges were taken, including three deacons of a chapel.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

REV. DR. A. T. PIERSON has been delivering rousing missionary addresses in Toronto and Montreal.

LESSOUTO.—The French missionaries labouring in this part of South Africa continue to rejoice over last year's awakening. On December 30 no fewer than seventy-five converts were baptized at Morija in the presence of a company of 1500 people, over half of them pagans. The converts testified for Christ with much joy, and, as some of them had already suffered for their faith, the appeals they made to their neighbours and friends were strong and searching.

NOTRE DAME DE LOURDES was, last year, visited by 79,400 pilgrims, including two cardinals and seventy-four archbishops and bishops. To persons unable to make the pilgrimage, no fewer than 93,500 bottles of water from Lourdes were sent! One would naturally conclude, says L'Eglise Chrétienne, that a colporteur would find nothing to do in such a centre of superstition. That, however, is a mistake. The colporteur Bernata found attentive hearers, and many were quite disposed to purchase copies of the Holy Scriptures.

FRANCE.—The Gospel is being heard with joy in many parts of the Republic. In the Upper Alps there has been an awakening, especially among the young men. In Gard meetings conducted by Free Church and Methodist pastors have resulted in several conversions. In the department of Saône-et-Loire indifference has given place to a genuine interest in the things of God. The Christians of Tournon, Ardèche, have realised a gracious answer to their prayers for a revival. The Preparatory College has been quickened, and the entire church has had great reason for rejoicing.—Le Réveil.

RELIGIOUS WORSHIP IN SWITZERLAND.—In the French-speaking part of Switzerland there is a growing disposition to relieve religious worship somewhat of restraints, which, though of long standing, are not uniformly expedient. On special occasions several short addresses and exhortations are to-day being given in place of one long discourse as formerly. Maybe, the sermon has become unpopular with some, because it has ceased to be spiritually helpful. At any rate some of the religious papers have been discussing the sermon question. The Témoignage maintains that before all things sermons should be expositions of Scripture truth, rather than, as is too often the case, carefully prepared studies, more like lectures than anything else. Le Journal Religieux maintains that things new and old from Holy Writ will not weary the congregations as disquisitions upon abstract points of doctrine and morality unquestionably do.

PASTOR JACOB, OF OROOMIAH.—A sad calamity has befallen our good friend and his devoted wife, Moressa. A swindler, named Norris, came to Oroomiah some time since, and after ingratiating himself with the missionaries, and pretending a deep interest in Christian work, asked Pastor Jacob if he could get a cheque for £200 cashed for him, to enable him to return to England. The poor, simple man, with his unbounded faith in everything English, and having no experience of English swindling, at once, and unsuspectingly, induced a Mohammedan merchant to cash the draft. It has been returned dishonoured, and it seems that, unless relief should appear, of which there is no likelihood, the pastor is ruined, as his whole goods will be sold, and even then the debt will not be discharged. Is there no rich patriotic English Christian who, having enough and to spare, is willing to come foward and rescue the name of "English Christian" from a blot so injurious in the eyes of these Mohammedans, among whom the pastor labours so zealously?—The Star in the East.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION, WITH COMPLICATIONS OF OTHER DISEASE.

CASE of MISS A. E. BARNES.

This patient, then at Brede, Sussex, applied to me first about three years ago. (She had been recommended to me by REV. S. S. TAYLOR, of St. Leonards, whose daughter had received much benefit.) Consumption had been in the family. Six years before this she had rheumatic fever; had also suffered from chronic indigestion, which brought her to a weak, low state. Then cough came on, with bad expectoration, palpitations, unhealthy secretions, swelling of the legs, hectic fever, with loss of flesh, and gradually increasing weakness. Her doctor then pronounced her case Consumption, with complication of other disease, which was the sequence of the rheumatic fever.

In one month from commencing my treatment there was manifest improvement, after which she varied much, but on the whole progressed. Her recovery was slow. (It will always be so where there is any complication of disease, and this is sometimes obscure and difficult to diagnose.)

The last letter I received from her is dated Jan. 5th of this year. With grateful heart she writes me from 5, Highland Gardens, St. Leonards-on-Sea (her home is Windmill Cottage, Brede). She says:—"I have to thank you for your skill in treating me, and by the blessing of God saving my life. I believe if I had not heard of you I should have been gone from this world long ago. Everyone thought I should not last the summer through. I have now been twelve months without medicine. Use my case as you please.—Yours gratefully, ANNIE E. BARNES.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

One led to another, and yesterday, boys were coming all day to sign! I had twenty-five recruits yesterday alone, and a whole squad more are coming this evening! and we are going in for getting EVERY boy in the whole village!—and now, 'Please, miss, mayn't the girls sign?' So I have got to open a girls' branch as well! So the work grows."

CONTRIBUTIONS to the "SPECIAL DISASTER FUND" administered by THE SHIPWRECKED FISHERMEN and MARINERS' ROYAL BENEVOLENT SOCIETY as the National Maritime Relief Organisation of the Empire, incorporated by Act of Parliament, are most Urgently Appealed for by the Committee of Management.

The present PUBLIC APPEAL is made on behalf of the many bereaved families (representing, in all, nearly 200 Widows and Orphans, besides other dependents) left in sad destitution through the disastrous loss in the North Sea, on February 9, of 14 Fishing Vessels, with all their Crews, belonging to Grimsby, Yarmouth, and Hull; also for the numerous distressed Dependents of the 35 Mariners gone down in the Steamship Glencoe, on February 4; of the 47 Mariners gone down in the Steamship Duke of Buccleuch, on March 7; and of the 12 Fishermen (their families representing 32 Widows and Orphans) who perished in two Port of Ness Boats, on March 19; with, in addition, all those left helpless through other equally woeful recent losses, to be inevitably followed by yet further casualty after casualty.

At the Society's hands, the immediate necessities have, in every case of ascertained want, been already met on the spot; but, to cope with the exceptional requirements of the dire distress which must long prevail at the above-named Ports, and elsewhere, as the result of these and similar disasters, now or in the future, it is essential that exceptional aid should be forthcoming without delay.

In view of such pressing need, the Committee of Management EARNESTLY ASK for prompt and generous DONATIONS to the "Special Disaster Fund," all sums contributed to which are handed over or directly disbursed, intact, for the full benefit of the sufferers.

The Committee of Management meet weekly, as a Central Executive, in responsible direction of a ready-organised network of over 1,000 local Honorary Agencies.

All Contributions to the "Special Disaster Fund" will be individually acknowledged, and Lists thereof published periodically in The Times, &c.; with a separate Balance Sheet of the Fund, audited by the Society's Public Auditors, under authority of the Committee of Management, issued and circulated annually.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. H. E. Stone, Baptist minister, Nottingham.

With the advent of the fishing season, we shall soon see the disgraceful sight of fish suited for human consumption being used as manure in some parts of these islands, while in other places people are starving. Common sense would seem to point in the direction of some wholesome regulation of railway tariffs, so as to allow of the conveyance of articles of food from places where there is a surplus to those where people are in need. The question is a somewhat wide one, but in a Christian land, at any rate, it ought not to be put aside as beyond solution.

We are glad to observe that in the Court of Queen's Bench, a few days ago, the decision of some Norfolk justices that the dishorning of cattle is not cruelty, was reversed by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Hawkins. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals have for some time been endeavouring to secure convictions in gross cases of the kind, and every person who has seen the results of the operation upon the unfortunate cattle subjected to it, and the brutality with which, in too many cases, it is carried out, will rejoice over a verdict which will go far to put an end to a disgustingly cruel practice.

It is interesting to note how Christian workers seem periodically to run in grooves. A certain locality of a large city, such, for instance, as the East-end of London, becomes the centre of public attention, and for a while all the energies of a large number of workers, Christian and philanthropic, are brought to bear upon it, to the comparative neglect of other districts none the less in need of help. The tendency to imitation reigns even in these matters. It is to be regretted that such is the case to so great an extent, for the "beginning first at Jerusalem" is capable of wide application, and certainly bears upon philanthropic as well as evangelistic labours. The Christian who is anxious to work for the Master, and in the Master's footsteps, has only to go to the nearest court, to find a fitting sphere and fitting objects for his sympathy; and it is more than probable that in that which lies nearest to him he will be blessed with the greatest measure of success.

In illustration of the tendency we mention, The Hospital, some weeks ago, called attention to the fact that there is now a rush of unsuitable candidates into the nursing field, and that "equally good work done on other lines is being partially forgotten in fashionable circles." Lighter but not less important work, such as reading and visiting in hospitals, is being left, because those who wish to work fail to recognise that there can be nothing small or unimportant in the service of God; and that it is not the greatness or difficulty of the task so much as the spirit in which it is undertaken and discharged, that is precious in the sight of God.

A case of considerable importance, affecting the character of George Ashby, a Christian man, connected with Kilburn Hall, was decided at the Old Bailey on Monday, April 15. Mr. Ashby had been arrested six weeks previously on a charge of setting fire to his house and shop with intent to defraud, and after being twice remanded was committed for trial. At the close of the prosecution, Mr. Justice Grantham stopped the case. After pointing out that the charge of attempting to defraud had completely broken down, and that there was "not a tittle of evidence to connect the prisoner with the fires," he directed the jury to return a verdict of Not Guilty. The learned judge subsequently remarked that the police should exercise very great care in bringing such charges, as it might mean ruin to a man without any hope of redress. It was right that in clear cases they should prosecute, but they ought not to do so unless the evidence was very strong.

Thus ended six weeks of torturing suspense to an innocent man and his family, who have for some fifteen years borne a high character in the neighbourhood in which they live. We are glad to know that Mr. Ashby has the hearty and practical sympathy of the members of the church with which he is connected, and also of his neighbours, and we trust that there may be an unstinted expression of this sympathy, which will serve largely to compensate him for the bitterness of the past.

Mr. James Fanstone, of Pernambuco Brazil, writes with respect to self-supporting missionaries:—

> Great Britain, through her vast commercial and colonial relations, sends men to all parts of the habitable globe. These men are naturally enterprising and energetic, or they would not offer themselves for foreign service. Is it not possible to transform this splendid army of young Englishmen into effective representatives of Christ? What is necessary? That for every foreign post a Christian man should be forthcoming; a man with every qualification necessary, and equal to any that may be furnished from the world's ranks. An association might be formed of Christian merchants and others, who would by their influence and known integrity be able to select men of guaranteed ability and general suitableness.

Scholarship is of first importance in its own sphere. There could neither have been a Revised Text nor a Revised Version without scholarship. But in the interpretation and exposition of Scripture, scholarship does not hold the first place. Scholarship belongs to the soul, the mind, the intellect; something deeper is needed for the interpretation of the Word of God. This is spiritual, and only the spiritual man can discern the things of the Spirit. When Robert Hall wanted light upon some passage which he did not understand, he used to go to a poor man, not a scholar, but whom he knew to be taught of God. False and faulty views of doctrine have generally come not from illiterate Christians, but from scholars who exercised their own minds not under the guidance of God's Spirit.

Apropos of the article in our issue of the 12th inst., in condemnation of the war spirit prevalent in Europe, a correspondent protests against the training of schoolboys in the art of war. He refers to a recent display at Aldershot "in the presence of one of our Generals, accompanied by some black heathen warriors from South Africa." He fears that "in the next generation our young men will become accustomed to the yoke which is to-day the most galling one the nations of Europe have to submit to." But, he adds:—

> Christian people quietly fold their arms, and affect to regard war as an inevitable institution. Something ought to be done to prevent this wholesale demoralisation of our young men and lads.

We agree with our correspondent, and professed followers of the Prince of Peace could do much by upholding the hands of the Societies which exist for this very object.

A correspondent sends the following thought, which we commend to the consideration of our readers:—

> I have been intensely interested in the articles in THE CHRISTIAN by "A Missionary." Is there not a danger, lest we lay down one standard of right for the missionaries abroad, and a different one for ourselves at home. Perhaps we may be agreeing mentally with all we have read in these letters about the self-abnegation, the zeal, the heroism requisite amongst those who go to preach in "the dark places of the earth," yet have not sufficiently brought home to our own consciences the remembrance that Christ called all his disciples to take up the daily cross, and follow Him. I believe there is to each of us the danger of forgetting that we ought not to expect more of the missionaries in the path of self-denial than we are willing to practice ourselves.

The gambling mania is troubling America. The Christian Union says:—

> It creeps into the home, the church, the college, the workshop, the store, the bank, the farmhouse, and even into the backwoods hamlet, leaving behind a train of desolating evils which are often drowned in the winecup or by suicide. It is found in the betting which has become inseparable from every form of athletic sport; in the increasing number of country dupes lured to the hells of large cities, and in the lotteries which are spreading in cities and villages.

Christian people in the United States are becoming alarmed, and are intreating that no sanction may be given to the plague in church bazaars and households. The Church in union with the Spirit has arrested many devastations: it must gird itself now against this most menacing one.

A very useful reflection is made in a recently published volume of Canon Paget's Sermons. The word "grace" is usually taken to mean God's unmerited kindness. That kindness is, however, according to the Scriptures, not merely favour, but a movement of the Holy Spirit within the soul. It corresponds to the force whereby God works in nature; it imparts to the will and affections a new capacity of obedience and love; it illuminates intellect, defeats our selfishness, assuages our pride, and renovates man. In this sense God is said to be able to make all grace abound to us, that we may abound in every good work. When we ask for grace, let our prayer embrace its twofold sense—favour and power.

The Portraiture of Jesus.

We have no reliable picture or engraving of the Lord Jesus Christ as He actually did appear upon the earth. Traditional outlines of his person greatly vary; and, what is most impressive, the Holy Ghost has suffered no hint on the subject to drop from any of the Evangelists. We have the synoptic Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, giving us a general or bird's-eye view of Christ's career; and, by way of complementary treatment, the intensely inward and reflective Gospel of John; but in neither case can we gather the least information as to what manner of man the Lord Jesus was in personal aspect or deportment. There must be a reason for this utter silence. The true Gospels are mute on everything affecting the portraiture or mien of Jesus; it is only when the pen of fiction would speak of Him, or the voice of many-tongued tradition would break the silence, that any line of portraiture is attempted. Doubtless the intention is that no man may seek to know Christ after the flesh. It is not the portrait of the sensible, but the portrait of the supersensible, that, in this case, should concern us. Even though we had known Christ after the flesh, yet in consideration of the higher knowledge of Him to which we are called, it would be well for us did we feel with Paul, "Yet now henceforth know we Him," i.e., in that way, "no more."

The conclusion, therefore, is that the portraiture of Jesus is to be spiritually discerned. His portrait concerns not the senses, but the spirit. When we see Him as He is we shall be in the Spirit; and, as with John in the Isle of Patmos, his glory shall be lit up to us in terms of spiritual intelligibility. The day is on the wing when the sensible shall no longer be a veil to conceal, but a mirror to reveal, the character and properties of the soul itself. And of that day John had the firstfruits when, being in the Spirit on the Lord's Day, the vision of the glorified Saviour burst upon his view.

The first thing to note is that Christ, spiritually contemplated, is in the midst of his Church. "In the midst of the seven lamp-stands" John sees "one like unto the Son of Man." Actually Christ is in heaven, at the right hand of power; but, spiritually discerned, He is ever "where two or three are met together in his name." There is no parting Christ from his own. The senses may and do proclaim separation, but the spiritual vision refuses to believe it, and that for the best of all reasons, the sense of the contrary. If in the Spirit, Christ is to you near, so near that He cannot nearer be.

Look now at the robe, "clothed with a garment down to the foot." As the victim, the sacrifice, Christ had no covering; as Redeemer He is both King and Priest. This robe indicates the amplitude of Christ's headship. Sin had stripped man of covering, and left him without dress before God. In their sense of lack our first parents made for themselves aprons of fig leaves, but the Lord God made for them coats of skins, and clothed them. The vesture of Jesus in this vision shows us the blessed standing of the Son of Man as it concerns dress, and the blessed standing also of all who stand in Him. Those who stand in Him, stand in Him complete. They shall not be found naked. To every one of them it shall be given to be arrayed in white linen, pure and clean.

Christ's girdle tells us, both by its position and quality, that while He is ever chief in authority, He is ever uttermost in service. It is a Divine thing to serve. If it is by God kings reign, it is that in the fear of God they may serve. The eminence of Jesus only brings out into stronger relief the eminency of his service. Hence He is said to be "girt about the paps with a golden girdle." The servant who serves as unto a lord or master is girt upon the loins; but here we see majesty of movement, "the service of superior standing, resources, and attainments." Moreover, the fact that the girdle is all of gold, and not merely interwoven with it as in the case of the high priests under the law, bespeaks the greater value of his ministry of intercession within the veil in the heavenly places. No service is comparable with his who ministers in the holiest of all, and "is able to save unto the uttermost all who come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them."

We now come to characteristics distinctly personal: "His head and hairs were white like wool, as white as snow." Had not John been in the Spirit, such a view would have been the last in the world to have suggested to him the similitude of the Son of Man. In the days of his flesh our Lord could not have had a single grey hair. Grey hair is indicative of decay, and He was the green tree. Even when his body was inanimate it could see no corruption. The Christ of God was crushed to death; it was the sin laid on Him that slew Him; there was no decay internal, and, therefore, no white hair intermingled with his flowing locks. But here there is nothing else in the vision. It is not, therefore, nature's view, but the view in the Spirit, and as such it demands a corresponding interpretation. Christ's hair, white as the driven snow, bespeaks his supernatural wisdom, his Divine antiquity. We do not date the Christ by the chronology of Bethlehem. If in the Spirit our line of vision is, then we see Him as containing the fulness of the Godhead bodily; as One in whom are hid the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; as that dateless One who was before all things, and by whom all things consist. Eternity, and that perfect, absolute wisdom which is the prescriptive right of the Eternal alone, are to be understood by his head and hairs being white as wool, as white as snow. The vision of the Son of Man demands such head and hairs as these, for there is no element of immaturity in Him. Even the wise among men, whose hoary heads are found "in the way of righteousness," are but as foolish children in his presence. How absolutely, then, is it demanded that the Son of Man be seen as here depicted—"His head and hairs white like wool, as white as snow." While truly man, He is the Ancient of Days, and as such the law of wisdom is ever on his lips. His hair is white, for his wisdom is absolute. He can gather nothing from experience, and since no fresh knowledge can accrue to Him, his hair is so white that it cannot whiter be.

We now come to the royal feature, to wit, the eyes. "And his eyes were as a flame of fire." How spiritually true is this of Jesus! Our eyes, while they are made for the light, are dependent upon it for all their seeing power. The eyes of men are not gifted with the faculty of self-illumination. They are not themselves lamps. They do not evolve from their own nature their own means of vision. How different with the Son of Man! "His eyes are as a flame of fire." He is not dependent on light from without to see; He sees in virtue of the light-giving power of the eyes themselves. Therefore there is no darkness in respect of Jesus. And is not this the faith of the Church? Is it not an axiom with every Spirit-taught soul? Assuredly. When we think of Him, we think of Him as all-seeing. We cannot imagine darkness standing in his presence. However our gaze into providence, or into nature, or into our own hearts, may serve but to punctuate the darkness, only that and nothing more, we feel confidence that He sees and knows and understands; that the darkness and the light are both alike to Him; that his oversight of all, his understanding of all, is complete. In this consideration there is both solemnity and consolation. He knows who are his. He can discriminate with precision between the sheep and the goats. And He can also unravel the strange intertexture of warp and woof in the affections, He knows all the ebb and flow of grace in the soul; whether we be settling down upon our lees or going on unto perfection. And these eyes of his denote, not only knowledge, but power. What capacity for rebuke is lodged in the eyes of the Son of Man! It will not be in the power of any soul to reply when He whose eyes are as a flame of fire shall bring up the charge. He will but have to accompany the word with the look in order to seal the lips of the accused for ever. These eyes denote also convicting power. When the Lord looked on Peter, he went out and wept bitterly. It is in his light we see light. When his eyes are turned upon us, then a deeper repentance is not only possible, but inevitable. These eyes are also the Church's hope, the believer's glory. He can see through the thick darkness, though the Church may not. He can discern the means of escape, though as yet the valley of tribulation discovers no outlet. He knows how to interweave the dark lines of trial so that the pattern work out the unmingled glory of the promise: "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." And thus faith revels in the portraiture of his eyes. If my sight is dim, and can but feebly cope with the darkness, yet, Lord, Thou seest, and by faith in Thee I live, till night's shadows pass away, and that day dawn which shall be all brightness, since Thou shalt be the light of it for ever.

ROMANISTS IN CEYLON.

A communication from Mr. Wallace J. Gladwin, published in The Protestant Observer, states that at the present time thousands of Roman Catholics in South India and Ceylon are seceding to the Syrian Church. It seems that for four centuries the Portuguese Catholics of those parts of the East have acknowledged the authority of the Bishops of Portugal, and many of them have resisted recent efforts by Italian and French Jesuits to bring them directly under the power of the Pope.

Dr. Lisboa Pinto, a Goanese gentleman who was sent from India to Portugal to plead with the Church and Government there, in an interview with Mr. Gladwin lately, said that the oppression and evil conduct of the French and Italian priests first awakened the people. The dogma of Papal infallibility was then disbelieved, for it was clear to them that Popes must be dangerously fallible to support such a set of priests. The "hypostatic union" of Christ's Divine and human natures, on which assumption the Virgin Mary is called "the Mother of God," and made the object of adoration, was also rejected. The extreme idolatry of the Virgin will probably be discredited among the people.

For the Young.

ABOUT THREE BOYS.

Dear Young Friends,—

t has been on my mind to write and tell you bout three boys who have interested me very nuch. One of them is an Arab, one a European, nd the other a Jew. In this letter I will call hem Ali, Pierre, and Levi.

Ali is a little Arab, who found out some nonths ago that Christ died to save him; since is baptism he has served his new Master aithfully, speaking of Jesus to all who would isten. One man to whom he spoke struck im in the face. At another time he was eaten by several men for refusing to enter one f their sacred places and saying it was no lace for a Christian.

Pierre, the European boy, was a playmate of li's, and was soon brought by him to the ightly Arabic meetings, which were held for oung converts and inquirers, where he also earned to know and love the Saviour. A few ights ago, as we were going to the evening ervice, we overtook Pierre, who had with him he little Jewish boy Levi. Pierre said to my ather, "This boy has for a long time wanted o come and learn about the Lord Jesus." Of ourse we welcomed him, only too glad to ind one of God's ancient people seeking the Messiah.

One day before that, Levi was telling Pierre ow unhappy he was. His mother does not eem to care much for him, and though his elations are rich, that does not bring him appiness. So Pierre told him if he came and istened to what the missionary would tell him bout our Lord Jesus, and believed it, then he would become happy. You see, Pierre had no doubt about it, because he had heard and believed himself.

It was last Wednesday that Levi began to come, and this is only Monday. He has been wo or three times every day since, eagerly drinking in all he could hear about the Messiah. We have plenty of little meetings—about sixteen a week in Arabic, and seven in English, besides our family prayers. On Saturday Levi wished to be baptized. The missionary told him it would doubtless bring severe persecution upon him, and that he must count the cost. He is only thirteen years old, and when hard pressed we feared he might be tempted to deny Christ. But Levi insisted, saying that if his relations did nothing but beat him for three years he would remain true to Christ. A day or two ago when taunted by some Jews with being a Christian, he bravely answered, "Yes, I am a follower of the Messiah."

How you would have enjoyed going with us early yesterday to see Levi baptized! It was not only the Lord's Day, but also a Jewish feast —the feast of Purim. In going we divided into twos and threes, and passed through the town by different streets, as all our movements are watched by the enemies of the Gospel. We met again after leaving the city gate, and wended our way along the sea coast until we came to a sort of cave, within a stone's throw of the road, but not easy to find; once in we were quite safe from disturbance. As we sat there enjoying all the beauties that our heavenly Father had made, and hidden from all eyes but his, I thought, How safe we are, because in the "Cleft Rock"—Christ! After a little reading and prayer Levi was baptized in a clear, deep pool there by the arched entrance. The dear lad was so happy to have thus obeyed the Lord.

It was nice to have these boys with us last evening at the Lord's Supper. It makes one glad, also, to hear them pray in our little gatherings; for they, with each of the many converts, pray audibly in the meetings from the hour of their conversion. These three lads, and some others, are planning to have a regular boys' prayer-meeting. They wish to try to bring in their little friends. We trust they will all three become missionaries.

Levi had for a long time followed us about, too bashful to speak, but longing to be told how he could be saved. We had noticed him, but did not think he was wanting to speak to us. But, since he mentions it, one of us who remembers giving him a tract often used to see him close to her, as though he had something to say. Just so your friends may be waiting for you, who love the Saviour, to help them to find Him too. Already Levi has brought a man to hear about Christ, who now is rejoicing in the knowledge of sins forgiven. Levi is not the first one whom Pierre has brought to hear the word of life, and Ali is often coming with others. A Missionary's Daughter.

P.S.—It is some days since I wrote the above, and I add this to tell you that the Mohammedan whom Levi brought is to be baptized to-day.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., April 28, Jona iv. 1—11; Mon., April 29, Micah iv. 1—3; Tues., April 30, Micah vi. 1—8; Wed., May 1, 1 Chron. x. 1—14; Thurs., May 2, 1 Chron. xi. 1—19; Fri., May 3, 1 Chron. xiii. 1—14; Sat., May 4, 1 Chron. xiv. 8—17.

MR. H. HUTCHINSON, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has concluded a week's mission at Wickhambrook, Suffolk. It has been a time of much blessing and revival amongst God's people, and many have been led to accept Christ as their Saviour. Although the weather was cold, and very wet, the attendance was larger every evening, and the two concluding services on Sunday last were crowded, and the power of the Lord was indeed present to heal.

MISSION AT ROMFORD.—Mr. T. Lewes Sayer has concluded a most happy and successful series of meetings for young people at Romford. The mission was commenced by a short series of services in the Wesleyan Chapel, at the neighbouring hamlet of Beacontree Heath, where great interest was manifested. Children came to the services at Romford considerable distances from the outlying hamlets and villages, and a blessed work was done. Mr. Sayer was rejoiced to meet with many who had given their hearts to the Saviour during his services in this place last year, and who are now standing firm.

ALL NIGHT IN THE STREETS OF LONDON.—In the sixteenth annual report of the Gospel All-Night Mission, Mr. James Pye rejoices in much encouragement having attended his labours during the past year. The work is not confined to the fallen and destitute; a large number of those who are compelled to do duty at night in the streets of London have been very glad to avail themselves of the opportunities the missionary has put in their way of attending meetings, and so have, from time to time, come within hearing of the Gospel message. Mr. Pye's address is 22, Ifield-road, Fulham-road, S.W.

TELUGU MISSIONS.—At a recent Conference of Missionaries among the Telegus in South India, it was decided to request the Baptists of Canada to send out fifty-two more missionaries immediately, that the evangelisation of these Telugus, with the blessing of God, may be accomplished in the present generation. There are about 70,000 Baptists in Canada, and there are 3,000,000 Telugus to evangelise, and if 60 men were there, each would have 50,000 as his field. If with him were associated say, fifty native helpers, besides lady missionaries and Bible-women, the work in this generation is thought possible.—Canadian Missionary Link.

THE UNSPOKEN PRAYER.

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Oh to do nothing, nothing!
  Only to live at my ease;
And swing in a silken hammock
  While fanned by a gentle breeze.
Sweet is a life of pleasure,
  Sipping the honey of flowers;
Like a butterfly in the sunshine
  Enjoying the golden hours.

Oh to do nothing, nothing!
  Others who will, may work;
But I much prefer to be quiet,
  Life's burdens and cares to shirk.
Lilies and sparrows do nothing
  Yet all their wants are supplied;
Much of our labour is wasted
  And gets not a "Thank you," beside.

Oh to do nothing, nothing!
  Ministers—what is their trade,
But doing the work of the Master?
  And for it they're pretty well paid.
Of course some people are fitted,
  Which I don't pretend to be;
They like to make speeches in meeting,
  Which is out of the question for me.

Oh to do nothing, nothing!
  That is the way to be blest;
There can be no labour in heaven,
  For that is a perfect rest.
Rather do nothing, nothing,
  Than always go bustling about,
Trying if I can't do something,
  And never quite making it out.

THE CITY HARVEST FIELD.

Those who are led to take a special interest in the thousands of young women employed in the City will be glad to have some cheering news from one who has had the privilege of labouring amongst them for over thirteen years. The good seed of the Gospel has been patiently sown week after week in hundreds of workrooms, where access is kindly given.

This year it has pleased God to give us "the joy of harvest." We are thankful to testify of the great blessing that has attended the four missions by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith in the north of London. It has been the greatest joy to make my home a rallying-point, where everyone was welcomed from the City who could come and share in the blessing. Never before have we seen so many young women saved night after night. It has, indeed, been a glorious time of reaping. Souls seemed ready to step into the kingdom.

The time is drawing near when we should be glad to send sick and weary ones into the country. We have some who are ill. Many friends kindly helped us last year. The practical and prayerful sympathy of our friends and helpers is always most encouraging.

MISS PAPILLON'S SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE and Mission-hall, Chapel-street, Sandgate (for Shorncliffe Camp), continues to be the centre of untiring Christian service. The thirtieth annual report gives an account of missions attended by much blessing. It is hoped that, with the assistance of friends, the managers will be enabled this year to erect the new hall. About 30,000 Scriptures, books, and tracts were distributed during last year, and, as prayer and faith attended the dissemination, good results are assured. The correspondence has been on a larger scale than ever before, grateful and encouraging letters being still received from men who were brought under the influence of the Gospel years ago at the Institute. The report closes with an earnest appeal to friends of the work to pray for its continued usefulness. The secretary is Mr. Ferdinand P. Moore, 7, Shellons-street, Folkestone.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

IV.—Home Machinery and Funds.

I HAVE in the two previous articles examined "A Missionary's" exposition of Scripture; and I have endeavoured to show that, so far as the Word of God is concerned, there is no good reason for condemning our missionary societies. Having regard to the fragmentary character of the records, and making due allowance for the differences of age and country, it is a safe conclusion that the methods advocated by "A Missionary" have no more Scripture authority than those of the societies. In so far as he has drawn from the New Testament the true principles of missionary work, those principles are already acknowledged and acted upon by the societies, and, subject to the infirmities and shortcomings of individual men, are carried out by their missionaries. In so far as he advocates changes in the external features of missionary life, those changes, whether desirable or not in themselves (on which point I shall dwell in a future paper), are at all events not required by any fair interpretation of the scanty notices in the Gospels, Acts, and Epistles, but rather are opposed to them.

I now turn from the Scripture argument to the actual facts of modern missions. And I begin at home, with the machinery at work for the support of our missionary societies.

"A Missionary" indulges in a vast amount of very invidious language regarding this home organisation, the purpose of which is evidently to brand it as "of the earth, earthy," and to advocate a more excellent way. But what that more excellent way is he does not explain. One of these invidious sentences is as follows (chap. iii.):—"She [the Church] has but to give, and all the shafting, pulleys, and belts revolve, that give motion to her multiform machinery of home effort, with its secretaryships, boards, committees, agents, delegations, workers, theological and medical students, and nurses in hospital training; its outfits and passages, and, abroad, its schools, colleges, seminaries, dispensaries, hospitals, churches, services, and itinerant work. But without the money all must stop. Therefore, naturally, much is said of money...It was not so in Apostolic times." Of Apostolic times I have already said enough; but I want to ask, of the nineteen forms of home and foreign effort enumerated in the foregoing sentence, which is a wrong one? I leave to a future paper the consideration of the various branches of work in the foreign field; but, in the home department, I repeat, Which are the items to be condemned? Is it wrong to have a secretary, or to pay one, or to be one? Is it wrong for devoted Christian men to meet together, call themselves a committee, and plan and administer a mission to Africa or China? What is meant by "agents, delegations, workers," I do not know; but, so far as I know any persons or officers corresponding to these terms, I see nothing wicked about them. Is a "theological student" a kind of dangerous person on no account to be sent out as a missionary? Is accurate knowledge of the Word of God, and of the works of holy men in all ages, a thing to be contemned? "Outfits and passages" I spoke of before; but I ask, How is a missionary to get to China? Suppose he does start from Ostend or Calais, and walk there, across Europe and Asia, without shoes or change of raiment, how is he first to get to Calais or Ostend? In all sober seriousness, a large part of "A Missionary's" argument throughout is made up of high-sounding sentences, like the above, which are designed to prejudice the reader against missionary societies, but which, when you analyse them, either mean nothing at all, or mean something which calm judgment pronounces utterly fallacious.

But I repeat that the more excellent way advocated by "A Missionary" is not easy to trace. Apparently he objects to all funds raised at home for the support of missionaries. His arguments from Scripture are directed to that conclusion; and it is obvious that if missionaries are not to have "outfits and passages" provided, and not to carry purse, wallet, or change of clothes, there will be nothing for the contributions of Christians to be spent upon. At the same time, he congratulates our friends of the China Inland Mission upon getting all the funds they require in answer to prayer (in which congratulations I join with all my heart); so that it looks as if Mr. Broomhall might, without offence, pay "passages" to China, and remit money to Shanghai for the maintenance of his devoted brethren and sisters, whereas, if one of the old societies does the same thing, it is "human expediency and worldly wisdom." My readers will say, "Oh, you should not say so; he does not mean that." Of course he does not; but what does he mean? In all sincerity, I do not know. But I do know what is the effect upon the casual reader of remarks of the kind.

Then we have some really valuable comments on the lavish expenditure of wealthy Christians. Much that he says is very impressive and very true. It needs qualifying, indeed. If our Lord's command to the young ruler to sell all that he had is to be regarded, not as a needed test in an individual case, but as a rule applying to all consecrated souls, then it is the duty of our wealthy Christian men to divide their property among the poor, and "live on the Lord," which, being interpreted, means living on the charity of those not sufficiently consecrated to do the like. I will only ask, Would it really be for the advantage of the Lord's cause if Mr. Bevan, or Mr. Denny, or Mr. George Williams, abandoned the means God has given them, and which they use so well? (They will forgive my naming them: it is only by looking at a concrete case that an abstract argument is appreciated.)

But, says our critic (art. No. 3), "Wedges of gold and Babylonish garments agree not with spiritual power, and have brought defeat to God's Israel before." Assuredly they have, and will again. But does "A Missionary" realise what this sentence means? Does he remember that the wedge of gold and the Babylonish garment were stolen goods, stolen in direct defiance of an express command, and carefully hidden by the conscious thief in a hole dug in the ground under his tent? And does he suggest that our leading Christian men are Achans, and that their possessions are "the accursed thing"? Again, of course he means nothing of the kind; but a misapplication of Scripture like this has its effect upon the unreflecting reader, who is led insensibly to imagine that modern missions are a failure because wealthy Christians draw cheques for their support, and because accountants are employed to enter the amounts in a cash-book and give receipts for them.

Then we are told that "men of wealth, influence, and position, are often chosen to sit upon the Mission boards, rather than men of humility and faith." I wonder whether our critic has ever in his life been present when men are being chosen for a Missionary Committee, and whether he could produce one scrap of evidence for this statement. I can speak for one large committee, and give the most direct contradiction to the charge. "Humility and faith" are precisely the qualifications most thought of, and not "wealth, influence, and position." It is indeed necessary to find men with some leisure, who can come week after week, and almost day after day, to conduct the multifarious business to be done. While a few bankers and lawyers are included, the majority are retired officers and civil servants, many of them with long practical experience of Indian missions, but scarcely one of them with anything that can be called wealth. But everyone is chosen first and foremost for his Christian character, evangelical principles, and personal interest in the missionary cause. Talk of "humility and faith"! Take the late Alexander Beattie, a county magistrate and railway chairman, a humble and whole-hearted follower of the Lord Jesus for over sixty years. His "humility and faith," I myself watched with ever-growing love and admiration in my committee-room for fifteen years. These are the men whom we love to choose for Missionary Boards; men of prayer, men of holy life. One can but smile sadly when they are disparaged by writers who never saw or heard of them in their lives.

But on the question of money, the point of all others, upon which I wish to lay stress is this: That it is good for the Church at home to have to support missions abroad. Whether or no, it is good for the missions it is assuredly good for the Church. There is a vast amount of selfishness in our charity and in our contributions to what is called the service of God. I remember the case of a harvest thanksgiving, where the collection was devoted to putting up certain curtains inside certain doors, in order to prevent draughts coming into the church! There was no harm, of course, in providing the curtains; but to call it a thankoffering to the Lord of the harvest was absurd. This, no doubt, was rather an extreme case; but the spirit it illustrates is common enough. Even charity to the poor is not of the highest type of Christian self-denial. When Mary brought her precious ointment, and poured it over her beloved Master, it was not Judas only, the bag-holder and thief, who objected that it might have been sold for the benefit of the poor; and we know what Christ's answer was. In the present day, what can we better deny ourselves for than for the cause dearest to the Lord's heart, the saving of souls from every nation, and kindred, and people, and tongue? If Mary were among us to-day, I venture to think that it is to the missionary cause that she would give her offering; and, thank God, there is many a Mary who actually does so in the same spirit of all-sacrificing love. But if it would be right for her to do so, then a large part of "A Missionary's" argument goes for nothing.

Let me illustrate what actually takes place. The great bulk of missionary funds is gathered in an enormous number, hundreds of thousands, of small gifts, the gifts, to a large extent, of the humble and the poor. To my mind, this is a great advantage. If a mission wants an extra £10,000, it no doubt saves much trouble if half a dozen wealthy friends give it between them; and if it pleases God to incline their hearts to do so, let us thank Him for it. But if the same total came in a hundred thousand small sums from a hundred thousand givers, it would be better. It would mean more sympathy and more prayer. No doubt, if the hundred thousand gifts came as a hundred thousand remittances to a central office, the labour and expense would be heavy; hence we see the value of local friends who gather the little contributions together, pay over perhaps a hundred of them to a local treasurer for that congregation or district, who in his turn pays it over to a treasurer for the town or the county, who again in his turn sends up the aggregate of these payments in one cheque to headquarters, so that perhaps fifty receipts and fifty entries may dispose of all the hundred thousand contributions. Now, these local collectors and treasurers are, I suppose, the "agents and workers" so invidiously alluded to in the paragraph before quoted. But it is all voluntary and unpaid work; and I can testify from personal knowledge that vast numbers of the children of God do it out of love to Him. But to keep all this in orderly arrangement (like the "fifties in a company" on the hills of Bethsaida) means machinery and organisation. Sacred machinery, and blessed organisation! By its means the Lord has sent blessing to countless souls in England, even before one penny gets into the mission field.

How is all this money actually raised? Let me give a few illustrations from the Church Missionary Society alone. That Society issues yearly, on an average, in response to applications, fifteen thousand missionary boxes. Those boxes produce £26,000 a year. Nearly the whole of that is in copper. Is not the Society in this respect a distinct benefactor to our poor people, by giving them the opportunity of making their humble offerings, let alone any benefit that may accrue to foreign missions? I am well aware that a good deal of money goes into boxes in more or less grudging response to the importunity of the box-holders. But, after making all allowance for that, what an aggregate of simple liberality and heart-felt prayer is represented by the above-mentioned sum! I know a poor sufferer who has been on her back in one of the wards of an invalid home for some years, who has her missionary box by her bedside, and once a year sends me ten or twelve shillings as the proceeds, and who regularly reads her missionary magazine and systematically prays for the missionaries she finds named in it. And she is but one of hundreds. I know of a poor man who keeps eight hens, and gives to the Lord, through the Church Missionary Society, all the eggs that they lay on Sundays! He calls his little bit of "machinery" the Sunday Egg Society; and last year it produced 19s. 10½d. I know of a missionary mangle which earned £2; of a missionary apple tree that produced 15s.; of missionary walnuts that realised £1 15s., of three missionary pigs that sold for £2 13s. the three; of a missionary calf that fetched £2; of rabbits, kittens, canaries, donkeys, bees, hop-poles, primroses, envelopes, waste paper, &c.; there is really no end to the loving ingenuity which humble and unnoticed Christians manifest in giving their little help to a cause which they know is the Lord's cause, and which they know He blesses.

You may see this earnestness, not in individuals only, but in communities. I know a village on the East Coast where for sixty years the squires, father and son, and the successive vicars, have believed in the missionary cause, and where both the fishing and the agricultural sections of the population are deeply interested in it. Once a quarter, on Sunday night, a missionary meeting is held in the schoolroom, where you may see row after row of fishermen in blue jerseys and labourers in smock frocks. For the annual missionary festival a great barn is decorated, and all the contributors (no others) sit down to tea, husbands and wives, parents and children, and afterwards listen to the missionary from Africa, or India, or China, who has come to tell his story. That village gives £60 a year to the Church Missionary Society.

Here is another case. It is a poor London parish, with a struggling church. A few humble Sunday-school teachers, led by one of their number, who is a bank clerk, have for some years believed that a real interest in the missionary cause brings a reflex blessing to the community interested; and though the parish in all outward prosperity has gone down, down, down, the freewill offerings of the people for foreign missions have gone up, up, up, rising a little every year, till they are now always over £100. In that parish all the ordinary home mission agencies have infused into them the foreign mission spirit. The Band of Hope has a missionary address four times a year; the mothers' meeting has one three times a year; the Sunday-schools, four times a year; the communicants' class, twice a year; the Young Men's Association, three times a year; and so on, and so on. The principle on which all is done is thus expressed in a paper lately issued: "The progress of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ amongst the nations of the earth must be a matter of the greatest interest and immediate concern to every Christian believer."

I could mention case after case like these; and this is the way in which "human expediency and worldly wisdom" prevail in the circles of rich and poor, young and old, that support the Church Missionary Society. And I repeat that I speak not only of and for that Society. The other great organisations could say much the same. I venture to suggest that it is all absolutely new to "A Missionary," and to very many other excellent friends who, in their new-born zeal for the evangelisation of the world, are totally unconscious that anybody was ever zealous for it before!

But my chief point is that money and Mammon are not identical. In the good providence of our God money is a necessary of life. It is not money, but the love of money, that is the root of all evil. Money may be a tremendous instrument for good if it is used loyally and faithfully as belonging to the Lord; and missionary societies are a blessing to the Church at home, just because they are treasuries for the reception of the purest and most unselfish gifts to God's service.

At the same time I admit fully that money has been too prominent in pulpit and platform missionary addresses. We have needed to learn that importunate pleas for "a good collection" are unworthy of so high and holy a cause, and that the money will come of itself when the heart is touched. But we are learning it. I may venture to say that the Church Missionary Society's February Simultaneous Meetings and the papers circulated in connection with them did much to foster truer ideas on this subject. I do not, however, agree with my friend Mr. Hudson Taylor in refusing to have collections after meetings. I cannot understand why they are wrong. I value them because they give opportunity for small and humble gifts from many who cannot send cheques or postal orders. Nor can I join in the condemnation of sales of work. Bazaars, with their veiled gambling and other worldly adjuncts, are hateful and utterly unworthy of any sacred cause; but quiet missionary sales are among the happiest methods of enabling quiet people to help. Many have no money to give, but they can do a little simple work, and they delight to do it for Jesus' sake. Last year £15,000 was raised for the C.M.S. by such sales of work; and I do not believe that one of them was a "bazaar."

COUNT CAMPELLO'S WORK.

Count Campello has paid a second visit to San Remo and held public and private meetings. The municipality placed the town theatre at the Count's disposal, and it was crowded from floor to ceiling with an audience composed largely of young men and students. For two hours Count Campello, and an able law-student who accompanied him, Signor Ugo Janni, discoursed to them on their need of true religion in the heart and life, and of their inability to find any aid to its possession in the corrupt ritual and idolatrous services of the Church of Rome. Their appeals were not made in vain. Not only were the utterances of the valiant reformers applauded, but some of the leaders of thought and moulders of public opinion met the Count the next day at a private conference, and, after a frank exchange of views and opinions, agreed to assist him in establishing a mission at San Remo. The intellectual, the moral, the religious force of Italy is now outside the Church of Rome. Count Campello with his new movement seems to meet their needs.

We regret to say that the clergyman of the High English Church in San Remo (All Saints') has joined hands with the Bishop of Ventimiglia, and with a pervert English priest who is stationed here, in doing all he can to damage the Count's influence, and frustrate the desires for truth and guidance manifested by the Italian people. "All Saints'" has been particularly unfortunate in having clergymen with Popish leanings and practices. Last year its preacher, "Father" Rivington, went over to the Church of Rome altogether, and its present one has gone very far in the same direction.

XXVII.—STRIPPING FOR THE RACE.

Hebrews xii. 1.

When, in his Egyptian campaign, the Emperor Napoleon was leading his troops through the neighbourhood of the Pyramids, he pointed to those hoary remnants of a great antiquity, and said, "Soldiers, forty centuries look down on you!" Similarly there have been summoned before our thought in the preceding chapter the good and great, the martyrs, confessors, prophets and kings, of the past. We have been led through the corridors of the Divine mausoleum, and bidden to read the names and epitaphs of those of whom God was not ashamed. We have felt our faith grow stronger as we read and pondered the inspiring record; and now, by a single touch, these saintly souls are depicted as having passed from the arena into the crowded tiers, from which to observe the course which we are treading to-day. They were witnesses to the necessity, nature, and power of faith. They are witnesses also of our lives and struggles, our victories and defeats, our past and present.

And they are compared to a cloud. One of the finest pictures in the world is that of the Madonna de San Sisto at Dresden, which depicts the infant Saviour in the arms of his mother, surrounded by clouds, which attracted no special notice until lately; but when the accumulated dust of centuries was removed, they were found to be composed of myriads of angel faces. Surely this is the thought of the inspired writer, when he speaks of "so great a cloud of witnesses."

In some of the more spacious amphitheatres of olden times, the spectators rose in tier above tier to the number of forty or fifty thousand; and to the thought of the combatant as he looked around on this vast multitude of human faces, set in varied and gorgeous colouring, these vast congregations of his race must have appeared like clouds, composed of infinitesimal units, but all making up one mighty aggregate, and bathed in such hues as are cast on the clouds at sunrise or sunset by the level sun.

If before this time these Hebrew Christians had been faltering and inclined to relinquish their earnestness, they would have been strangely stirred and quickened by the thought that they were living under the close inspection of the spirits of the mighty dead. To us also the same exhortation applies.

I. The speed of the Christian life.—"Let us run." We must not sit still to be carried by the stream. We must not loiter and linger as children returning from a summer's ramble. We must not even walk as men with measured step. We must run. Nor are we only to run as those who double their pace to an easy trot, we must run as men who run a race. The idea of a race is generally competition; here it is only concentration of purpose, singleness of aim, intensity.

Life in earnest, that is the idea. But how far do we seem from it. And what a contrast there is between our earnestness in all beside, and in our devotion to God and man. We are willing enough to join in the rush of business competition, in the race for wealth, in the heated discussion of politics and in social life, in the pursuit of pleasure; but, ah! how soon we slacken when it becomes a question of how much we are willing to do for God.

How earnest men are around us! Newton poring over his problems till the midnight wind sweeps over his pages the ashes of his long extinguished fire. Reynolds sitting, brush in hand, before his canvas for thirty-six hours together, summoning into life forms of beauty that seemed glad to come. Dryden composing in a single fortnight his ode for St. Cecilia's Day. Buffon dragged from his beloved slumbers to his more beloved studies. And the beloved biographer, who records these traits, himself rising with the dawn to prepare for the demands of his charge.

In a world like this, and with a theme like ours, we ought not to be languid and supine, but devoted, eager, consumed with a holy love to God, and with a passion for the souls of men. Then should we make progress in the knowledge of the Word of God, and enter into the words of one of the greatest spiritual athletes that ever lived: "This one thing I do . . . I press toward the goal for the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus."

II. We must run free of weights.—This speed can only be maintained when we run unencumbered and free. Now, of course, we would all admit the necessity of divesting ourselves of sins, but in all our lives there are weights which are not sins. A sin is that which in its very nature, and always, and by whomsoever perpetrated, is a transgression of God's law, a violation of God's will. But a weight is something which in itself, or to another, may be harmless, or even legitimate, but in our own case is a hindrance and an impediment.

Every believer must be left to decide what is his own special weight. We may not judge for one another. What is a weight to one is not so to all. But the Holy Spirit, if He be consulted, and asked to reveal the hindrance to the earnestness and speed of the soul's progress in Divine things, will not fail to indicate it swiftly and infallibly. And this is the excellence of the Holy Spirit's teaching, it is ever definite. If you have a general undefined feeling of discouragement, it is probably the work of the great enemy of souls; but if you are aware of some one hindrance and encumbrance which stays your speed, it is almost certainly the result of the work of the Divine Spirit, who is leading you to relinquish something which is slackening your progress in the spiritual life.

No man would think of maintaining a high speed encompassed with weights. The lads who run for a prize litter the whole course with garments flung away in their eager haste. There would be little difficulty in maintaining an intense and ardent spirit if we were more faithful in dealing with the habits and indulgences which cling around us and impede our steps. Thousands of Christians are like waterlogged vessels. They cannot sink, but they are so saturated with inconsistencies, and worldliness, and permitted evil, that they can only be towed with difficulty into the celestial port.

Is there anything in your life which dissipates your energy from holy things, which disinclines you to the practice of prayer and Bible study, which rises before you in your best moments, and produces in you a general sense of uneasiness and disturbance? Something which others account harmless, and permit, and in which you once saw no cause for anxiety; but which you now look on with a feeling of self-condemnation? It is likely enough a weight.

Is there anything within the circle of your consciousness concerning which you have to argue with yourself, or which you do not care to investigate, treating it as a bankrupt treats his books into which he has no desire to enter, or as a votary of pleasure treats the first symptoms of decaying vitality which he seeks to conceal from himself? We so often allow in ourselves things which we would be the first to condemn in others. We frequently find ourselves engaged in discovering ingenious reasons why a certain course which would be wrong in others is justifiable in ourselves. All such things may be considered as weights.

It may be a friendship which is too engrossing; a habit which is sapping away our energy as the tap-root the fruit-bearing powers of a tree; a pursuit, an amusement, a pastime, a system of reading, a method of spending time, too fascinating, and too absorbing, and, therefore, harmful to the soul, which is tempted to walk when it should run, and to loiter when it should haste.

But, you reply, is it not a sign of weakness, and will it not tend to weakness, always to be relinquishing these and similar things? Surely, you cry, the life will become impoverished and barren when it is stripped in this way of its precious things. Not so. It is impossible to renounce anything at the bidding of the inner life without adding immensely to its strength; for it grows by surrender, and waxes strong by sacrifice. And for every unworthy object which is forsaken, there follows an immediate enrichment of the spirit, which is the sufficient and unvarying compensation. The athlete gladly foregoes much that other men value, and which is pleasant to himself, because his mind is intent on the prize, and he considers that he will be amply repaid for all the hardships of training if he be permitted to bear it away, though it be a belt he will never wear, or a cup he will never use. How much more gladly should we be prepared to relinquish all that hinders our attainment, not of the uncertain bauble of the athlete, but the certain reward, the incorruptible crown, the smile and well-done of our Lord.

There is an old Dutch picture of a little child dropping a cherished toy from its hands; and, at first sight, its action seems unintelligible, until at the corner of the picture, the eye is attracted to a white dove winging its flight towards the emptied outstretched hands. Similarly we are prepared to forego a good deal, when once we catch sight of the spiritual acquisitions which beckon to us. And this is the true way to reach consecration and surrender. Do not ever dwell on the giving-up side, but on the receiving side. Keep in mind the meaning of the old Hebrew word for consecration, to fill the hand. There will not be much trouble in getting men to empty their hands of wood, hay, and stubble, if they see that there is a chance of filling them with the treasures, which gleam from the faces or lives of others, or which call to them from the page of Scripture. The world pities us, because it sees only what we give up; but it would hold its sympathy if it could also see how much we receive—"good measure, pressed down, and running over given into our bosoms."

III. We must lay aside besetting sin.—"Le us lay aside the sin which doth so closely cling to us" (R.V.). We often refer to these words; no sentence of the Bible is more often on our lips; but do we not misquote them, in divorcing them from their context? We should read them as part of the great argument running through the previous chapter, and of which they are the culmination and brilliant climax. That argument has been devoted to the theme of faith. Case after case has been adduced of the exploits of the heroes of Hebrew story, and it has been shown that in each faith was the secret motive and the sufficient power. The close connection between that glowing panegyric and the opening words of the following chapter is shown by the word "Wherefore," which even defies the wanton intrusion of the division forced upon us in our English version. And surely it is most natural to hold that the sin which so closely clings to us is nothing else than the sin of unbelief, which is the opposite pole to the faith so highly eulogised.

If that be a correct exegesis, it sheds new light on unbelief. It is no longer an infirmity, it is a sin. Men sometimes carry about their doubts, as beggars a deformed or sickly child, to excite the sympathy of the benevolent. But surely there is a kind of unbelief which should not meet with sympathy, but rebuke. It is sin which needs to be repented of as sin, to be resisted as sin, and to receive as sin the cleansing of Christ.

Unbelief may, as in the case of Thomas, spring from intellectual and constitutional difficulties. But these will not lead the soul to vaunt itself as surpassing others in insight, or to relinquish the society of others with happier constitutions, or, above all, to forego the habit of secret prayer. It will rather induce a temper of mind the very opposite of that self-confident arrogant spirit which prevails so much in the unbelievers of our time.

But much unbelief springs from moral causes. The soul gets wrong with God, and says that it is not sure whether there is a God. The windows are allowed to be covered with grime, and then it doubts whether the sun is shining. The faculties of the inner life are clogged with neglect, and refuse to do their appointed office, in revealing the spiritual and the unseen. We should be wiser if we dealt with much of the unbelief of our times as a disease of the spiritual life, rather than of the intellectual. Its source is largely moral. Do not set agnostics to study evidences, but show them that their temper of heart is the true cause of their darkness and unbelief. God has given each of us powers of discerning his truth, which will certainly perceive and love it; and where the reverse is the case, it is often due to some moral obliquity, to some beam in the eye, to some secret indulgence, which is destructive of all spiritual perception. Put away known sin. Read the Bible, even though you doubt its inspiration. Wait. Pray. Live up to all the light you have. And unbelief will drop away as the old leaves from the evergreens in spring.

There will, of course, be difficulties in all our lives to impede our heavenward progress. Difficulties from the opposition of our foes. Difficulties from within our own hearts. We shall need patience and long forbearance, as we tread our appointed track. But there are two sources of comfort open to us.

(1) Let us remember that the course is set before us by our heavenly Father, who therefore knows all its roughnesses and straitnesses, and will make all grace abound toward us, sufficient for our need. To do his will is rest and heaven.

(2) Let us look off unto Jesus. Away from past failure and success; away from human applause and blame; away from the gold pieces scattered on the path, and the flowers that line either side. Do not look now and again, but acquire the habit of looking always, so that it shall become natural to look up from every piece of daily work, from every room however small, from every street however crowded, to his dear, calm, sweet face; just as the sojourner on the northern shores of Geneva's lake is constantly prone to look up from any book or work on which the attention may have been engaged, to behold the splendor and glory of the noble range of snow-capped summits on the further shores. And if it seems hard to acquire this habitual attitude, trust the Holy Spirit to form it in your soul.

Above all, remember that where you tread there your Lord trod once, combating your difficulties and sorrows, though without sin; and ere long you shall be where He is now. Keep your eye fixed then on Him as He stands to welcome and reward you: and struggle through all, animated by his smile, and attracted to his side, and you will find weights and unbelief dropping off almost insensibly and of themselves.

VII.—BOTH HANDS FREE.

"It won't stand; it is of no use."

"What is that?" I inquired, of a young worldly man. "What won't stand?"

He turned towards me, and said, "Religion."

"That is a poor look out for me, then," I remarked. "But I think you are mistaken about it."

"Oh, no, I am not, I assure you; I have tried it often enough, and earnestly enough, too."

"Come here, young man," I said; "sit down, and tell me what it is you have tried."

"Why, I have tried to be religious."

"I am very glad you have failed in that," I said. "You may as well try to make a thorn tree into a vine, and expect it to bear grapes. God does not bid you try and change yourself, but He does command that you give yourself to Him, that He may change you. Some people try as you have been doing, and think they have succeeded; and that their thorn tree is beginning to look very like a vine, well trained; and when they can get a few grapes upon it (somehow), it will be a perfect success. Such people only deceive themselves; they cannot deceive God. That is why I said that I was glad you did not succeed in your efforts."

"But," said the young man, "I have indeed made a lot of resolutions, and could not keep them; they are promises like pie crust, you know, made to be broken."

"Then, why not give up making resolutions; for, if you succeed in keeping them ever so well, you are in bondage all the time. A gentleman I heard of the other day, went into his garden, when a strange dog happened to be there, and flew at him. He, with presence of mind, seized the beast by the collar, so that it could not bite him; but this was a negative, and not a positive benefit, his hands were not free for anything else.

"The Lord Jesus did not come down here to exhort us to save ourselves, or to teach us how to do it by strenuous resolutions. He came to seek and to save us because we are lost. Mark, not to tell us to resolve to save ourselves; but to save us Himself alone."

"Oh, I see what you mean; but I really thought a fellow had to give up his bad ways, and take up good ones."

"No, if you look at the Bible, it says, 'Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thought, and let him return unto the Lord.' Mark this, 'return to the Lord.' It is not give up his bad ways, but forsake them—that is, give them up for something else, and the prophet says, 'The Lord will have mercy upon him.' Then the prophet, as if he would be a witness as well as a minister, adds, 'Come to our God, and He will abundantly pardon'" (Isa. l. 3).

"I see where I have been wrong," said the young man; but suppose I give myself to the Lord, and I do not keep to it."

"There you are again—all for working at your own keeping, after you profess to have given yourself to the Lord, holding on with both your hands. Why not let the Lord hold and keep you, and then you will have both your hands free."

This young man did yield himself to God, and realised great joy and peace in believing. He was much surprised to find how true the words of Scripture are, and how ready God is to receive and pardon sinners. God walked in the Garden of Eden to find Adam; but He ran to meet the returning prodigal.

For years this young man had been under convictions, sometimes resolving to do better, and sometimes despairing of salvation altogether, and going headlong with worldlings into sin of all kinds.

This he did, and suffered, because he was ignorant of the simple way of the sinner's salvation. Now that he did know it, he went forward with vigour and boldness, to tell his old companions how to be saved.

He was greatly discouraged with many of them, for they did not regard his exhortations. The fact is, they were not prepared in mind, nor in the same receptive state that he was, when he heard the Word, and received it. In his simplicity, he thought he had only to tell them the Gospel, and they would believe it, but they did not.

He said, "I sometimes meet with a fellow who is interested, and asks me questions about this great theme, but that is not the case with many."

It is a great thing to lead the blind; but they must first be convinced that they are blind. If the blind one thinks he knows as much as you do, and that he can see as well, it will be hard to work with such. Our instructions in God's Word are, first, to open the eyes of the blind before we attempt to lead them from darkness to light. A blind man will see no better in a room blazing with light than he did in a dark one. However, the young man was in downright earnest. Mistakes and blunders, or none, he intended to go on, and he did, though he was labouring very much in his own determination.

The next time I came to the place, I found my young friend very attentive and teachable. He was never missing from the services; and this time he seemed to be more of a learner than a worker. After a few days he came to me as before, with a beaming face, rejoicing in spirit.

"What is the matter with you now?" I asked. "Sit down and tell me."

He said: "The first time you were here I received a blessing to my soul. I was saved, and began to work for the Lord in bringing others to Him, or trying at it, you know. I tried hard to do so. This time I have received another blessing through you; I have found out that it is not by my efforts, but by the Lord, that we get success."

"Go on," I said; "It will do you good to tell what you know. I always think a man does not really know a thing until he is able to tell it."

"Well," he continued, "just as I had been working before my conversion to save myself by my resolutions, so I find, since my conversion, I have been working with my own determination and will to save others. Looking up to God to help me, instead of giving up myself to Him to use me in his service, I have been saying, Lord, help me; not, Lord, use me. As my hands were bound before with resolutions, so they have been equally bound in my work. Now, thank God, I have both hands free, and the Lord uses them for his work. Oh, I am happy! And," he added, "there is another thing: I used to hold on with one hand for my own safety, and work with the other; now I am free, for the Lord keeps me as well as uses me."

He continued, "I have been visiting an old man. For months I could make nothing of him; but yesterday I went in simple dependence upon the Lord, begging him just to speak through me whatever He would. The Lord seemed to say, Bring him to Me. I suppose I had been carrying messages to him instead of doing this."

"Yes," I said, "that is a very good distinction; what did you do?"

"I got the dear man upon his knees, and made him pray for himself. Formerly, I used to deliver a message and pray with him, now I persuaded him to pray for himself. Doing this he soon broke down thoroughly, and did not rest until he found peace with God. His waiting, working, and hoping came to an end. He asked and received, and I came away rejoicing more than ever."

The way of faith is better than that of works and is more effectual, whether it is for the salvation of ourselves or for that of others. How many there are who labour and are heavy laden on account of self-effort, who might come at the Lord's bidding and receive his gift of rest; and how many labour in their own energy who might find rest to their souls, if they would only take his yoke upon them, and learn of Him.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

These brethren have concluded a fifteen days' mission in Mildmay Conference Hall, upon which we look back with much joy and satisfaction. The mission was preceded by three missions, in as many chapels in this neighbourhood; and the interest culminated in the services in the Hall, which were marked throughout by prayerful expectancy and power; every night inquiring souls were dealt with, reaching in the aggregate a very large number indeed. The three Saturday and the three Sunday night services were crowded with attentive listeners; and Mr. Manton Smith's services of song were greatly helped by the choir of Christian singers, who filled the platform and found places in the side galleries.

We are happy to bear testimony to the remarkable variety and resource, the thorough Scripturalness, and the aptness of illustration, which characterise Mr. Fullerton's preaching, and to the impressive manner in which solemn truth is driven home by this dear servant of Christ. His true yoke-fellow, Mr. Smith, in face, and voice, and winning words, manifests a spirit of Christian tenderness which proves of great value in attracting souls to Christ. God has used them much hitherto, and we look forward with hope to very wide doors, and effectual, being opened for them all over England, Scotland, and Ireland. We ask the prayers of your readers on their behalf, and on behalf of the young converts in North London, who have, through their invitations and entreaties, been added to the Church of Christ.

FLOWERS FOR FACTORY GIRLS.—Those who go amongst the girls who toil in London factories know what it is to see the pale, tired face light up at the sight of a bunch of real country flowers. How often the gift of these sweet messengers has opened the way for the message of the love of God to weary souls. These girls delight in all kinds of flowers, wild or garden; and pieces of ivy, when flowers are scarce. If tied up in small bunches they are ready for distribution; the extra labour of doing this would be well repaid, if the senders could hear the oft-repeated remark, "Somebody must care for us, to take so much trouble to give us pleasure." Anyone able to send a regular or occasional supply of flowers in small bunches, for distribution in London factories, is requested to write to the hon. sec. of the Flower Mission, Miss Alice Evans, 78, West Cromwell-road, London, S.W., for the address of a mission to which they may be sent.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

THE GIRLS' LODGING HOUSE.

Dr. Barnardo describes, in the April number of Night and Day, the appearance by night of the interior of the Lodging-house for Children and Young Girls, which he recently opened in Flower and Dean-street:—

"It was a sad and depressing spectacle. Every bunk was filled with poor creatures, some of them quite young girls, a few aged women, with a large number of little children. They had all come in out of the wet and cold, and huddled into the warmth of the bunks, on each of which a mattress had been laid and a couple of rugs. What melancholy thoughts it suggested, even though one had the comfort of knowing that the poor creatures had crept in out of the dark, wet night, and were at least safe here!

"The good matron says that some of the younger girls and women speak with unbounded gratitude of the privilege of being permitted to rest their weary limbs in the Shelter. Two or three quite young women said that they had not felt safe for months before, and that if they had no bed at all, but only just the bare boards, they would have been thankful to come in, for they 'knew we were good people here.' The poor creatures sit in the common kitchen while the cocoa supper is being prepared, and when to each is served her half-pint of the steaming and nutritious beverage, together with a slice of dry bread, the ravenous hunger exhibited by many of them is just dreadful to contemplate. Then follow a few moments of silence, during which the matron, a devout servant of our Lord, reads a few words from the Scriptures, and offers a simple prayer. By about half-past ten the doors are closed and locked for the night, and the lights lowered. Perhaps a dozen times in the night, however, some poor girl will be brought to the door, and will call aloud for admission. Of course it is against the rules, but we dare not keep them out. Sometimes a policeman will knock, and beg that a poor girl, or perhaps a mere child, whom he has discovered on his beat, sitting homeless in a market-place or closed passage, or walking wearily through the streets, may find admission.

"When the morning comes, water and soap are provided, and the poor creatures have a wash in the lower kitchen. Then follows brief morning prayer, and a cup of cocoa is again served, with a piece of bread. All must then go out; but how different with some of them is the day thus begun to its predecessors, now that they have some strength and life in them, the result of a warm quiet shelter at night and of a meal which they had not expected! The matron says that some of the unhappy girls in the morning have been so taken aback by the kindness shown them, that they have burst into tears; and in one instance a girl fell on her knees in the doorway, and invoked aloud God's blessing upon the people who had helped her.

"Although all must go out of the lodging-house at 8.30 in the morning, the prime object of the establishment of the Shelter is not forgotten, and conversation held with one and another leads almost invariably to the rescue of some half-dozen or more of the most wretched. Many of these are instances of quite young girls who had begun a life of evil. They often now deliberately give themselves up, and beg with tears to be saved from a continuance of such a career.

"In numerous cases quite little children, who were either beggars themselves or employed by beggars, have been rescued, and in many instances tramps whom nothing else would have induced to give up their children have been so won by the kindness shown them in the Shelter, that they have willingly suffered the little girls in their care to be taken possession of by our Homes. Quite a number of waif children have already, through the agency of the Flower and Dean-street Shelter, been lifted permanently out of a street life, and have been entered upon our books.

"Among the rescues recently effected through the agency of the Shelter were those of two little girls aged five and two respectively. I obtained the mother's consent to the admission of the older girl, Jenny, in the first instance. One of my helpers visited the common lodging-house in which the children were, for the purpose of bringing Jenny away with her, and thus she tells her tale:—'I saw the child without any shoes or stockings, sitting in the kitchen with fifteen women and several men. They were using filthy and abominable language. I tried to dress the child, but could scarcely collect the rags together. It was twelve o'clock in the day; the mother was still in bed, in the same room where had slept two of the women who were murdered last year in Whitechapel.' Who can doubt Jenny's fate, had she been left alone amidst surroundings of which this is merely a passing suggestion?

"A few days later our agent renewed an attack which had previously been unavailingly made upon the mother, for the purpose of securing the younger girl. The woman earned her living by hawking boot-laces, by singing in the streets, and by similar shifts which furnished a colourable pretence for begging, and she asserted that without little Dora in her arms to excite sympathy she could hardly secure a single penny! Persuasion had hitherto proved ineffective; but when our agent paid her second visit she found poor Dora in a lamentable condition. She had upset a pot of boiling grease over her breast, and the mother's pity for her suffering daughter was largely qualified by anger at the hope of her gains being thus destroyed, for, as she querulously repeated, 'It'll be weeks afore she's out agin!'

"Our efforts were finally successful, and Dora, merely a poor, limp, little bundle of pain, made her first acquaintance with our Institutions. Her accident will, I am sure, turn out to be one of the happiest events in Dora's history, and casual evil will thus result in certain good. But to think that in lodging-houses by the dozen, in our London slums by the score, in furnished rooms by the hundred, boys and girls like Jenny and Dora are to be found waiting to be rescued! Perhaps, however, one of the most cheering signs of the movement is this—that whereas I at one time thought the lodging-house keepers and deputies of the district would be opposed to us, I find instead that they are most friendly, and express unmistakeable approval of what I have done."

Dr. Barnardo closes an affecting list of cases rescued, by a reference to "ways and means." The daily strain upon his purse for the support of 3100 children is so tremendous that it seems to require a constant succession of daily miracles to keep the institutions above water. £100 a day is needed for bread alone! For full details of this work of practical rescue we refer our readers to Night and Day itself, which, we have no doubt, will be sent to anyone upon application to Dr. Barnardo, 18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

METROPOLITAN MUSIC HALL.—We closed our large hall on Sunday last, after one of the most encouraging seasons we have ever known; if possible, we have been more crowded than ever, and certainly we should praise God for the many tokens of blessing seen. We arranged to have a series of Sunday afternoons at the Music Hall, and are glad to speak of the success which attended them, the building having been crowded long before the time of commencing. Among the many cases of conversion which have occurred have been quite a number of married couples who have both been brought to Christ. I enclose only two testimonies which give glory to our God, and encourage us. [We regret that we have not space for these encouraging assurances of blessing.] We open a Hyde Park Campaign on the first Sunday in May. Will the readers of The Christian pray for us, and give God praise on our behalf?

Y.W. CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Last week we reported the annual meeting in Exeter Hall of this Association. We now give some notes of the annual Conference of the London and South of England division, held in Morley Halls, Regent-street. The meetings were a great success, and were attended with much blessing. This will not be thought surprising when it is mentioned that every available moment between the gatherings was occupied by the leaders of the Conference in prayer for God's blessing. There was a very large number of country workers present.

At the first important meeting, over which Mrs. Tottenham presided, district referees from various parts of the country read reports of their local work, which were very encouraging. Mrs. Frederick Barker supplied at some length "News from the Colonies," showing how wonderfully the whole world is girded by the work of the Y.W.C.A. Mrs. Edward Trotter told how much Miss Faulkner had been used of God, in connection with her visit to Australia and Tasmania; Miss Marrable reported progress in Ireland.

A largely attended meeting was presided over by Mrs. Hatt Noble, who delivered an address of much spiritual power. The Hon. E. Kinnaird described new methods of work. Mrs. J. Herbert Tritton had for her subject, "Strangers at Home," and told of efforts among French and German girls in London who are brought within the scope of the Association. The work in factories was not forgotten. It was pointed out that in South-east London particularly there is urgent need for more consecrated workers to visit the laundries and factories open to them in that district. Mrs. E. W. Moore dealt with the work amongst young ladies in the West-end, touching upon the rapid development which has recently taken place in the "Time and Talents" department of the Association.

On the morning of the second day the reading-room was crowded for a prayer-meeting, at which Miss Bell, of Ashbourne, gave a valuable address on "Home Difficulties." The stream of prayer at this meeting was so full that it could scarcely be stayed. At a subsequent meeting addresses were delivered on "Counting the Cost," "Kindled Hearts," and "Casting the Net."

At the afternoon meeting in the large hall, Mrs. Stephen Menzies presided, and the proceedings were of a particularly interesting character. Mrs. Menzies urged secretaries to do all they could to interest and instruct their members in the work of evangelising the heathen. As the result of interesting her own Bible-class in two new missions, she hoped to raise £60 annually towards their support. The Hon. Mrs. Ion Keith-Falconer (in whom all present felt a sympathetic interest on account of her husband having given his life for Christ in the mission field) gave an account of the foreign mission departments of the Association in Scotland, reporting satisfactory progress. She pointed out the necessity of continually sustaining the enthusiam in foreign work. If they succeeded in doing this, the privilege of giving to God's work would not be so much neglected as it had been.

Miss McLean engaged the attention of the meeting with some words on Japan. The constitution, which is to be passed next year in that country, will give the missionaries much greater liberty in spreading the Gospel. A great deal can be done by English women and men for the Japanese. There are doors open everywhere. They have already Y.W.C. Associations in all the large towns, and in some of the small towns. Sectarianism is the great stumbling block to Christianity in Japan. Mrs. Piper also appealed for increased interest in Christ's work in that progressing country. Miss Leitch, pleading the cause o India, suggested a simple plan of helping on foreign missionary work. There are 140 branches of the Association in London with a membership, after deducting 2000 absentees, of 14,000. If each of these members gave on an average 1d. per week, and also got four friends outside the Association to do the same, £14,000 would be raised—a sum sufficient to support 140 missionaries. Thus, each branch of the Association in the Metropolis might have its own representative in the foreign field.

ENGLISHMEN IN INDIA.

The Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society is deservedly held in high esteem by those who know the character and extent of its work. At the eighteenth annual meeting held on Monday afternoon, last week, in Willis's Rooms, St. James's, not only was the importance of the sphere of the Society's operations dwelt upon, but testimony was borne to the high appreciation in which Anglo-Indian Christians hold its labourers.

The General Secretary, Rev. John Fordyce, read an abstract of the report, which showed that the Society's plea for hearty support has a twofold ground: first, good work has already been done; and, secondly, much more needs to be done for our countrymen in India. Appeals come from railways, old and new, and from the extending tea plantations, for more evangelists; but it is impossible to supply the demand until increased funds are placed at the disposal of the directors. The people for whom the Society cares are as "sheep without a shepherd," being our own sons and daughters living in the midst of the heathen. Having called attention to the far-reaching importance of the Society's work, for natives as well as Europeans, Mr. Fordyce pleaded for the extension of operations to Mandalay, in Burmah, where there is great need of evangelical teaching. In India deepening interest in the Society is shown by increasing contributions to its funds, by Christians who know what the work is, and people who have benefited by the ministrations of the evangelists.

Lord Aberdeen, who occupied the chair, delivered an address of cordial sympathy. He said that during his recent visit to India he became not only impressed with the need of the English residents, but also with the way in which the Society endeavours to meet it.

Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser ably advocated the Society's cause. Having sons in India, he spoke with feeling for his own, and having paid a brief visit to the south of the great peninsula, he was not without some true idea of the work, and the need for it. He could not, he said, conceive a better method of taking the everlasting Gospel to the scattered Europeans of India than that followed by the Society. There is a danger of our countrymen in India lapsing into religious indifference, and presenting to their heathen servants, and neighbours the melancholy spectacle of a Godless life. What does it matter that Anglo-Indians may be doing well, and, perhaps, laying by a little money in the hope that they will come "home" and enjoy days of leisure before their life ends, if, at the same time, their souls within them are shrivelling up through unbelief, and they are not only losing the very instincts of reverence and prayer, but also missing the way to the heavenly home, which the Lord Jesus Christ opens to all believers? This sad state of things must in time make itself felt in England; indeed, while it is true that we have received from India, both from the military and the civilians, some of our brightest Christian witnesses, it is also true that already many have returned who have lost all their religious convictions and attachments, and around whom the atmosphere is one of intense spiritual coldness. Again, ungodliness on the part of Europeans in India must be a great stumbling-block in the way of Christian work among the heathen millions. In conclusion, Dr. Fraser earnestly pleaded the claims of the Society on account of its good work done in a spirit of hearty co-operation with other Christian organisations in India.

Sir Charles Bernard followed with an address of hearty support. Having resided in India thirty years, he spoke of much that he had personally experienced. There are large numbers of places where Europeans work which have never yet been visited by Christian ministers. As the railways are developed, people from the British Isles are constantly going out, and to send them men who can preach Christ should be a pleasure as well as a duty. The Eurasian population also is rapidly increasing, and for want of religious instruction some of them are, sad to say, growing up in heathenism.

Encouraging words were also spoken by Major-General Bruce, and Surgeon-Major Pringle. The general secretary's address is 33, Sutherland-place, Bayswater, W.

THE FIGUERAS MISSION.

In a circular letter, Madame Lopez Rodriguez reports that he continues to see fruit of his long toil in dark Spain. Among recent converts at Figueras, is a carpenter, the only man of his trade in the town who does not work on the Lord's Day. A year ago, when he began attending the Gospel meetings, he once remarked that it would be next to impossible for a man of his trade to make an open profession of his faith, as it would ruin his business. Now, he says, "I have the wealth of pardon, and tranquillity of heart, worth more than all besides."

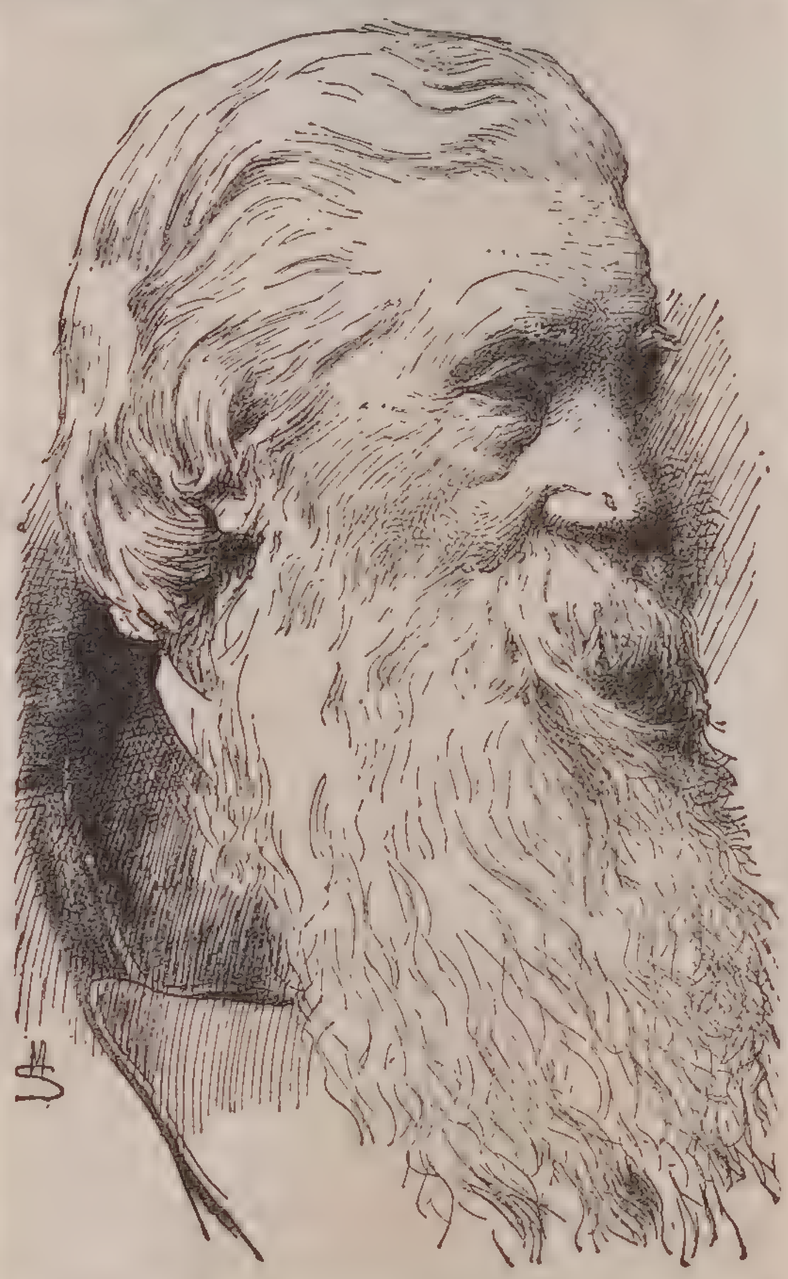
San Pedro Pescador, a fishing village on the Mediterranean, formerly bore so bad a name that no one dare drive along the roads at night. Since the Gospel has been preached there, not a single case of outrage or crime has been perpetrated. Of the work in this village, the Pastor says: "A hearty welcome invariably awaits us, even on stormy nights. On one occasion, a month or two ago, when accompanied by Lady Congleton and her daughter, who were spending a week with us, we found that there was a feast going on in the village, with music, dancing, &c. We of course thought that very few, if any, would come to the meeting. But, to our surprise and pleasure, not only were all the benches filled, but also every inch of standing-room was occupied by attentive listeners." Under Gospel influences, moreover, the charge that "Spaniards are such thieves" soon ceases to hold good, for pickpockets are turned into honest people when Christ rules in the heart. Of this Madame Rodriguez gives some very interesting examples which have come under her own notice, which also show how the prejudice that existed against the Protestants, or "the evil race," as they used to be called, has been replaced by feelings of love and esteem.

We are glad to learn that Pastor Rodriguez has now recovered from his long and severe illness. The hon. treasurer of the Mission is Rev. J. C. Stewart Mathias, Aldringham Vicarage, Saxmundham, Norfolk.

LANARKSHIRE CHRISTIAN UNION.—For seven years this organisation has been carrying on a very interesting home mission work. The endeavours of voluntary preachers have been supplemented by two paid evangelists. The Union is undenominational, and works in co-operation with various evangelical churches. Many of the out-of-the-way villages of the county were visited last year, some of them more than once, and there is to-day observable an increasing movement towards a more vital Christianity. Deputies from the Union have stirred up the churches in many places, with encouraging results. Tent work and conferences were also blessed of God last season. The secretary of the Mission is Mr. Thomas Wyse, Stanley Villa, Motherwell, N.B.

A NOBLE LIFE.

We have already briefly noticed the delightful Autobiography of the Rev. J. G. Paton, the Apostle of the New Hebrides.* Pressure on our space has hitherto prevented us from giving some extracts from our venerable friend's simple but touching and most inspiring record. Not only for its story of heroic and persevering missionary toil amid inconceivable dangers and difficulties, but for the rich glimpses it affords into the value of early Christian training and example, this book must long hold a high place in the literature of the century. The first of the following two extracts refers to Mr. Paton's early life; the second tells one of the many thrilling narratives of peril and of deliverance that marked the story of Mr. Paton and his fellow-workers in Tanna, their first field of labour in the New Hebrides:—



LEAVING HOME.

Before going to my first harvesting, I had applied for a situation in Glasgow, apparently exactly suited for my case; but I had little or no hope of ever hearing of it further. An offer of £50 per annum was made by the West Campbell Street Reformed Presbyterian Congregation, then under the good and noble Dr. Bates, for a young man to act as district visitor and tract distributor, especially amongst the absentees from the Sabbath-school; with the privilege of receiving one year's training at the Free Church Normal Seminary, that he might qualify himself for teaching, and thereby push forward to the holy ministry. The candidates, along with their application and certificates, were to send an essay on some subject, of their own composition, and in their own handwriting. I sent in two long poems on the Covenanters, which must have exceedingly amused them, as I had not learned to write decent prose! But, much to my surprise, immediately on the close of the harvesting experience, a letter arrived intimating that I, along with another young man, had been put upon the short leet, and that both were requested to appear in Glasgow on a given day and compete for the appointment. Two days thereafter I started out from my quiet country home on the road to Glasgow. Literally on the road, for from Torthorwald to Kilmarnock—about forty miles—had to be done on foot, and thence to Glasgow by rail. Railways in those days were as yet few, and coach travelling was far beyond my purse. A small bundle, tied up in my pocket handkerchief, contained my Bible and all my personal belongings. Thus was I launched upon the ocean of life. "I know thy poverty, but thou art rich."

My dear father walked with me the first six miles of the way. His counsels and tears and heavenly conversation on that parting journey are fresh in my heart as if it had been yesterday; and tears are on my cheeks as freely now as then, whenever memory steals me away to the scene. For the last half-mile or so we walked on together in almost unbroken silence,—my father, as was always his custom, carrying hat in hand, while his long, flowing yellow hair (then yellow, but in later years white as snow) streamed like a girl's down his shoulders. His lips kept moving in silent prayer for me, and his tears fell fast when our eyes met each other in looks for which all speech was vain. We halted on reaching the appointed parting place; he grasped my hand firmly for a minute in silence, and then solemnly and affectionately said—

"God bless you, my son! Your father's God prosper you, and keep you from all evil!"

Unable to say more, his lips kept moving in silent prayer; in tears we embraced, and parted. I ran off as fast as I could, and, when about to turn a corner in the road where he would lose sight of me, I looked back and saw him still standing with head uncovered where I had left him. Waving my hat in adieu, I was round the corner and out of sight in an instant. But my heart was too full and sore to carry me further, so I darted into the side of the road and wept for a time. Then, rising up cautiously, I climbed the dyke to see if he yet stood where I had left him, and just at that moment I caught a glimpse of him climbing the dyke and looking out for me! He did not see me, and after he had gazed eagerly in my direction for a while, he got down, turned his face towards home, and began to return—his head still uncovered, and his heart, I felt sure, still rising in prayer for me. I watched through blinding tears, till his form faded from my gaze; and then, hastening on my way, vowed deeply and oft, by the help of God, to live and act so as never to grieve or dishonour such a father and mother as He had given me. The appearance of my father, when we parted,—his advice, prayers, and tears,—the road, the dyke, the climbing up on it and then walking away, head uncovered, have often, often, all through life, risen vividly before my mind,—and do so now while I am writing, as if it had been but an hour ago. In my earlier years particularly, when exposed to many temptations, his parting form rose before me as that of a guardian angel. It is no pharisaism, but deep gratitude, which makes me here testify that the memory of that scene not only helped, by God's grace, to keep me pure from the prevailing sins, but also stimulated me in all my studies, that I might not fall short of his hopes, and in all my Christian duties, that I might faithfully follow his shining example.

A MEMORABLE NEW YEAR'S DAY.

The 1st January, 1861, was a New Year's Day ever to be remembered. Mr. and Mrs. Johnston, Abraham, and I, had spent nearly the whole time in a kind of solemn yet happy festival. Anew in a holy covenant before God, we unitedly consecrated our lives and our all to the Lord Jesus, giving ourselves away to his blessed service for the conversion of the heathen on the New Hebrides. After evening family worship, Mr. and Mrs. Johnston left my room to go to their own house, only some ten feet distant; but he returned to inform me that there were two men at the window, armed with huge clubs, and having black painted faces. Going out to them and asking them what they wanted, they replied—

"Medicine for a sick boy."

With difficulty I persuaded them to come in and get it. At once it flashed upon me, from their agitation and their disguise of paint, that they had come to murder us. Mr. Johnston had also accompanied us into the house. Keeping my eye constantly fixed on them, I prepared the medicine and offered it. They refused to receive it, and each man grasped his killing stone. I faced them firmly and said,—

"You see that Mr. Johnston is now leaving, and you too must leave this room for to-night. To-morrow, you can bring the boy or come for the medicine."

Seizing their clubs, as if for action, they showed unwillingness to withdraw, but I walked deliberately forward and made as if to push them out, when both turned and began to leave.

Mr. Johnston had gone in front of them and was safely out. But he bent down to lift a little kitten that had escaped at the open door; and at that moment one of the savages, jerking in behind, aimed a blow with his huge club, in avoiding which Mr. Johnston fell with a scream to the ground. Both men sprang towards him, but our two faithful dogs ferociously leapt in their faces and saved his life. Rushing out, but not fully aware of what had occurred, I saw Mr. Johnston trying to raise himself, and heard him cry—

"Take care! these men have tried to kill me, and they will kill you!"

Facing them sternly, I demanded—

"What is it that you want? He does not understand your language. What do you want? Speak with me."

Both men, thereon, raised their great clubs and made to strike me; but quick as lightning these two dogs sprang at their faces and baffled their plans. One dog was badly bruised, and the ground received the other blow that would have launched me into eternity. The best dog was a little cross-bred retriever, with terrier's blood in him, splendid for warning of the approaching dangers, and which had already been the means of saving my life several times. Seeing how matters stood, I now hounded both dogs furiously upon them, and the two savages fled. I shouted after them—

"Remember, Jehovah God sees you, and will punish you for trying to murder his servants!"

In their flight, a large body of men, who had come eight or ten miles to assist in the murder and plunder, came slipping here and there from the bush and joined them fleeing too. Verily, "the wicked flee when no man pursueth."

I, now accustomed to such scenes on Tanna, retired to rest and slept soundly; but my dear fellow-labourer, as I afterwards learned, could not sleep for one moment. His pallor and excitement continued next day, indeed for several days; and after that, though he was naturally lively and cheerful, I never saw him smile again.

We reproduce the portrait of Mr. Paton that we gave on his visit to this country four years ago. We trust many friends of missions will purchase copies of his enchanting book, and present them to Christian young men. No more remarkable testimony to the work of foreign missions could well be imagined.

REV. THOMAS CHAMPNESS is busily engaged in scattering all over the land a small pamphlet written by an Indian missionary in reply to the criticisms of Canon Isaac Taylor. Mr. Champness considers that no previous reply made to Canon Taylor has been altogether adequate to the important occasion. This, however, he considers so good an answer that he is anxious to scatter it throughout the country. Copies of the pamphlet are to be obtained at The Joyful News Book Depôt, Rochdale.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.—The usual "Good Friday" gathering took place at Macready House, Covent Garden, when upwards of two hundred girls and children from West-end theatres assembled to hear short addresses, solos being kindly sung by Miss Amanda Ira Aldridge and another lady from the Royal Academy of Music. Mr. Courthope Todd spoke on "Sights in Holland and Belgium," and Mr. Gittens, of the Sunday School Union, also addressed the young people. Many of those present were "ex-employés"—i.e., girls formerly on the stage, but who, from conscientious motives, are now in other employments. Over these the Mission still maintains a watchful and prayerful interest.

RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—The usual scenes of drunkenness and brutality were to be witnesssd in this locality on Monday last; but brighter and better scenes were also to be met with. Mr. Robert Paton presided over a splendid meeting of seamen in the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Chapel, which stands in the very centre of the Highway. British and foreign—white and coloured—men, rose one after the other, and told how the Lord had saved and blessed them. Rev. G. J. Hill, Mrs. Hill, Miss Messer and others took part in the meeting, and the presence and power of the Lord was realised. A large number remained to the after-meeting, several of whom were led to put their trust in Jesus. Both the indoor and outdoor meetings were largely attended and greatly blessed, and Easter Monday became the resurrection-time of many dead souls.

Canon J. McConnell Hussey,

Christ Church, North Brixton, London, S.W.

ENGLAND certainly owes a debt of gratitude to Scotland for her many sons who have distinguished themselves in this country as successful preachers of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Among these is James McConnell Hussey, who has been labouring in the Christian ministry for forty-five years. He was born at Newhall, near Glasgow, in the year 1819; he was educated first at the University of Glasgow, and afterwards at Exeter College, Oxford. He was ordained in 1844 by the then Bishop of Worcester (Dr. Henry Pepys).

His first curacy was at Atherstone, in Warwickshire, whence he passed to the charge of Bradford Peverell, in Dorsetshire. Here began the success which has marked the whole of Mr. Hussey's after career. He found the parish in a sadly dark condition, with hardly more than a dozen persons that cared to enter the church. Before long it was crowded, and people flocked in from all the neighbouring parts to hear the earnest young preacher.

But the Lord of the vineyard had a yet more important position for his servant to occupy; in 1847 he was called to the Metropolis to commence pastoral work at St. James's, Kennington, Surrey, near to that sphere of labour which he now occupies. Such was the attractiveness of the youthful incumbent that during the six years of his incumbency it was difficult to obtain a sitting. He had now evidently made his mark in London, for he was appointed afternoon preacher at the Foundling Hospital, a post only conferred on the eminent divines of the day; this office he filled for seven years.

In 1855 the somewhat unsightly but commodious edifice now known as Christ Church, North Brixton, was purchased by Mr. Hussey, who had it enlarged and adapted to its present purpose. For thirty-three years it has been a centre of earnest Christian activity. Not only have crowds been attracted to the unpretentious building, but many can testify to having been convicted of sin and converted to God within its walls.

The secret of Canon Hussey's success as a preacher has been that his words have come from the heart and have appealed to the heart. He evidently understands mankind, and the needs of humanity; therefore, his Sunday evening sermons have dealt chiefly with the three R's—Ruin by the Fall, Redemption by Jesus Christ, and Regeneration by the Holy Ghost. He is especially happy in addressing young men, and it has been a great privilege to witness more than once about a thousand men congregated at a special Sunday night service to hear from his lips the power that may be found in Christ wherewith to combat the temptations that surround them.

Mr. Hussey has not only been successful as a preacher; he has been an indefatigable worker, and his energy has been infused into those around him, till Christ Church has become like a hive in which every bee has something to do, and does it. He has about a hundred and fifty workers connected with the church, many of whom have known him from their childhood and have been brought up under his instructions. Thirty years ago his present curate, Rev. Walter Horne, was baptized by him at Christ Church. Never has there been a jarring note to interrupt the harmony existing between pastor and people; the late Bishop of Guildford used often to quote them as a congregation of brethren "dwelling together in unity." There are three Sunday-schools, all of which are in a flourishing condition, with more than a thousand scholars on the books, and nearly one hundred teachers. Gospel temperance work is carried on with vigour. A comfortable house in the Brixton-road is occupied every evening by young men, for whom various classes are held and recreation provided. Various other parochial organisations, such as national schools, district visiting society, maternal society, Dorcas society, girls' protective home, and penny bank, are being successfully worked.

Canon Hussey has become widely known in many parts of the country by his lectures on social and religious subjects. He has a happy knack of dealing hard blows at the evil fashions of the day, and the common faults of society, whilst being bright and humorous. While he entertains his audience with his wit, he is dispensing wholesome truths, which sink into the heart and are likely to produce fruit to the glory of God. The following are among some of the subjects that he has treated in his unique method:—Home, Scandal, Gossip, Busybody-ism, Nothingism, Firesides, Friends, Tongues. "Nothingism" is a strange title, but a very useful lecture. In 1878 the Bishop of Rochester showed his appreciation of Mr. Hussey's labours by appointing him an honorary canon of Rochester Cathedral, and, in 1879, Rural Dean of Kennington. Yet a further honour was bestowed upon him in 1880, when the Archbishop of Canterbury conferred on him the title of Doctor of Divinity, in recognition of the valuable work which he had done in South London.

An anxious month for his people was May, 1886. He was preaching one evening at a harvest festival in a neighbouring church and was seized in the pulpit with paralysis; he was driven home as quickly as possible, and for the next few days there was cause for much anxiety. But it proved not to be so serious as was anticipated, and in a few months' time, in answer to the prayers that were offered up in many churches, he was able to resume work. Although he has naturally lost somewhat of the fire and energy of his younger days, he still preaches and labours with considerable vigour; and often tells his friends with gratitude in his quaint way that "there's life in the old dog yet." It is satisfactory to learn that, although there are not the overflowing congregations there used to be, yet the spiritual work is progressing rather than declining:

there are more Christian workers than ever. Capital congregations may be found at the Wednesday evening services.

We cannot close this brief record better than by quoting from the Canon's thirty-third annual address and report to his church. After alluding to his having ministered in the locality for forty-one years, and to his being in his seventieth year, he says :—

I have ever desired to stand by the old landmarks which I considered God's landmarks; and by the help of God's Spirit I have made the keynote of my preaching, "Christ and Him crucified," and I have ever sought to keep your minds from being corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. It has been remarked to me that I do not "move with the times," but I can only reply that I do not see anything in the excellency of the times which should urge me to move with them. If I saw that in the so-called religious world there was a greater tendency to spiritual worship, I should gladly follow the example; but when I see a growing desire for ceremonial, I cannot forget that God, being a Spirit, cannot be satisfied with anything short of spiritual worship. When I see the attack on the Bible and the desire to secularise the Lord's Day, which show what the spirit of the age is, can anyone zealous for the honour of his God be expected to move with the times? A well-known writer thus places our duty before us, which I heartily endorse: "The first duty of a Christian to Christian truth is to proclaim and maintain it at all times, and in all places, against all opposition, in spite of all persons, in spite of public opinion, in spite of expediency, real or fancied, in spite of all the usual cry of bigotry and intolerance and ignorance." My prayer for you all is that ye be no more children tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive; and my advice to you all is to act as the Bereans did who searched the Scriptures daily whether these things were so, and to accompany this with earnest prayer to the Holy Spirit that He would lead you into all truth.

A WORKING CHURCH.

The annual soirée of the Cowcaddens Free Church congregation, Glasgow, recently took place in the church, when some encouraging facts and figures were presented as to the work of the past five years, under the pastor, Rev. William Ross. During that period a wonderful and ever-increasing work has been going on. A thousand and eighty-nine members have been added to the roll of the church, 239 during the last year. The majority of these are men and women who have been brought to a knowledge of the truth through some of the agencies connected with the church itself, and they are not members in name only.

There are over 400 Christian workers in connection with the church. Three earnest missionaries are employed; one of them has a Bible-class of 430 members. There are the Gospel temperance work, under Mr. D. Campbell; the medical mission, in the care of Dr. Muir Smith; besides Sabbath-schools, infants' classes, several missions, Bible-women, &c. An evangelistic service is held every night, and a staff of experienced workers are there to direct sinners to the Saviour.

AN OPENING FOR LADY WORKERS.—Miss F. H. Smith, of 10, Perran-road, Brixton, S.W., writes: "I have been asked by a friend, who teaches an infant school on the outskirts of Kingston, Jamaica, to try and find two or three ladies willing to start, on premises available close by, a higher school, into which her little scholars could pass when over seven years old, instead of, as is now too generally the case, running wild about the streets. The work of such a school would not be hard, and would leave time and give opportunity for much important mission work among the children's mothers. The place is near the sea, out of the heat of Kingston, and at any rate fairly healthy." Miss Smith, who has herself lived some years in Jamaica, will be glad to give further information to anyone whom this appeal may induce to address inquiries to her.

A BRAVE WORK IN FEZ.

Profiting from a recent visit to Fez, the chief city of Morocco, I take the opportunity to make known a most important, though unpretentious work which is being carried on there. I allude to the missionary efforts of three brave ladies, members of the North Africa Mission, who in that dark Moslem city are the sole witnesses for Christ. Some six days' journey from the nearest fellow-Christians, they live there, their whole time and energy devoted to the Master's work, in a situation which might at any moment become exceedingly dangerous. I should mention that so many obstacles seemed in their way that, with few exceptions, their friends, even their fellow-workers out here, and the Council of the Mission, were strongly opposed to their taking up this arduous and risky task, and I felt with the majority. It was, therefore, only after combating many serious difficulties, that Miss Herdman, the leader of the party, succeeded in obeying what she felt to be a call of duty to her Master, the opposition of Christians who were fearful for the safety of the workers being more formidable than that of all the Moorish authorities, who do not appear yet to have grasped the real object of the Mission.

It is difficult to convey an idea to outsiders in a few words of what it means for unprotected ladies to take up their residence in an inland city in this country, where there are not even any resident Europeans. It may suffice to say that they cannot cross their threshold, unless concealed all except their eyes, by the regulation Moorish ladies' cloak, without being exposed to the bitterest taunts and insults. The women, like the men, have no morals at all, and have to be kept as in prisons, while no woman, making any pretence at good character, would be seen speaking to a man, much less uncover her face before any but the nearest relatives. The very journey by which the city has to be reached is a series of difficulties and dangers, even for robust men.

Well, praise the Lord, there they are, and doing a great work, too; the laughing-stock of the majority of the Europeans in the country, but yet compelling admiration for their courage, and a perplexity to the Moors. It is a great cause for thankfulness that the latter have as yet found no ground to pick a quarrel with them, or to impute any discreditable motive for their presence there. Even if they spoke not a word for Christ beyond saying that the medicines they give were given for his sake, and living Christlike lives, they would still do a great work. The fact is that they carry on a medical mission. Two days in the week they receive all the male patients who like to come, and two days are devoted to female patients, the remaining two week-days and the evenings (for from dusk to dawn their door is shut against all comers, even the servants) being devoted to study of the language and exercise. The number of patients treated is considerable, as many as a hundred being often counted on one day; and their little yard is almost continually packed in dry weather with sufferers who, before having their bodily ailments attended to, have the Gospel preached to them, and listen to Arabic hymns telling the "old, old story." Visits are also made on special occasions to the homes of sufferers who could not come to the house, and many a blessing is bestowed on the Nazarene ladies who would, under ordinary circumstances, be treated as dogs and infidels.

Most Moors are altogether astonished to learn that Christians pray, except a few professionally religious ones, who worship crosses, images, and bread and wine which they call the body and blood of God. They are looked upon as infidels and altogether Godless, and their vices, of which the most reprehensible in the sight of the Moors is drunkenness, are considered to be far worse than those of the Mohammedans. This results from their careful observation of the lives of those so-called "Christians" who form the vast majority of the foreigners with whom they come in contact, and they are not to be blamed for coming to such a conclusion. What is needed is for very many more genuine Christians to settle among them, preferably as private individuals than as proclaimed missionaries, to let their light so shine before them that they may glorify their Father which is in heaven. This these ladies do in an eminent degree, and if they lived the remainder of their lives on earth there without being the direct means of the conversion of one soul to Christ, they would have accomplished a great work.

Of late years the needs of this Empire of Morocco, and the opportunities it presents for Christian work, have come more prominently than ever before under the notice of Christians in other lands, but a vast deal more interest must be aroused, and many hundreds more must come out here to help reclaim this barren waste from the tares which now fill it, ere the demand for labourers will be satisfied. Fez alone offers a field for a goodly number, and the cry from the whole Empire is a deep and bitter one, "Come and help us!"

CONVENTION AT STIRLING.

The managers of the annual Christian Convention, at Stirling, have made a new departure this year, by inviting Major Whittle to undertake the arrangements. Evangelistic work: its Needs, its Methods, and its Results, is the subject chosen, the points being taken up by Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast; Rev. John Macpherson, of Dundee; and Rev. George Wilson, of Edinburgh. Major Whittle will give the concluding address. He will be assisted by his son, Mr. Charles E. Whittle, and Dr. Moxey, and it is hoped that Rev. H. M. Williamson, of Belfast, with a contingent of Christian workers from that city, may be present. Prominent workers in the evangelistic field, from Edinburgh, Glasgow, and elsewhere, will reinforce the friends in Stirling, and take part in the proceedings.

The date chosen is Tuesday, April 30, at 10.30, 2.30, and 8. The Convention will be followed by a ten days' evangelistic mission, Dr. Moxey and Mr. Charles E. Whittle taking part. Major Whittle has been laid aside for ten days, with inflammation of the throat; but is at work again in a two weeks' mission in Aberdeen. Dr. Moxey conducted the mission there and in Dundee during the Major's illness.

REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR is returning home from his visit to China in time to be present at the annual meetings in connection with the twenty-third anniversary of the China Inland Mission, in the Mildmay Conference Hall, on May 30.

GLEANINGS FROM ASIA MINOR.

God is still blessing his Word in this land, and those who are hungering for the bread of life are being "filled." The desire for the Gospel is spreading, and a door stands open for earnest, consecrated workers. True, opposition, too, is to be met with; but shall God's army refuse to press forward on that account?

At Ordoo, a town on the shores of the Black Sea, an evangelical church was formed last June, and numbers have flocked to listen to the Gospel. This raised up many enemies, and the persecution was so severe that for a time all but those really interested ceased to attend the services, although in the cafés and market-place the preaching was a general topic of conversation.

Something had to be done so as to again bring those outside within the sound of the Gospel. Plans were discussed, and much prayer sent up to God about it; so when one of the Christian men suggested turning his shop into a coffee and reading-room, it seemed an indication of God's will. This coffee-room is much used as a meeting-place by the brethren, but on feast days, when it is crowded with strangers, only a few of them go, so as to leave more room. Those who are there speak about Christ, the Bible is much read and talked over, and the pastor writes of sometimes speaking for an hour, the people listening gladly and attentively. The Sunday-school is flourishing, but this also suffers from want of proper accommodation. A marked feature is the interest shown by the women, many of whom are learning to read for the sake of reading their Bibles.

At Biendir, a town near Ephesus, the work progressing, the meetings are well attended, and souls are being saved. In Magnesia, a town twenty miles from Smyrna, many who were hitherto careless about their souls have begun to seek the truth. One man, who a few months ago was aroused to see his lost condition, has yielded himself to Christ, and is so earnest in speaking of Him and his salvation that his father-in-law, with whom he lives, opposed him strongly, even separating him for a time from his wife, but he said: "I would rather suffer anything than deny the truth as it is in Jesus, and lose my soul." He has also been the means of inducing others to attend the services.

A deeply interesting story is that of a man in prison in Magnesia, who had been a robber, and everything that was bad. Wanting something to read one day, another prisoner produced a tract, which he read, and was so interested in it that he sent to the pastor to ask for a Bible, and directions as to how to pray. Intercourse with him is so restricted that it was but little the pastor could do for him, but God has been his teacher, blessing his Word, and using him as a witness among his fellow prisoners. His happiness is great, though he has still some time to spend in this miserable Turkish prison.

So the light is little by little beginning to dawn in this land, where Paul laboured so earnestly, as he here heard the call: "Come over into Macedonia and help us." Some at home may now hear the same call to Asia Minor, where, following in the steps of the Good Shepherd, they would find many a lost sheep, and through Him be the means of bringing it home rejoicing. A. M. S.

DUDLEY.—The new Dock Mission here is making good progress, thanks to the assiduous labours of Mr. Hall and other friends who have so kindly subscribed to the funds. A large number of youths occupy the rooms, reading, and learning to read and write, or engaged in innocent games. Previous to the opening of the Mission these youths had to spend their evenings at the street corners smoking, or acquiring other reprehensible vices, and occasionally giving the shopkeepers and the police a lot of trouble.

FROM WEST CENTRAL AFRICA.

Dear Sir,—You may like to have a little African news regarding Bishop Taylor's Mission. It is a good one, and furnishes plenty of manual labour, which, I presume, every healthy person needs. On January 22 fourteen missionaries landed at Cape Palmas, for Kroo Coast and Cavalla River. I hope they will be spared to labour out here for many years. There are others preparing to come out to the Congo. The Bishop arrived here on the closing days of Conference. He came in his old style, full of the spirit of his Master, willing to spend and be spent in our African work. God has given him a noble charge, Liberia, and the ever dear old Congo, where so many of our East London Institute brethren have been laid beneath the sod.

I have now been labouring in his Mission for two years, and hope to spend another two. Bishop Taylor is a father to his boys (or men). We only want to see and hear him once to love him. I am now stationed at Cavalla River. During my two years on Kroo Coast I have preached upwards of 200 times amongst the poor heathen, besides little prayer-meetings and class-meetings. I have held upwards of forty preaching services in civilised towns, and had the pleasure of seeing sometimes three and four out at a time seeking salvation. There is also daily conversation with visitors from town. There has been farm work besides, about three acres of ground being under cultivation.

This is a rough sketch of what we do in the self-supporting Mission. For two years I have laboured alone, and a happy two years it has been. There is no likelihood of my having a helper this year, as there are some stations waiting to be manned. If friends of our Mission would like to cheer us in our work, let them send some nice literature to us, and some pretty picture-books to interest our dear black boys. Above all, pray for us.

Yours in Christ, John R. Ellery.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE,

LISSON GROVE.

In a club-room behind the "Blackbird" coffee-tavern, Church-street, Lisson Grove, a Working Lads' Club is carried on with such promise that a larger Institute is in contemplation. The new premises, to be used for lads only, will consist of dormitories, class-rooms, reading-room, gymnasium, &c., and will be worked with the coffee-tavern. In connection with the "Blackbird" a number of useful agencies are carried on. The work of the Portman Market Mission, so long carried on under Miss Packe, is now removed there. In addition to two city missionaries, who make it their head-quarters, two mission nurses are employed for visiting and attending upon the sick and suffering poor of the district.

Further information as to the working of the Mission, or particulars about the "Working Lads' Institute," will be gladly supplied by Mr. A. F. Buxton, 5, Hyde Park-street, W.

THE SECRET OF THE GENUINE HIGHER LIFE is simply living nigh to God—on the Sabbath in God's house, and through the week in our own houses and places of business. It is keeping our citizenship in heaven, and our eyes above the wretched mists that lie near the ground, and our hearts in close touch with Christ. They that thus wait on God out-fly the petty vexations that worry the worldling, and the grovelling cares and lusts that drag selfish sinners down into the mire. Living nigh to Him whom their souls love in this world, they need not spend a thought about dying. Being always ready to exchange their home with God which they found here, for a higher home in heaven, they have nothing to do but to enter the door of pearl as soon as it opens, and go in to be for ever with the Lord.—Dr. Cuyler.

THE GOSPEL IN ITALY.

The eighteenth evangelisation report of the Free Christian Church in Italy tells a deeply interesting story. The loss of Signor Gavazzi is naturally mourned at the outset, but the record which follows, of work done by the younger men, upon whom under God the future of Gospel effort in the country will now depend, is full of hope. During the year several new fields have been occupied, and, generally speaking, the experience of Signor Conti, of Rome, has an all-round application. He says, "Roses and thorns, joys and sorrows, hopes and disappointments, triumphs and failures, are our daily experience. Satan knows that his time is short, and redoubles his efforts to hinder the progress of the truth."

Persecutions often await those who declare for Christ in Italy, yet there is a disposition to hear, especially among the middle classes and shop-keepers. At Bergamo, where the work is confined to the humbler classes; everything has to be done with the greatest precaution, in order to prevent underhand persecution and the dismissal of workmen, who are known to favour the Gospel. On this account there is probably no city in Italy in which there are so many who walk in the way of Nicodemus. At Florence the Gospel is spoken of with respect by the people who lend an attentive ear to the preachers. A revival which shall remove all timidity and dread of the consequences of confessing Christ, is being anxiously and confidently prayed for. In Genoa there has been an awakening of interest, and the mass of the people hold that truth is on the side of the evangelicals. Signor Borgia, of Milan, reports the conversion of a priest, a man of ability and high character.

At Rome the word of the Gospel is listened to with attention, although the number of conversions does not correspond with the earnest longings of the labourers. Some of the conversions have been especially interesting. "An old unbeliever," says Signor Conti, "joining in our service, was seized with envy of our hope and joy in Jesus. He returned regularly; the Spirit of God touched his heart, and the cry of the jailer of Philippi burst from his lips: 'What must I do to be saved?' A poor old superstitious woman waited at the close of the service one day to thank me with tears for the gracious words she had heard, which had led her to the Saviour. A young man of idle and vicious life was interested, convinced, moved to repentance, and accepted Christ." The commercial crisis has not extinguished the spirit of self-sacrifice, nor have persecutions been successful in preventing some from boldly coming out for Christ. The church at Venice, one of the youngest in Italy, is bearing a good testimony. Several priests have communicated to Signor Bernatto their desire to leave the Roman Catholic Church, but they have not yet had the courage to unfrock themselves.

The report of the evangelical schools, in connection with the Free Christian Church, also contains much that is cheering. Considering the obstacles and difficulties, it is surprising that there is an evangelical school at all in Rome, but we are thankful to observe that a really good work is being maintained in the city. At Florence, Naples, Turin, Venice, and Leghorn, brave endeavours are being carried on, the young instructed in the Bible, as well as otherwise educated.

Both these interesting reports are signed by Rev. John R. McDougall, Scotch Church, Florence, honorary treasurer and secretary of the Evangelisation Committee. We trust the reports will induce many new friends to support this very good and promising work.

MR. G. H. PEMBER will give four addresses in prophetic exposition in Edinburgh on May 7, 8, 9, and 10, in the Freemasons' Hall.

BLIND MISSIONARY IN MANCHURIA.

By Miss C. F. GORDON CUMMING.

There is a certain wood in the north of Scotland which has to me a very special charm, both for its own sake, and for the analogy which it always suggests with certain great truths in the spiritual world relating to the growth of the kingdom of heaven.

Just a quarter of a century ago there was brought to a garden near that wood, a plant of blue forget-me-nots, transplanted from a distant part of England. The little exile took so kindly to its new soil that in a very few years its seeds found their way to the neighbouring glen, where they found congenial nestling-places all along the banks of a streamlet, whence they spread in every direction, till now the ground is carpeted with their luxuriant growth, and in the sweet summer time the shady wood is blue with the lovely blossoms. And all this beauty has been derived from one small seedling transplanted from its early home.

On the verge of the wood lives a certain miller, whose sons have found their respective life-work in far-distant corners of the earth. One of these is at the present moment the only representative of the United Presbyterian Mission at Moukden,* a town of 250,000 inhabitants in Manchuria, his colleagues being temporarily invalided. In that vast famine-stricken district this solitary worker is left absolutely alone amongst the surrounding millions of heathen—a position which might well discourage the stoutest heart.

Yet are there gleams of wonderful promise to cheer one who can remember the spreading of the blue flowerets through the wood in the old country, and none is more remarkable than the work already done by a poor blind man, himself one of the early converts.

This man, Ch'ang, a member of the most devout and spiritual sect of the Taoists, having been suddenly stricken with blindness, and having heard of the skill of the foreign teachers in the Medical Mission of Moukden, made his way thither from his mountain village of Tai-Ping-k'ou, to inquire whether they were able to restore his sight. This they failed to do, but the good words which he heard while under their care sank deep into his heart; and, when the time came for him to return to his home, he asked to be admitted to Christian baptism.

With what seems an excess of caution, his teacher required a further time of probation, and dismissed him, promising soon to visit him in his own village. But in the multitude of cares and pressure of work, six months elapsed ere it was found possible to redeem this promise; and when at length Mr. Webster started in search of the village, he found he had far to travel over mountains and swamps, but in all the villages through which he passed the name of Blind Ch'ang was evidently familiar, and was recognised respectfully.

At last he reached the village he sought, when to his surprise he was received as a long-looked-for guest. "Ch'ang always maintained that you would come," said Mr. Li, the village schoolmaster, in a manner which clearly proved how many had scoffed at the blind man's faith in his friend's promise. Then he heard that Ch'ang was even then engaged in the work which had been his daily occupation ever since his return from Moukden, namely, that of travelling to all the hamlets scattered over the mountains (by those steep paths which the man endowed with sight had found so trying), that he might tell to all who would listen the tidings of salvation, which had gladdened his own soul.

"At first," said Mr. Li, "they thought he was mad, but when they noted the holiness of his life some hated and cursed him, but others gave heed to his words," and the result was that no less than fifteen persons were anxiously awaiting the coming of the Christian teacher.

Presently blind Ch'ang returned, and his joy on hearing of his friend's arrival was most pathetic. Tears dropped from his sightless eyes, as he exclaimed, "O Pastor, I always said you would come!" Very quickly messengers were despatched by Ch'ang to various villages, whence his converts soon arrived, and one by one, in the simplest language, gave expression to a faith so unmistakably genuine that on the morrow nine of them, headed by blind Ch'ang, received that baptism which all fully recognised as the outward symbol of a faith exposing those who profess it to the chance of persecution even unto death.

It now occurred to Mr. Webster that it was worth a very great effort to send Ch'ang all the way to Peking to be taught in Mr. Murray's school for the blind. When the idea was suggested to Ch'ang he deemed it an utterly incredible fable that any sightless person could possibly be taught to read with his finger-tips, and even to write. However, he consented to try, and so started on the long voyage across the Gulf of Pehchili, and thence by boat up the Peiho, taking with him a sickly blind lad, whose friends wished him also to be taught.

This lad proved a failure (at that time) being so delicate that most of his time was spent in the mission hospital. But Ch'ang himself acquired the arts of reading and writing fluently within two months, as also the rudiments of music, and proved in every respect so attractive a student that Mr. Murray would fain have kept him for a complete course of study.

But the care of the sick lad weighed heavily on his blind friend, who was anxious to restore him to his family. Moreover, he said he longed to return to his villages, where all were still heathen, that he might read the Gospels and teach the people. So he was provided with copies of the books stereotyped by the blind students, and now Mr. Murray hears that he is earnestly engaged in ceaselessly reading to all who will listen, and that the delicate blind lad is his constant and devoted companion. Thanks to his invention of tin tubes as the envelope wherein pages of embossed writing can travel safely through the post, Mr. Murray has already received several pleasant letters from this excellent pupil, and is able to keep up a regular communication with him, as with many another.

Thus once again are we shown how often God chooses the weak things of the earth as his instruments for working out his holy purpose, and for the spread of his glorious truth. Yet it is evident that such pioneers as Ch'ang must be reinforced and supported by the foreign teachers, who can keep a guiding hand and act as chief shepherds of the flock.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WINCHESTER.—Another year of joys and sorrows, disappointments and encouragements, is briefly reviewed in the eleventh annual report of this excellent evangelistic work. The year was one of decided progress in the work of the Mission; friends and workers have increased in number, and much spiritual blessing has followed upon the free teas and other agencies employed to get at the hearts of the soldiers. Friends of the work may help in several ways, particulars of which may be had from Miss Louisa Perks, Soldiers' Home, Hyde-street, Winchester.

THE SURGICAL AID SOCIETY, which exists for the supply of mechanical supports to the afflicted poor, continues to do a good work. The twenty-sixth annual report, just published, states that 7884 patients were relieved during last year. It is impossible to look through the report without being impressed with the great need for such a Society, which, enjoying the hearty support of philanthropists, assists thousands of adults and children who would otherwise be weakly and helpless throughout life. The secretary of the Society is Mr. William Tressider, Salisbury-square, Fleet-street, E.C.

LONDON BUTCHERS' FESTIVAL.

On Tuesday, last week, the butchers of London, to the number of 800, were entertained to tea at Exeter Hall, after the manner of the well-known feasts of former years with which the name of Mr. Henry Varley is associated. Though not so large as the companies which in years gone by have been entertained at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, this was still a very mixed assemblage. The attendance of friends was not large. The men seemed heartily to appreciate the arrangement whereby, after kindly provision had been made for the needs of the body, Christian friends improved the occasion of speaking of Him who is the bread from heaven and the way to life eternal.

The chair was occupied by Mr. J. D. Link, for whom the men showed hearty regard. In the course of a brief statement, Mr. J. Sayers, hon. sec., reviewed the festival movement from the first, remarking that some are to-day praising God for blessing received at meetings held many years ago. The chairman's address was sympathetic and practical. He spoke of his long acquaintance with the precincts of Smithfield Market, and went on to urge the men's acceptance of a friend's earnest advice to find present joy and hope for eternity in Christ the Saviour.

Mr. Edward Wright followed with some words of kindly counsel; after which Mr. George Nokes made a vigorous speech. He urged the butchers to keep away from the public-house, and with all their getting to get the eternal life which is in Christ. Mr. E. B. Hart dwelt upon several evils and sources of misery. Referring to the question of betting, which is still sadly too prevalent, he showed its great folly, and recommended the men to place any surplus money they may have in the Post-office Savings Bank. Alluding to swearing, he remarked that, though not so common as it once was, it still exists as a depraving habit, more or less throughout the country.

Mr. D. Elliott attacked the pipe, and was attentively listened to while he asked his hearers to cease from the smoking habit.

Mr. John Short, having spoken of the folly of infidelity, the proceedings were brought to a close. There was an interesting musical programme, the splendidly rendered solos of Miss Josephine Simon being specially enjoyed. As the men left the hall, they were presented with a packet of books and tracts, the gift of friends of the movement.

THE FISHERMEN'S CHRISTIAN COUNCIL is an excellent agency carried on in connection with the United Methodist Free Church, Gorleston. All fishermen joining receive a "friendly letter from home" once a week. It is hoped that by this means anxious inquirers will he directed to Christ and also that Christian council will be given to such as may need it. The object is good, and we trust it will be attained to the blessing of not a few toilers on the sea. Letters and donations in aid may be sent to Rev. A. J. Mahomet, 23, Stradbroke-road, Gorleston, Yarmouth.

WIDOWS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—The object of this institution is to render assistance to widows residing within a radius of three miles of St. Paul's. The aim being to foster self-help, the grants are applied for the most part towards the purchase of sewing-machines, mangles, and other industrial utensils. Pensions of £5 are also granted to a limited number of aged Christian widows. The eighty-first annual meeting of the supporters of the Society was held a few days ago at Wellington Hall, Upper-street, Islington, when the secretary, Mr. Kenchington, reported that during the year 145 cases were considered and grants made to most of them. The beneficent operation of the Society was attested in hearty addresses by Rev. W. Nelson Winn, Mr. George Holland, Dr. Thain Davidson, and others, including Rev. W. H. Barlow, vicar of Islington, who presided.

THE McALL MISSION, PARIS.

THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

On May 5 the great "world's fair" will be opened. The preparations are on a gigantic scale, and many thousands from all parts of the world will be flocking to Paris to see the great sight. We are endeavouring to make some provision for the spiritual needs of the visitors who will shortly be coming to this city. Two Salles Evangéliques are being prepared outside two of the chief entrances to the Exhibition, and in these buildings we shall work in connection with the Evangelical Alliance, the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Religious Tract Societies of London and Paris, and The Monthly Tract Society.

The larger of the two Salles is situated at 31, Avenue Rapp, opposite the Porte Rapp of the Exhibition (on the left bank of the Seine). It will hold some 300 or more people. It is entered through a châlet, or vestibule, which will form the depôt for the Bible and Tract Societies, &c. Here we shall hope to hold two meetings daily in French (probably at five and at eight o'clock) and also a daily meeting in English for prayer and addresses. The attendance of all Christian friends visiting Paris is earnestly requested, that we may be helped and cheered by their presence. There will be also services held on Sunday morning in connection with the English church of the Rue d'Aguesseau. Besides these meetings, others will doubtless be arranged as the time goes on. We have the promise of the help of Messrs. Fullerton and Smith during the month of September. Then in the smaller hall, No. 2, Place du Trocadéro, we hope to have a daily meeting in French, and possibly English meetings may be held there also.

These efforts are, of course, additional to the work of the thirty stations of the McAll Mission in Paris, and of the fourteen stations outside the city but worked from the centre, not to mention the eighty-two other stations in the provinces. To overtake this heavy additional work, we hope to have the help of many friends from the provinces, and also from Switzerland, as well as the assistance of the pastors and friends in Paris, so far as they are able to afford it. Dr. Henry J. Benham, one of the directors of the McAll Mission, has kindly undertaken the general supervision of these two Salles Evangéliques, and any desiring more information about this work are requested to communicate with him, 14, Rue de Siam, Passy, Paris.

All friends coming to Paris should make themselves acquainted with the different Christian works going on in this vast city. The offices of the McAll Mission are at 28, Villa Molitor, Auteuil, Paris, where contributions may also be forwarded for the heavy expenses of this special effort. W. Soltau.

LONDON WEST CENTRAL MISSION.—Good Friday was the occasion of special services, which throughout were well attended, and productive of much blessing. At noon Rev. Mark Guy Pearse conducted a service in Princes Hall, Piccadilly. At three o'clock, a real Methodist love-feast was held in Wardour Hall, conducted by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. After Mr. Hughes and Mr. Josiah Nix had spoken, all sorts and conditions of men and women told their experience of the love and power of God. Many of them had found Christ through the Mission's agency. At a social tea, after the service, Mr. Nix was presented with a life-size framed oil painting of himself, the presentation being made by Mr. Hughes on behalf of Mr. Nix's Bible-class of 200 men. The meeting in Princes Hall, in the evening, was addressed by Mr. Hughes and Mr. Pearse. The building was quite full, hundreds being unable to obtain admission.

Northern Light.

There is much interest in the North regarding the new Balolo Mission. Mr. James Todd, of Moffat, who, with other seven missionaries, has set out for the Congo, had a largely attended farewell meeting, all the local ministers taking part in the proceedings.

A startling statement has been made recently by a well-known Glasgow minister to the Free Church Presbytery. He says that 90 per cent. of our criminals were once Sabbath-school children. As far as boys are concerned, the Boys' Brigade is proving to be the missing link, but, as yet, girls have no institution which bridges over their gap. Who will be the originator of a scheme for retaining our girls?

Someone, moved to pity by the story of the famine in China, dropped a gold ring into the collection plate at the West Free Church of Helensburgh, the Brighton of Scotland.

The women of Edinburgh and Leith are signing a petition to the Queen and Parliament for the Government inspection of nunneries.

The conditions under which the Glasgow East-end poor live haunt Dr. Underwood, the American consul, day and night. He thinks it a dark blot on the city, and says if he belonged to Glasgow, and were only twenty years younger, he would put every consideration aside, and, putting on the working man's clothes, try to lift up the hundred thousand wretched people of that grim quarter. Dr. Underwood feels strongly, and speaks out of a full heart.

An association in the interests of domestic servants has been started in Edinburgh. Its object is obvious—to raise funds from which members may, in want, sickness, or old age, receive aids or annuities. Three shillings a year is to be the subscription for members, but it is thought employers will provide the bulk of the funds, at least such as know the value of a good servant. In many houses an old servant is an honoured friend.

Forfarshire Christian Union has only existed one year, but through its instrumentality great good has been done in half a dozen neighbouring places.

Dr. Pentecost is steadily winning the hearts of business men. Recently a remark of his at their mid-day meeting went home so sure that a general burst of applause followed. He is holding his evening meetings now in Dennistoun, to the east of Glasgow.

Communication with lonely St. Kilda has been opened up by a smack sent out by the factor with seed corn and potatoes. It seems that a split in the church has been the cause of social chaos in the island all the winter. The ruling elder had a dispute with the minister's housekeeper; all the families but three took the elder's part and left the church in November. The minister sides with the housekeeper and means to leave the island with her and her relatives in summer. Luke North.

Throat Hospital, Golden-square, W.—Mr. W. C. Minifie, 22, Richmond-terrace, Clapham, S.W., who visits this hospital, appeals for good, interesting books, which the patients might read. Parcels should be addressed to Mr. Minifie, at the hospital.

The Stockwell Reciter. Edited by Vernon J. Charlesworth. A collection of old and new favourites, for the home, the school, and the Band of Hope. Designed to furnish boys and girls with recitations and dialogues of an interesting and instructive character, the collection embraces many varieties of composition, uniformly and throughout perfectly wholesome in character. Seven numbers (32 pages) have been issued at a penny each; and one part (192 pages) at 6d. We wish success to this praiseworthy venture of the respected Head Master of the Stockwell Orphanage. MAJOR WHITTLE IN ABERDEEN.

After three weeks' work in Dundee, Major Whittle, accompanied by his son, and Dr. and Mrs. Moxey, came to Aberdeen for a fortnight's mission. The Major, who had been laid aside with severe sore throat for some days, was able for full work by the middle of the week. In the interval, Dr. Moxey did splendid service. The workers' meeting on Sabbath morning, when 600 to 700 were present, was a most helpful and stirring service. In the same place — Y.M.C.A. Hall — in the afternoon, Mr. Charles Whittle gave personal testimony to the grace of God, and a rousing appeal to a large gathering of men.

The Music-Hall was crowded in the evening, when Dr. Moxey was listened to with marked attention, in the delivery of an earnest and solemn message. On Monday and Tuesday also the Doctor presided with much acceptance and with tokens of the Divine favour. Wednesday and Thursday saw the Major, heart and soul aglow with the Divine afflatus. We are having precious times, and are assured of "great and mighty things." C. S.

OBITUARY.

MRS. GODFREY, OF BOREHAM WOOD.

This earnest Christian worker, formerly of Hackney, but for the past three years residing at Boreham Wood, near Elstree, Hertfordshire, has just entered into rest. She carried on a very active little work for the Lord among the people of the village, holding meetings in her own house for the preaching of the Gospel and the instruction of young Christians. Quite a number of souls have been blessed through her instrumentality. Death peacefully ensued upon an illness of only two or three days, from heart disease. Mr. J. W. Godfrey, governor of Dr. Barnardo's Village Home for Girls, Ilford, thus loses a devoted mother.

MR. GEORGE STOTT, CHINA MISSIONARY.

We record with deep sorrow the loss of this much-esteemed Chinese missionary, at Cannes. Writing on Sunday last Mr. Cheyne Brady says:—

"Mr. Stott passed away triumphantly this morning. All last night he gradually weakened in body, but his spirit was strong and firmly fixed on Christ. He gradually sank, but there was not much struggle, and he peacefully sighed away his spirit, at half past six. He looks so calm, peaceful, and serene. It is, indeed, joy to think of his entrance into the joy and presence of his Lord and Master whom he served and loved. His dear wife has been most wondrously sustained all through his very trying illness."

Another friend writes with respect to Mr. Stott: "We desire to add our testimony to that of many others, in bearing witness to the blessed influence he had over those among whom he stayed during the past eighteen months since his return to England. Days and nights of weariness and suffering were appointed to him; and although for nearly two years he has been unable, owing to the difficulty of breathing, to lie down and take a night's rest, yet his bright spirit and child-like confidence in all the will of God concerning him seem never to have been clouded for a moment. His heart's desire was to return to China, where he laboured for more than twenty years, and greatly will he be missed by those native Christians, so many of whom he was made the honoured instrument in leading to the Saviour."

FRENCH IN LONDON.—The Duchess of Albany will open, on Wednesday, May 15, the annual Sale of Work, to be held in the Town Hall, Kensington, in aid of the mission to the French in London, connected with the church under the pastorate of Rev. J. Du Pontet de la Harpe.

MR. WILLIAM CHORLEY, director of the North East London Gospel Mission, writes:—"We are sorely pressed to find a few more workers, especially Sunday-school teachers, for our Ragged Sunday-school at Somerset Hall, 205, Devons-road, Bow Common. I hope some of your readers living in East London may be able to lend a helping hand on Sunday afternoons, at 2.45."

THE WORKING OF ERROR.

A LADY engaged as governess in a girls' orphanage, who has closely watched the effect of High Church teaching, writes:—

The practice of the confessional is an abominable farce, and worse. Four of our girls and two young servants, all under eighteen years of age, are communicants, and have to go to confession every month before "receiving." They do confess little things that no one thinks much about; but sins that they are really ashamed of they say nothing about to their confessor. One girl was kept away from communion because she, at evening prayers, laid before God the real needs of her own heart, instead of using the book provided for the purpose. Another was asked questions that could only be suggestive of wrong-doing.

Penance is imposed sometimes, and it often takes the form of having to read certain Psalms, thus making a punishment of what should be a delight. Girls and young servants come from homes where they have been under evangelical influence, and are as soon as possible put under preparation for confirmation; and after that, all unknown to their friends or relatives, they are sent to confession.

They are taught to consider everyone outside the High Church party as heretics. One child has not been allowed to see brother and sister, because they belonged to the Church Army. Practical Christian charity outside their own party seems a thing unknown.

The highest attainment in spiritual life (?) is seclusion, and the only people to whom a holy life is possible are "sisters," &c., who spend the greater part of their time in meditation. Of course, confession is alluded to in a guarded way. Never once have I heard it mentioned openly in church; it is instilled privately. Some time ago there was a whole course of sermons preached to prove that "evening," or even "un-fasting," communion was a sin.

After the prayer of consecration the "priest" bows his head to the ground three times before the bread and wine, infringing the injunctions of the Prayer-book. They do rejoice in conscious pardon and peace, but through what? Christ's offering on Calvary? No, but through Christ's body and blood offered on their altar by their "priest"!

What is the difference between these High Churchmen and the Church of Rome? I fail to see any, except the invocation of saints, and even that is done in some sisterhoods. Sympathy with the High Church seems very like sympathy shown by a lamb towards a wolf which is waiting to devour it. It is not a question of "prejudices," but of vital "principles," which the heroes and martyrs of the Reformation thought worth dying for, and which the High Church party are avowedly doing their utmost to throw over. They, as well as we, are looking for another Reformation struggle, and they say they are going to "knock us over like a stack of stubble," because we have "no one at our back;" but we know we have the "Captain of the Lord's host!"

The effect of this teaching on children's minds must be obvious. The Lord has enabled me to counteract much of it in individuals, yet it is but a drop in the sea. I enclose my name and full particulars in confidence, and with gratitude for many blessings and much help through THE CHRISTIAN.

PRESIDENT HARRISON, says an American paper, holds family prayers in the White House every morning. At half-past seven o'clock the family assembles in the library, where General Harrison reads a chapter in the Bible which he explains in a few words. The Lord's prayer is then repeated by the entire family, and the exercises end. It has always been the custom for the Harrisons to have morning family worship, and their occupancy of the White House will not interrupt the custom.

CAN THE BELIEVER BE LOST?

We have to thank the writers of several communications on the question whether a soul once saved can ever be lost. We have, on the one hand, the Saviour's own assurance (John x.) that his sheep shall never perish, and that no one is able to pluck them out of his Father's hand. John says that some "went out from us [e.g., Judas], because they were not all of us." Peter shows that such were never changed in heart; and the dog returned to his vomit, and the sow to her mire. On the other hand, there are many passages which, to some, seem to intimate that a believer may fall away and be lost.

We must believe the express words of Jesus; but they do not warrant us in asserting the safety of anyone who lives in sin. For who are the sheep of Christ? They who hear and know his voice, and follow Him (John x.). "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are sons of God." "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

The discussion as to the assured safety of the saints is, after all, more theoretical than practical: for who are the saints? They are such as are described above. No one doubts that these will be saved. But if any man turn back, neither disputant can assert that he will be saved, for he may die impenitent; or that he will be lost, for he may repent. "The Lord knoweth them that are his." He may be a Peter or a Judas. We can only judge by present fruits. If any are not led by the Spirit of God, we have no right to say they are sons of God.

A Calvinist and an Arminian church would both deal in the same way with one who had gone back to the world, whatever their theory might be as to his final salvation.

We have pleasure in inserting the following from the Rev. John Hawker, whose work at Stafford Rooms many remember with gratitude and affection:—

MY DEAR SIR,—I believe firmly in the final preservation of the saints; but the Calvinistic theory, adopted as a cold, cut-and-dried system, has supported many in Antinomianism, although it has also, when spiritually accepted, produced a very opposite effect. "Abiding in Christ" is really the secret of the whole thing. "I am (or have been) crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20).

Scripture abounds in caution and warning as to danger; in precept as to life; in assurance that "underneath are the everlasting arms"; in words of welcome to the returning penitent; and there are living words to those who abide in the living Christ. Thus it is that "He that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life" (John v. 24). There can be no witness of the Holy Spirit except Christ's words abide in us. This is the security; and if a man professing godliness does not recognise the change in his Father's countenance when he allows himself in sin, I could not say that he was "abiding in Christ." We know what God has decided in the case of such as say, "Let us continue in sin that grace may abound"—"whose damnation is just." The Scylla and Charybdis in the matter are, on the one side, a crude notion that, do what we will, we are safe in the predestination of God; and on the other, taking self so much into account that the estimate of our hold on Christ prevails over the assurance of his hold of us.

Yours sincerely in Christ,
JOHN HAWKER.

MR. HENRY SMITH, JUN., has completed a second successful mission at Wingate, and is now engaged at Haswell.

ROMISH MORALITY.

Rome shall speak for herself on this point; we will not, for our pen would never dare to write of her what she writes for herself. Her theological corruption is receiving continued proof and illustration now, as it has done for centuries, and a most marked instance of this is the following: A few years ago a Romish Canon at Orleans sternly rebuked a Paris publisher for issuing catalogues of obscene books. The bookseller's ready reply was to this effect: "You are simply condemning those who engage as amateurs in that which you yourselves do as adepts and proficients." He thereupon added another to his descriptive catalogues of works of the foulest and most objectionable character, written by Romish clerics, varying from priests through all the dignitaries, right up to some of the occupants of the Papal chair! If the list itself is unclean and hurtful, what must not the works themselves be? Yet we hear of no Index Expurgatorius for these vile books, many of which have been published again and again, and translated into different languages.

And let each of our readers remember that the motto of the Romish Church is Semper Eadem; that their morals are the teaching of their so-called infallible priesthood; that, therefore, by parity of reasoning, what her oracles once give forth she can never alter, never recall, and specially so when he who speaks or writes, whether of impurity or aught else, is a Pope of Rome who claims to be—oh, monstrous blasphemy!—the very vice-Christ upon earth, and personally and absolutely infallible.

Yet a step further: What about the direct teaching of Rome on morals? Let our readers who desire to be truthfully informed (and, in these days of her renewed arrogance and continuous workings to bring our land once again under her cruel yoke, it is of first importance all should be so informed) purchase one of Rome's handbooks on the confessional; find out what her authorised writers teach on morals, such as Alphonse Liguori, Emanuel de Saa, who states in his aphorisms that adultery and other iniquities "did not make a priest irregular, whereas marriage did," and others; then they will be in a position to say whether any cleric of that apostate church has the right to come forward publicly to appear to advocate that purity which the Word of God commands, but which they systematically deny both in teaching and practice.

Our words may seem strong, but they are as water in comparison to the truth. Would that our people might wake up throughout the length and breadth of England, to take pains to know and to spread true statements of what Rome is and has been, that so their sons and daughters may be kept from the net spread for them and from the fatal results of ignorance which has been the cause of so many perversions to that false church.

MR. G. HEFFORD, of the Evangelisation Society, has lately held a fortnight's mission at the Congregational Chapel, Esher-street, Kennington, and a fortnight's mission at the Congregational Hall, Earlsfield, with encouraging results. He began a mission at Birmingham on April 21.

MR. OSCAR OWERS has held a series of Bible-readings in connection with the Newcastle Y.M.C.A. The afternoons were devoted to meetings for Christians, and in the evening he gave a course of readings entitled, "Bible Checks on the Down Grade." It is believed that much good has resulted from the visit of the evangelist to Newcastle.

MR. WALTER NOTMAN, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fortnight's services at Pontypridd, S. Wales. It was a united effort of the English causes of the town. It has proved, by the Lord's blessing, a means of much good, having stirred up the professing people of God, besides leading many to seek the Saviour. Special meetings for men, women, and children were held at different times, also a prayer-meeting at noon each day. This meeting for prayer is still being carried on. Mr. Notman is now conducting services at Llancarvan, in the Vale of Glamorgan.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

DAVID'S EXPERIENCE.

The following communications are in answer to the question recently asked with reference to David's experience, as given in Ps. xxxvii. 25: "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." "E. M. E." requested personal testimony in corroboration.

Dear Sir,—David's words very much impressed me when quite young. I was on a visit to Scotland to my grandfather, who, one morning, on reading Ps. xxxvii. at family worship, paused at ver. 25, and, laying his hand on my shoulder, said, before all present:—"Now, lassie, remember that is your grandfather's experience, and if you live to be an old woman it will be yours." This I can truly verify, as I am now in my seventy-sixth year; and, though I have lost all I had, yet I can testify how the Lord has upheld and sustained me, though at times in great straits. He has never suffered his faithfulness to fail, and never will. M. M'A.

Dear Sir,—I can perfectly corroborate David's words. I will mention one instance of the righteous not being forsaken. There is a very poor old woman whom I now visit who has to depend entirely upon God for everything. She is paralysed in body, and quite unable to earn a livelihood. Her testimony is that the faithful God never permits her to need anything, and that He always proves Himself to be as good as his word. M. E. R.

Dear Sir,—I should like to give a testimony which came under my notice fifteen years ago. The late Rev. C. J. Whitmore, Presbyterian minister, when pastor of a church at Millwall, stated that, during a season of much distress and want in that locality, a gentleman friend gave him £100 to divide amongst any of the Lord's own who might be found wanting bread. After prayerful and diligent search, however, he could not find one such really in need, and consequently the £100 was returned untouched.—Yours,

Henry Haswell, Evangelist.

Dear Sir,—For about seventeen years I have engaged in workhouse visiting, and I have met several of the heirs of the kingdom in the sick wards there. I have for several years been careful to inquire of different classes of people as to how they came to seek the workhouse shelter. Only once have I heard those who professed to believe in Christ declare that the way in which they had been led had not been the very best way. In the exceptional case referred to, further inquiry made it abundantly clear that the blame was with the man, and not with God. W. C.

Sir,—Allow me to direct attention to the fact that the "righteous" man is in some degree defined in the succeeding verse thus: "He is ever merciful, and lendeth; and his seed is blessed." Here we have, it seems to me, the fact which justifies full confidence in God to provide for our children. We must not overlook the benediction: "Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in the time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him, and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth" (Ps. xli. 1, 2). Thus, it seems, those who, by giving to the poor, "lend unto the Lord," may be repaid in some measure even in the present life.

The Psalmist delighted in testifying to God's remembrance of those who seek Him (Ps. ix. 10; xxxvii. 28). He says, "Trust in the Lord, and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed" (Ps. xxxvii. 3—5). Under the old covenant, when there was less, though no less definite, spiritual light than we enjoy to-day, God's mercy and love were more distinctly attested in the present life than they sometimes are now. There is, however, good reason to believe that the cases of sufferers by exceptional want and distress, "of whom the world was not worthy," abundantly prove the precious rule that God's providence runs still on the same gracious lines. We often suffer affliction for our chastening; and if assured of heavenly food, and possessed of riches in heaven, happy are we even then!

John Bunyan thanked God, and so may we, for the following grand testimony of the son of Sirach, in the Apocryphal book called Ecclesiasticus: "Look at the generations of old, and see; did ever any trust in the Lord, and was confounded? or did any abide in his fear, and was forsaken? or whom did He ever despise, that called upon Him?" This was the glorious experience of the pious in Israel. Ours is perhaps more emphatically a dispensation of pilgrimage with its difficulties, but in this matter, as in others, the word stands true, "According to your faith, be it done unto you." John Mason was surely right when he declared "God's providence fulfils his promises."

J. W. T.

Another correspondent sends us Dr. Adam Clarke's comment on Ps. xxxvii. 25, as follows: "I believe this to be literally true in all cases. I am now grey-headed myself; I have travelled in different countries, and have had many opportunities of seeing and conversing with religious people in all situations of life; and I have not, to my knowledge, seen one instance to the contrary. I have seen no righteous man forsaken, nor any of his children begging their bread. God puts honour upon all that fear Him; and thus careful is He of them and their posterity."

Letter to the Editor.

THE UNEMPLOYED.

Sir,—It has been said that "the man who makes two blades of grass grow where only one grew before is a benefactor." But it is possible to do even more than that, yea, to produce abundance where never a single blade grew before. I will go yet further and say that the most luxurious growth, the sweetest perfumes and luscious fruits may be produced from what is considered exceedingly unpromising and barren soil, by cultivation. If so, then the trust committed to us by our heavenly Father remains unfulfilled, while such lands are lying in a state of barrenness and waste.

Again, the result of cultivation would mean employment for the multitudes, food and raiment for the hungry and naked; also an improved social, moral, and religious condition of our suffering brethren. Probably there was never more zeal manifested towards the spiritual interests of the people than now, and there is none too much. May God grant that this fervour will increase more and more. But are we not taught by our blessed Lord to care for the bodies as well as the souls of men?

I have been for some time very powerfully impressed that the great social question, "What to do with the unemployed?" should be earnestly dealt with by Christian people to the utmost of their ability, setting aside all minor religious notions and political differences.

About two years ago, being inspired with this feeling of sympathy, I went to some of the principal places in my native county, and had an interview with several leading ministers of religion with a view to enlisting their sympathies on behalf of the unemployed; but for the most part they seemed to think such a matter was altogether outside the circle of their duty. One, however (a Congregational minister), I found to be in full sympathy with my effort, and he most cheerfully presided at one of my meetings, when I told my "story of an acre and a half," showing what had been done by myself with a small plot of waste land, I being blessed with a family of thirteen children.

I am glad to learn that Rev. F. B. Meyer, is taking this very important matter in hand, and sincerely pray that success may attend his efforts. Why not establish "Christian Labour Colonies" wheresoever practicable? If such a scheme is laid clearly before our wealthy Christian people, they would most heartily join in giving of their abundance to start such centres of industry and enterprise, which would afford ample employment for the many, and would also, ere long, become self-supporting.

It is the earnest hope of the writer to be able, in the extreme West of England, to establish a "Christian Labour Colony."

Yours faithfully, J. H. Boddy.

EAST-END THEATRICALS.—Between five and six hundred responded to the invitation of the Committee for arranging Special Religious Services in Theatres to the eleventh annual social gathering of the East and South-east London theatres and music-halls, which took place in the Shoreditch Town Hall on Good Friday. Mr. George Williams again acted as host, and presided on the occasion. After the company had been regaled with refreshments a meeting was held, at which brief addresses, interspersed with music, were delivered by Mr. Williams, Rev. J. B. Barraclough, Messrs. T. C. Chadwick, J. H. Lydall, Ned Wright, and others. Each person on leaving was presented with one of the publications of the Religious Tract Society, the gift of the Committee, and a scented bouquet with Scripture text attached, provided by the Bible Flower Mission.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. Canon Ware, vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale, Westmoreland, has been appointed Bishop Suffragan of Barrow-in-Furness, as assistant to the Bishop of Carlisle.

An old friend of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews has made the munificent offer to pay the stipend of an additional missionary in Palestine for five years certain.

During the month of March, Rev. Dr. Cassel, missionary of the London Jews' Society, administered the rite of Christian baptism in Christ Church, Berlin, to five Jewish persons—a mother with her two children, a lady, and a bookseller.

A parochial mission was concluded on Sunday week at Arthington, Yorkshire, the missioner being Rev. J. White, vicar of Aston, near Nantwich. The Wesleyan Methodists heartily co-operated in the mission, they not holding their usual service on Sunday evening that all might be able to attend the church.

METHODIST.

The West London Wesleyan Mission has secured Cleveland Hall, a spacious building in Cleveland-street, Euston-road, which is surrounded by a dense population. The hall, which was for years the headquarters of the West-end Secularists, is being altered and renovated at a cost of £1000. The mission workers have organised a house-to-house, or rather a room-to-room, visitation of the locality, and the hall will be opened on May 3.

Frith Common Wesleyan Chapel had been closed for some months, in consequence of the difficulty of supplying the pulpit. Now it has been added to the Worcester and Hereford Mission, and has been re-opened by Mr. Langstaff, evangelist in charge of the mission at Abberley. At the opening services the chapel was filled, and the preacher and people had good times. The friends at Abberley, says The Methodist Times, are taking much interest in the cause at Frith Common, and thus doing something to help forward the work of rural evangelisation. Mr. Langstaff will shortly sail for South Africa as a Joyful News evangelist.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. H. J. Perkins commenced a series of Sunday afternoon services for men only, at Clifton Church, Peckham, on Sunday week, about 250 being present.

The congregation of Union-street Chapel, Brighton, invited Rev. W. C. Willoughby to become their pastor. In 1882 Mr. Willoughby was appointed missionary to Central Africa, but, his health failing, he was obliged to return, and he has since been more or less engaged in missionary work.

Rev. W. Scott, of Albion Church, Hull, has for two months been giving lectures on the Bible, "with special reference to working-men's difficulties." Large numbers of working-men have been attracted in consequence. The interest evidenced encourages the hope of much permanent good.

In the annual report of Craven Congregational Church, Regent-street, the present membership of which is 340, the pastor (Rev. Arthur Hall), in a brief address to the members, says: "We are 'holding our own,' but making little progress in the conflict with the darkness, degradation, infidelity, indifference, and vice existing at our doors. Why is this so? There is no lack of agencies, but we need 'power from on high.' May this be our constant prayer: 'Come, Holy Spirit! Heavenly Dove, with all thy quickening power.'"

At a bazaar lately held to liquidate a debt and provide funds for the renovation of the Congregational Chapel at Droylsden. Rev. S. Mills, rector of St. Mary's, Droylsden, was present. He said that during the sixteen years he had been in the village, he had received so many kindnesses from ministers of different denominations that he always felt it to be his bounden duty to help them in efforts put forth in the work. There was room for them all, for they were all working in the Master's cause.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Adolph Saphir's successor at Belgrave Church, Rev. James Paterson, late of Ballater, is meeting with much encouragement in his new charge. There has lately been a marked increase in the attendance at the services at the church.

A five days' mission has been held in John Knox Church, Stepney, stirring addresses being delivered by Revs. Dr. Monro Gibson, John McNeill, R. M. Thornton, A. Jeffrey, and James Mackintosh. The mission was attended by many proofs of the Divine blessing.

The English Presbyterian Women's Missionary Association has fifteen agents working for it in China, Singapore, and India. The branch associations throughout England number 139. The funds come in regularly without special effort. The Association supports a quarterly journal of its own, entitled, Our Sisters in Other Lands.

On Thursday afternoon, last week, the Presbyterian Church, Queen's-road, Brighton, which has been in process of renovation, was re-opened, when a most interesting service was conducted by Rev. John McNeill. The congregation meeting in this church have made good progress since the settlement of their young minister, Rev. Hugh Shearer, about twelve months ago. His thoughtful, robust preaching, combined with high-toned evangelical fervour, is attracting a large congregation, and there is a growing efficiency in all the varied departments of Christian work conducted under the auspices of the church.

BAPTIST.

Memorial stones of a new chapel, being erected for the church in Wynne-road, Brixton, were laid last week. The congregation first met in Brixton Hall, and afterwards in an iron hall in St. Ann's-road. Rev. V. J. Charlesworth, of the Stockwell Orphanage, took the oversight of the infant cause, and in 1875 the iron building in Wynne-road was placed in trust under Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. Rev. Z. T. Dowen accepted the charge in February, 1887, when the church was at a vanishing point, his first congregation being about thirty. Since then the revival and success have been most marked; over 100 were received into fellowship last year, the members now numbering 165.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Bristol and Somerset Quarterly Meeting, held in Bristol, on the 16th inst., was a favoured time. At the meeting for worship, Wilson Waterfall, of Torquay, and other Friends had very acceptable service. The statistics showed a slight increase of membership.

On the following day (17th inst.) Western Quarterly Meeting was held in Worcester, when Henry Stanley Newman gave an interesting account of his visit to Canada, Ohio, Indiana, Western, and Baltimore Yearly Meetings in America. This week he leaves England to resume his travels in the other American Yearly Meetings. A conference on the opium traffic was addressed by Mary Whiting and A. Kemp Brown, B.A., of Leeds. The Quarterly Meeting also shows some increase.

The "Twentieth Annual Report of Friends' Mission in Syria and Palestine" is a most instructive pamphlet, describing as it does the origin of the Boys' Training Home, School of Industry, Cottage Hospital, Girls' Training Home, mothers' meeting, New Meeting House, and eight day-schools, with 400 pupils, at and around Brumana, on the Lebanon. At Ramalleh, too (now under New England Friends), the work moves on, though the Roman Catholic and Maronite priests and bishops oppose it everywhere they can, and even the Druses are become shy of it. It amazes Eastern people, and is a grand and good object-lesson to see men and women, ministers of Christ, and hear them on equal footing preach the glorious Gospel of salvation.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The fiftieth annual public meeting of the Greenock Y.M.C.A. was held on Friday last. The statements regarding the various departments of the work were of a satisfactory character.

In 1855, the Free Church of Scotland Foreign Missions Committee appointed its first medical missionary. At the present time it has twenty-nine such doubly qualified missionaries at work in foreign lands.

Henderson-street Mission, Kinning-park, Glasgow, is doing a good work in this district. The meetings are well attended, and much blessing has resulted. The Mission is under the care of Mr. Blackater, shipbroker.

Mr. W. S. Ross, Glasgow, gave a very interesting account, in Free West Church Hall, Coatbridge, last Saturday, of his labour for the Master in connection with the Govan Model Lodging-house Mission. Over eighty men have taken the pledge. Several have professed conversion, and are now reconciled to their friends and families.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A new mission-hall has been opened under encouraging circumstances by the Evangelistic Association, in Wylie place, Belfast.

Mr. Geo. Clarke is back again in Ireland. He commenced a fortnight's series of Gospel services in Newtownards on Sunday.

A fortnight's series of evangelistic services has been held under very hopeful auspices by Rev. Jas. Kirkwood, in the Methodist Church, Ballymote, co. Sligo.

A series of special services held by the rector, Rev. Mr. Grierson, last week in the parish church, Banbridge, was largely attended, and attracted much attention.

Mr. R. Clark, of the Baptist Evangelistic Association, Dublin, held during last week a successful series of Gospel meetings in the Orange Hall, Loughbrickland; he conducted similar meetings the previous week at Moyallon, the residence of Mr. J. G. Richardson, of the Society of Friends.

The agents of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland are doing much to counteract the spread of impure and unwholesome literature in this country. During the past year they accomplished a large amount of work, and in so doing were not subjected to insult or annoyance from any class of the community.

The Forward Movement is producing some interesting results in Ireland. An earnest band of workers in the University-road Wesleyan Circuit, Belfast, go out to invite pleasure-seekers to the house of God on Sunday evening. Rev. Wesley Guard is drawing large congregations, and Christians are much encouraged.

The Belfast Y.M.C.A. has had a year of unparalleled success. Its roll of membership stands at 1700, being an increase of 200 for the year. Its income amounted to nearly £950, besides a sum of £500 raised to purchase a steamer for the new Balolo Mission, Central Africa. Hundreds of young men were led to an intelligent and pronounced decision for Christ.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Dr. George Smeaton, professor of New Testament Exegesis in the Free Church College, Edinburgh. —Rev. Edmund Lockyer, for over half a century in the Wesleyan ministry.—Mr. John Lance, a zealous Christian worker in connection with the Congregational Church at Cheltenham. — At Middlesborough, Rev. Joseph Stead, late Baptist minister at Eccleshill, Yorkshire.—Rev. W. H. Robson, of Kendal, for fifty-three years a minister of the Wesleyan Connexion. — In London, Mrs. Barleycorn, a native of Africa, and wife of Rev. W. N. Barleycorn, a distinguished West African Primitive Methodist missionary. — Lady McArthur, widow of the late Sir William McArthur.—Rev. Canon Macdonagh, D.D., rector of Chapelizod, near Dublin.—Mr. William Belcher, a prominent member of the Baptist cause at Arlington, Glos.—Rev. Canon Little, rector of Ballaghderrin, Ireland.

MR. OPIE RODWAY has conducted four days' Gospel services at the Baptist Church, Painswick. His words were attended with power.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER.—For a much blessed worker in the Lord's vineyard, who has been missing from his home since the 15th inst.; that no evil may befal him, and that he may be quickly restored to his friends, if still alive.

"Love, Courtship, and Marriage amongst young believers" is the title of a very wise little treatise on questions of perennial interest and importance. (1d. W. B. Horner & Son.)

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, APRIL 28.—Leviticus XII.

SHORT as is this chapter, the lesson it teaches is far-reaching and important. It points back to the Fall (Gen. iii.), and emphasises the connection there established between birth and sin. "Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me" (Ps. li. 5). In these days when the consequences of the Fall are so often either denied or ignored, it is well to be reminded that what is taught in Gen. iii. 16 is thus recognised in God's law to Israel, and should be recognised by each one of us in our own case as David did in his.

It is worthy of note that the ceremonial uncleanness which thus called for purification did not attach to the child but to the mother, perhaps as showing that until the age of responsibility sin is not imputed (see Rom. v. 13). Nevertheless, the irresponsibility of the age of infancy does not alter the fact of the inherent sinfulness of infancy ("by nature the children of wrath"). It only postpones personal responsibility till the age of consciousness.

Israel, therefore, was taught that not death alone but even birth should be regarded as involving uncleanness needing purification. Bähr explains it thus: "Birth and death are the two poles within which the sinful and curse-stricken life of humanity moves. By birth the sinful life of man is brought into existence, by death it is brought to an end; hence birth comes under the same aspect of uncleanness as death itself." Job's lamentation over the day of his birth as the commencement of his life of sorrow may illustrate this (Job iii.).

There is one birth, however, that has brought in an antidote to all this evil and a remedy for all this distress. See 1 Tim. ii. 15, "the childbearing," R.V., which Bishop Ellicott explains to mean that "the peculiar function of her sex, from its relation to her Saviour, shall be the medium of salvation" to woman as well as to man. Let us observe that to Mary the mother of our Lord was granted no exception with regard to the law of purification (Luke ii. 22). In face of this fact the Romish fiction of the immaculate conception falls to the ground.

MONDAY, APRIL 29.—Leviticus XIII.

Leprosy was a sort of living death, involving, not only exclusion from the fellowship of the sanctuary, but exclusion from the fellowship of the living. "Consequently the process of restoration consisted of two stages."

First (xiii. 1—59) readmission to the fellowship of the living, depending on the cure of the disease, which God alone could effect. Secondly (xiv. 1—32) readmission to the camp and to the sanctuary, depending on the due performance of the prescribed rites of purification.

This chapter is wholly occupied with the former of these, and consists of a very detailed enumeration of the signs and tokens by which the various stages of the disease might be discerned. Viewed as a type of sin, there are some striking coincidences between the signs of an approaching cure as discernible in leprosy, and in that terrible evil, sin, which it typifies. See especially vv. 12, 13: "If a leprosy break out abroad in the skin, and the leprosy cover all the skin of him that hath the plague from his head even to his foot (see Isa. i. 6) wheresoever the priest looketh; then the priest shall consider: and, behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: it is all turned white: he is clean."

Isaiah was commissioned to act as a priest to Israel as a nation in detecting that there was "no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores" (Isa. i. 6—18); but he was also empowered to proclaim an approaching cleansing for all who would avail themselves of the proffered mercy: "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

God's priests of this dispensation, those who "have an anointing (R.V.) from the Holy One, and know all things" (1 John ii. 20), ought to be quick to discern that deep conviction of sin which enables them to pronounce by anticipation that the sin-convinced sinner is clean.

TUESDAY, APRIL 30.—Leviticus XIV.

When the disease was pronounced cured, or so far on its way to a cure that it might anticipatively be pronounced clean, then commenced the rite of the leper's purification, first in relation to his restoration to the fellowship of the living, or his return to the camp (1—9); then in relation to the fellowship of the Sanctuary (10—20), or his readmission to the Tabernacle. In the type of the two birds (4) we see foreshadowed the death and resurrection of Christ as the only real delivering and restoring power for the sinner. Two birds were necessary to carry on the type of resurrection after death. This was done by the living bird dipped in the blood of the other being let loose into the open field; as John Newton explains it:—

Dipped in his fellow's blood,
The living bird went free;
The type well understood
Expressed the sinner's plea
Described a guilty soul enlarged,
And by a Saviour's death discharged.

The cleansed leper's being sprinkled seven times took place outside the camp, and its effect was to restore him to the camp, but not as yet to his tent (8); that was only effected after further personal purification, after seven days. Finally, restoration to the Sanctuary (10, 11) was effected on the eighth day, when he was anointed on the tip of the right ear, right hand, and right foot, with the blood of the trespass offering, and then with oil (a sort of priestly consecration; see viii. 24). This twofold purification, thus separated in the type by seven days, is typical of the twofold privilege which the Christian enjoys by virtue of faith in Christ—justification and sanctification. Not only "washed (or freed) from our sins in his own blood," but "made kings and priests unto God" (Rev. i. 5, 6).

The remarkable case of leprosy in a house (34, &c.) and its appointed cleansing (52), may have been intended, as supposed by some, to teach important lessons as to church discipline, and putting away of evil from the congregation; but it is prefaced by a confession of evil which churches of the present day are slow to make: "It seemeth to me there is as it were a plague in the house" (35). If there were more of such confession of evil, our ecclesiastical houses would be the sooner cleansed.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 1.—Leviticus XV.

The ceremonial defilements alluded to in this chapter which called for purification were of a far less serious character than leprosy, and were for the most part little more than natural infirmities. Nevertheless, they were treated as involving uncleanness on account of the especial holiness required of Israel, as "God's Tabernacle was among them." Hence provision was made in the rites of purification here prescribed to "separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness, that they die not in their uncleanness when they defile my Tabernacle that is among them" (31). As the means of purification consisted in divers washings and sometimes sacrifices (14—29), they typified the cleansing of sin effected by that "precious blood of Christ," to which all these Levitical purifications pointed.

The less serious character of the defilement arising from sins of infirmity often tempts the Christian to regard them as less requiring cleansing by means of Christ's blood than the more serious outbreaks of sin, the defilement from which is undeniable. The teaching of this chapter should therefore lead us to value the more, and by faith to sprinkle our consciences the more, with the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, which "cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John i. 7).

Let us be warned by the teaching of this chapter to palliate no sin by regarding it as mere natural infirmity. Let us seek more of the teaching of God's Holy Spirit to see sin as He sees it, and to own it as He would have us do.

THURSDAY, MAY 2.—Leviticus XVI.

One of the most important chapters in the whole Bible. It describes the ceremonies of the Day of Atonement, the most solemn day of the whole year; the only day on which the Holy of Holies—type of "heaven itself" (Heb. ix. 24)—was entered by the high priest, "not without blood, which he offered for himself and for the errors of his people."

Mark the contrast between the high priest of Israel, "after the flesh," and our "great High Priest." The former, being a sinner, must first offer sacrifice for himself, before he could offer for the people (11—14), and this double offering must be repeated every year; whereas, our High Priest, having no sin of his own, offers but Himself, once for all; an offering never to be repeated. Hence the abiding results of his once-offered sacrifice, which admits of no repetition, and secures "eternal inheritance" (Heb. ix. 15). Those, therefore, who are truly trusting in Him as their Priest not only need no further repetition in any form of the once-offered sacrifice, but dare not insult the majesty of his eternal Priesthood by recognising any earthly sacerdotal priesthood that pretends to obtrude itself into the sphere of his sacrificial service. The words of ver. 17 should be noted, "There shall be no man in the Tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel." All priestly function of every kind was to be suspended, the Tabernacle itself (the sphere of sacrificial service) was to be deserted, until he come out. Heb. ix. 28.

Observe too that the scapegoat was not offered as a sacrifice, but was a second goat (like the second bird, xiv. 6, 7) added to complete the type by showing the efficacy of the sacrifice of the first goat. Its bearing away into a "land of separation" (marg.) the sins confessed over its head finds its fulfilment in "their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more" (Heb. viii. 12).

FRIDAY, MAY 3.—Leviticus XVII.

An important chapter, viewed as a supplement to the last. If the blood even of bulls and goats was to prefigure such a wonderful result as that expressed in the words of xvi. 30, "That ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord," how carefully must its sanctity be guarded from common use, so that its sacrificial efficacy may be duly recognised. The typical significance of the blood is expressed thus (11): "For the life (Heb. 'soul') is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh atonement by reason of the life (Heb. 'soul')," R.V. The italics mark the improved rendering of the Revised Version, which throws light on the whole passage, as showing that the atoning efficacy of the blood lay in the life it contained.

But mark carefully that it was in the life poured out, not in the veins, wherein the atoning efficacy lay. This is an important point, and refutes the notion that the blood of Christ means the life of Christ. The word for life when used of Christ's life is a different word, both in Hebrew and Greek, from that here used. The word here is "soul." The same word is found in Isa. liii. 12, where its meaning cannot be mistaken: "He hath poured out his soul unto death."

It is, then, the death of Christ, not the life of Christ, which is meant when His blood is spoken of, and no better parallel can be found to explain the meaning of "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin," than that of Lev. xvi. 30, of which (in the Greek version) the Rev. H. C. G. Moule remarks, "This is a close and impressive verbal parallel to 1 John i. 7."—The Cleansing Blood.

SATURDAY, MAY 4.—Leviticus XVIII.

The subject of this chapter is an expansion of its opening words, in which, after assigning as a motive, "I am the Lord your God," the Lord says, "After the doings of the land of Egypt, wherein ye dwelt, shall ye not do: and after the doings of the land of Canaan, whither I bring you, shall ye not do."

Had Israel been faithful to the orders received to drive out the nations of Canaan, there would have been less necessity for the latter part of the above command, but He who could foresee their failure in this respect warns them of the danger which the Canaanites whom they had failed to drive out would prove. "They shall be snares and traps unto you" (Josh. xxiii. 13). So is it with the professing Church. She has become mingled with the world to such an extent that Christians need to be warned, not only not to do after the doings of the ungodly world, out of which they have come, but also not to do after the doings of the professing Church into which they have come.

The various unlawful marriages and offences against purity which are here forbidden, both exhibit the low state of morality of the heathen world, and the uncompromising opposition thereto of God's holiness. The sanction on which the whole code rests is—"I am the Lord your God" (2, 30). With this the chapter begins, and with this it ends.

Let us in all our efforts to "follow holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. xiii. 14), remember that in these words, "I am the Lord your God," we have not only a motive, but also a power. Hence we read (xx. 7, 8) not only "sanctify yourselves," but also "I am the Lord which sanctify you." This power of sanctification which the Lord is to his people is spoken of in 1 Thess. iv. 7, 8, in a passage which may well be quoted as a New Testament commentary on this chapter: "God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit."

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, May 5.

The Command to Watch.

Mark xiii. 24—37. Golden Text: Ver. 33.

These verses are a continuation of the address commenced in the former lesson. Our Lord is still on the Mount of Olives (3), and is answering the question of his disciples (4). In the last lesson He described the events which must precede his second advent, but which will characterise the whole of this dispensation, and which, therefore, were not to be regarded as signs of the end (7, 8). In this He deals with the end itself, and the events which will immediately precede it. Ver. 24—31 announce the Advent and its accompanying signs. Then from 32 to 37, we learn our duty in relation to it.

The Advent and its signs.—"In those days, after that tribulation" (24). Matt. xxiv. 29 says "Immediately after." The tribulation described in verses 14 to 23 is generally limited in its application to the past destruction of Jerusalem. It is difficult to understand how our Lord could speak of his second coming as occurring "immediately after" that event, when already 1800 years have elapsed. There is much to be said for B. W. Newton's application of vv. 14 to 23 to a future event. But, if that be denied, it may still be admitted that the tribulation of the Jews, which began when Jerusalem was destroyed, continues still. "The sun shall be darkened," &c. (24, 25).—We are certainly disposed to give the signs in the heavens a literal interpretation. They may be accompanied by distresses and commotions in the Church and in the world. But they are included among the signs referred to in ver. 29; and if they are so indefinite and vague, as Ellicott contends they should be, of what value are they as signs? A sign not less remarkable accompanied the crucifixion (Matt. xxvii. 45); these also are to be literally fulfilled.

"They shall see the Son of Man," &c. (26).—This is undoubtedly literal, and is frequently described elsewhere in similar language. See xiv. 62; Acts i. 11; 2 Thess. i. 7; Rev. i. 7. This event is the subject of New Testament prophecy, and the hope of New Testament saints, as much as the first advent was predicted in the Old Testament, and looked for by God's people then. The very same Jesus, whom the world crucified, and whom still it rejects, is "coming in the clouds with great power and glory." No event of the future is more certain than this.

"He shall send his angels," &c. (27).—As the angels were associated with the first appearing (Luke ii.), so will they be with the second. Their work shall be to "gather his elect from the four winds"—from every quarter of the earth. This is more fully described in 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52; 1 Thess. iv. 16, where the resurrection of dead saints is included. And the trumpet referred to there is also mentioned in Matt. xxiv. 31. This verse (27) asserts the personal and public appearing of the Son of Man, as against the ideas of a spiritual coming, and a secret personal coming.

"Learn a parable," &c. (28, 29).—It is certainly impossible for anyone to fix the day or the hour when the second advent will take place. Yet in avoiding this evil we must not fall into its opposite. We are to look for signs. Just as in the fig trees, the forth-putting of leaves tells that summer is near, so are there certain signs, which just as certainly foretell the coming of Christ. (This parable acquires greater significance from the fact that on the Mount where Jesus sat He could see numerous fig trees growing). What are the signs? Surely those just mentioned (24—26). It is significant that among these signs no mention is made of universal peace, or of the world's conversion. Nor are they referred to as ever occurring before the Lord's second appearing. The signs are of an opposite character.

"This generation shall not pass," &c. (30, 31).—The word generation is sometimes applied to persons then living, but it is also used for the nation. So Alford teaches. See Matt. xxiii. 35, 36. In this sense the word has a remarkable fulfilment in the Jews. Although their city is destroyed, and they are scattered, yet they have never lost their national characteristics. They are themselves a witness to the truth of the words of Jesus.

Our duty in relation to the Second Advent (32—37).—We may not presume to know the time (32). Knowledge upon this matter is with the Father only (Acts i. 7). Even "the Son" had put Himself under such limitations during his earthly life that He did not know. And his contentment with such a condition rebukes the curiosity and arrogance of those who presume to fix the day. Indeed, the duty of watchfulness, which our Lord here enforces, requires an amount of uncertainty as to the time. "Watch...for ye know not." It was this which kept the Apostles and the early Christians in a condition of continual expectation.

The one duty enforced in ver. 33—37 is "Watch." Be ready—so expect the event, and be so constantly ready for it, that it will not come upon us entirely as a surprise (1 Thess. v. 4).

Watching is connected with praying (33).—The spirit that prays for the coming (Rev. xxii. 20); that desires during his absence to maintain fellowship with Him; that recognises the presence of difficulties and dangers which only He can overcome; that claims daily fulfilment of his promises: this is inseparable from true watchfulness. A prayerless Christian is not watching. Prayer is our watchtower. Combine the two (xiv. 38; Col. iv. 2).

Watch and work (34).—This parable reminds us that we are all servants under authority to an absent Lord, who may at any moment return. He has committed "to every man his work," and to be found at our work is the best possible preparation for his return. Nothing should so stimulate to active and faithful service as the anticipation of the second advent. When the legislature was sitting at Hartford, on May 19, 1780, the day suddenly became so dark that birds were silent, and domestic fowls retired to roost, while the people believed that the judgment was at hand. The House of Representatives adjourned, and the Council proposed to do the same. Colonel Davenport objected. "The Day of Judgment is either at hand, or it is not. If it is not, there is no cause for an adjournment; if it is, I choose to be found doing my duty" (Matt. xxiv. 46).

Watch and wake (35, 36).—As the master of the house may return at any of the four night watches—even, midnight, cockcrowing, or morning—so at any unexpected time may the Lord come. Let Him not find us "sleeping." Not physical sleep, but such as the Apostle warns against in Rom. xiii. 11—14, and 1 Thess. v. 1—10. Do not these passages declare what true wakefulness is? Live as "children of the day." The duty of watching is therefore connected with praying, with working, and with living in practical holiness. In this comprehensive sense, Jesus says to all—"Watch" (37).

MR. F. S. ARNOT'S PARTY.—Mr. W. Smart, Funchal, Madeira, writes on April 2:—Mr. F. S. Arnot, Mrs. Arnot, and party arrived safely at Madeira yesterday afternoon, and proceeded on their voyage at 10 p.m. A meeting for praise and prayer was held after supper in my house. Mr. H. Maxwell Wright, who arrived the other day from the Azores, led in prayer, and each of the brethren prayed in turn for more earnest consecration, for the friends at home, and for those in heathen darkness whom they seek to save.

MISSIONARIES FOR THE CONGO.—A valedictory service was held at Regents'-park Chapel, on Monday evening last week, in connection with the departure of five Baptist missionaries to the Congo. Rev. F. B. Meyer presided. Mr. A. H. Baynes mentioned that Mr. H. White had acquired a knowledge of carpentering and gardening, and to test his fitness for the work before him, he had walked from Antwerp to Rome, entering the Campagna in August. Mr. W. L. Forfeitt had a knowledge of telegraphing and dispensing. These young men would probably be stationed on the Upper Congo, above Stanley-pool, at Lukolela and Bolobo. The other missionaries, Mrs. Holman Bentley, Mrs. Mookenaar, and Rev. P. E. Comber, had already been engaged in the work, and were now returning.

WORLDS BEHIND.

When Spring, with breath of opening flowers,
Sits singing on the hills,
And youth is dancing to the strain
In love's delirious thrills;
Here, as in fabled fairy climes,
In youth's ecstatic dream,
We build enchanted palaces,
From bubbles on life's stream.

As time repeats the Uzzite's tale,
When wealth and friends expire,
When pain shoots through the hollow bones
Electric tongues of fire;
In this "wild north land" of our woe,
What mysteries are unfurled!
Our chastened spirits touch and know
A world behind our world.

Beside the bosom's cold hearth-stone,
When freed from masks of night;
When proving sin is darkness all,
That all in God is light;
In this "great lone land" of our need,
God's rarest gifts are given—
The freshness of immortal youth,
The infant joys of heaven.

AUSTRIA'S GREAT NEED.

"A Ten Years' Resident," in a recent letter, tells a sad tale of spiritual darkness and sinful life in the German provinces of the Austrian Empire. Generally speaking, the people are kind-hearted and polite, and intemperance is not so largely indulged in by them as in other countries of the Continent. But there is a great lack of truthfulness, and deception is quite the rule among high and low, alike in home, social, and political life.

Another great blot on the community is impurity of life. The Austro-Hungarian State Lottery is a very serious evil, exciting passions which continually lead to fraud, misery, and not unfrequently are followed by suicide. Several members of the Austrian Parliament have agitated for the abolition of the lotteries, but hitherto their noble efforts have not availed much.

Asking how people of good natural qualities can have become so degenerate, the correspondent, from whose letter we are quoting, says: "I am convinced that Popery is the chief cause of it. Rome's system of indulgences, absolutions from sin, the immoral life of many of the priests, and, above all, the prohibition of the reading of the Bible, the only true standard of righteousness and purity. These go far to explain the state of things. When reproved for untruthfulness or unchastity, people say: 'Our parson does the same. If I go and confess to him, he gives me absolution, and all is right again.' No wonder society gets corrupt, and wickedness abounds on every hand!" In some concluding words the correspondent says: "I have not written to expose unnecessarily the wounds of a suffering nation whom I love and pity from the heart; but I write in order to raise a voice of warning to the British Christians against Romish encroachments, and also to enlist their sympathies for those few and scattered workers who are spreading Gospel light and truth in this priest-ridden country."

WANTED—FOSTER-PARENTS.—Under this heading, Dr. Barnardo gives, in the April Night and Day, a list of children recently admitted to his Homes, whom he would like Christian friends to adopt, paying the needed £16 for at least one year's maintenance. A photograph and full particulars of any of the children will be sent to anyone who will promise to contribute that sum. The Doctor's address is 18, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

TEN Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year over 7,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mr. R. Coad has had a very successful temperance mission in Jersey.

At the recent licensing court in Edinburgh the number of licences was reduced by twenty-two.

The Scotch Local Government Bill does not provide for the transfer of licensing to the proposed County Councils.

The Liverpool Branch of the British Women's Temperance Association is prominently officered by Good Templars.

At a meeting of Metropolitan Conservative M.P.'s a committee was appointed to examine and report upon the various Sunday Closing Bills affecting London.

Rev. E. H. Stribling, of the London Missionary Society, reports earnest temperance work by the Antsihanaka Mission, Madagascar, of which he is superintendent.

The Licensing Courts for Scotland, just held, have reduced the number of licences in the country, and in nearly every instance the ten o'clock closing hour has been continued.

Rev. David Russell, Glasgow, an early friend of the temperance cause, has been presented with £550, and a gold watch for Mrs. Russell, on the occasion of his ministerial jubilee.

An insurance manager states that insurance companies rarely succeed in contesting a claim on the ground that drink was the cause of death. Direct proof in such cases is very difficult to obtain.

It is said that the men employed in the construction of the Atlantic and Pacific Railway had tea instead of intoxicants, and that to the absence of the latter was due the speed at which the line was built.

A Parliamentary agent of one of the great liquor associations said recently that if County Councils had control of the licences, they would see it was not their interest to abolish public-houses at the cost of revenue.

In an action before Mr. Justice Cave, a woman has obtained from a publican £20 damages, on the ground that, owing to the negligence of his servants, he had supplied her with a pint of "porter containing some injurious element."

Rev. James Paterson, of Belgrave Presbyterian Church, in the course of a sermon on the drink traffic the other Sunday said:—"William Tell was asked to split with his arrow an apple laid on the head of his son. It is more difficult to smash the glass in the hand of a friend, and not wound the hand. God knows, it is the glass we aim at, and we mean to break it."

In view of the possibility that the Government may in the Scotch Local Government Bill, or in some other way, deal with the licensing question, the temperance reformers of Scotland have drawn up a statement setting forth that no legislative remedy for the evils produced by the liquor traffic can ever be regarded as meeting the exigencies of the case which does not empower the people to prevent public-houses being licensed in their respective localities.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1889.

* Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

* We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

* Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

"A Ton of Tracts."—Referring to the recent paragraph on this subject Miss Weston, of Devonport writes:—Mr. Alexander Allan most generously gave a free passage in one of his ships to the tracts from Boston (U.S.A.) to Glasgow, and thence to Devonport.

The most remarkable occurrence in the history of Protestant missions in Japan is the union of the churches under the charge of six boards of Presbyterian affiliation to make the United Church of Christ in Japan, and the probable union of this United Church with the body of Congregational Churches organised under the care of the American Board.

Soldiers at Fermoy, co. Cork.—Sir,—There is a large garrison at Fermoy, and my cousin, Miss Williamson, who has had good experience in work of the kind, has succeeded in finding and purchasing a most suitable and well-situated house where the soldiers, as well as the police whose barrack is only a few doors away, may find a reading-room, coffee-bar, and class-rooms, with kind hearts and hands ready to guide their feet into the way of peace. About £350 has been subscribed and spent in the way I have said, and as much more will be immediately required for repairs, furniture, &c. I heartily commend this Christ-like and undenominational work, and the workers, as worthy of sympathy and support. Major-General Rocke, Inspector-General of recruiting, Mr. A. B. Stoney, LL.D., secretary Christian Police Association, 15, Old-square, Lincoln's Inn, and Dr. Gilbart Smith, 68, Harley-street, W., are well acquainted with this project and may be referred to.

Yours faithfully, Geo. F. Trench.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S., Chamberlain of the City of London. With Seventy small Illustrations. Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d

"The excellent Chamberlain of the City of London has given in these pages a clear and accurate account of the interesting remains of early Christianity in the CATACOMBS OF ROME."

The Bookseller, Feb., 1889.

"Mr. SCOTT'S object in this work is to derive from the CATACOMBS 'a vindication of pure and primitive Christianity, and an exposure of the corruptions of Romanism.' He has attained a high degree of success, and produced a valuable and standard work. We rejoice in its continued circulation. It is remarkably cheap."

Baptist Magazine, March, 1889.

"Little wonder that these Lectures, wherein the story of Rome pagan, Rome Christian, and Rome apostate—as revealed in the CATACOMBS—is so admirably told, should have won a wide welcome."

Word and Work, Feb. 8, 1889.

"A powerful vindication of pure and primitive Christianity. The value of the book is enhanced by a great number of fine Illustrations. The public have given this book a very hearty reception, as it has now reached its fourth edition. May it reach a thousand more editions! Mr. SCOTT has done his work well. This book will well repay a careful perusal. Mr. SCOTT has something to tell; and he tells it in a most fascinating manner."

The Evidences of Christianity;

Or, THE WRITTEN AND LIVING WORD OF GOD.

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D., of Philadelphia.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day; and found too that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"

Methodist Times, Feb. 7, 1889.

"Every preacher and teacher ought to know something of the 'Evidences'; and it would be hard to find a better popular work on the subject than this. The author divides his book into two sections—The Bible; and the Person of Christ. With the second portion of his subject Dr. Pierson deals with special freshness and force—though the whole book is admirable. We strongly advise our readers to get it if they can."

Local Preachers' Treasury, March, 1889.

"In this book the able author has met a great want, and laid a large class under obligation. It is too often the case that treatises on the Christian Evidences are so learned and scholastic that they are of use to students only. Here, however, is a book of such a plain, practical, common-sense stamp that it cannot fail to be highly popular."—Footsteps of Truth, March, 1889.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION IN EARLY STAGE.

CASE of Mr. CHARLES MARTIN, at BRIGHTON.

It is between two and three years ago this patient, a wholesale confectioner, of 82, Trafalgar-street, first wrote to me and came to Coombe Lodge. He had read of my treatment in the Gospel Standard. His father had died of Consumption, and the son had never been strong from childhood, and had been subject to debilitating perspirations. Cough had come on, with yellow expectoration, breathing very short, appetite poor, secretions wrong. Was getting thinner in face and body, and weak. His own doctor had sounded him six weeks before his coming to me, and found a flatness in the right lung indicative of mischief there.

I found it to be a case in that stage which would require the utmost care.

In about six weeks he reported that the heavy, exhausting perspirations had abated; he felt stronger, and other symptoms had improved; he had gained four pounds in weight.

On the 1st February of last year I received a letter from him, in which he reports himself as wonderfully well.

On the 3rd December last he called to see me (as I had expressed a desire to publish his case), that I might satisfy myself. I found him perfectly well—not, of course, a man of robust constitution, and therefore requiring a little care. "I hope (he said) that the making known my case may do good to others."

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S., Chamberlain of the City of London. With Seventy small Illustrations. Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d

"The excellent Chamberlain of the City of London has given in these pages a clear and accurate account of the interesting remains of early Christianity in the CATACOMBS OF ROME."
The Bookseller, Feb., 1889.

"Mr. SCOTT'S object in this work is to derive from the CATACOMBS 'a vindication of pure and primitive Christianity, and an exposure of the corruptions of Romanism.' He has attained a high degree of success, and produced a valuable and standard work. We rejoice in its continued circulation. It is remarkably cheap."
Baptist Magazine, March, 1889.

"Little wonder that these Lectures, wherein the story of Rome pagan, Rome Christian, and Rome apostate—as revealed in the CATACOMBS—is so admirably told, should have won a wide welcome."
Word and Work, Feb. 8, 1889.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Containing 309 Hymns.

"We have gone through this book, and tried many of its pieces, and are much pleased with it."—Railway Signal.

"The collection will, no doubt, be readily welcomed wherever its predecessor is found. And where is it that it is not found? It is almost an omnipresent book."—Footsteps of Truth.

"A welcome addition to the "Songs and Solos," which have already gained an unparalleled popularity. Generally speaking, they are of the same character; the words bright, lively, inspiriting, set to simple melodious tunes, which the ear does not willingly let die."
Baptist Magazine.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

"Many Infallible Proofs."

The Evidences of Christianity;

Or, THE WRITTEN AND LIVING WORD OF GOD.

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D., of Philadelphia.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day; and found too that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"
Methodist Times, Feb. 7, 1889.

"In this book the able author has met a great want, and laid a large class under obligation. It is too often the case that treatises on the Christian Evidences are so learned and scholastic that they are of use to students only. Here, however, is a book of such a plain, practical, common-sense stamp that it cannot fail to be highly popular."—Footsteps of Truth, March, 1889.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. L. Dahle, secretary of the Norwegian Missionary Society, Stavanger, and late missionary in Madagascar.

We recently adverted to the endeavour being made by some reforming members of the London County Council to purify the moral atmosphere of the music-halls. The best proof that their action is doing good is seen in the fact that the proprietors of these places of amusement are getting alarmed. We hope that by petition and by the supply of facts bearing on the evils of these places, the well-disposed public will strengthen the hands of Mr. Charrington and his friends.

Some who profess to be the friends of the working classes, unfortunately give them counsel worthy of their worst enemies. A few days ago, working people living in East and North-East London held a meeting in the open air, when several men of influence in the political world, actually encouraged them to protest against Mr. Stevenson's Sunday Closing Bill on the ground that it is "an unjustifiable attack upon individual liberty"! Referring to this a district medical officer has well pointed out, in the columns of The Daily Chronicle, that there are other aspects of this much-vaunted "liberty." He says:—

> Is it right for the sons of labour, after a hard week's work, to spend their wages in a public-house on a Sunday, when their wives and children are wanting the necessaries of life? Is it right to themselves as individuals? Is it fair for our young men to take their female companions into the public-houses on Sunday and give them drink, to which they often object? And, having thus taught them to drink, after a few years of unhappy married life, they too often violently assault them because they spend too much on intoxicants. What about the liberty of the thousands of publicans, their wives, the barmaids, and potmen employed on Sundays, in addition to the late hours during the week? How many of these are brought to premature graves by the drink traffic? I have seen so much sickness, poverty, and wretchedness through drink, that I wonder gentlemen can be found to countenance its indulgence.

That the weekly Rest Day is a real blessing, is being recognised in France, notwithstanding the reproach which attaches to that country for its "Continental Sunday." We are glad to observe that at a recent meeting of shareholders of the Paris-Lyons Railway, there was a debate on the important subject of Sabbath observance, in the course of which the manager of the railway is reported to have said:—

> The Board was not by any means indifferent to the question; it would, however, be impossible to give a weekly day of rest to every employé without recasting the entire railway legislation. As a matter of fact, none of the clerks did Sunday work, except in very rare cases of urgent business, neither did the navvies or workmen. The guards and drivers enjoyed one day of rest in every eight or ten. As regarded goods' stations, they could not be closed without permission from the Government, which had been applied for. In France, Sunday is the very day on which people travel most; there are extra trains on the suburban lines, and they are crammed. The difficulty may be met to some extent by a more highly organised service, and the company will grudge no expense it might entail.

The circulation of immoral literature in France is also being looked up. Hitherto the directors of the Paris-Lyons Railway have not exercised their right to exclude any objectionable book which the stall contractors may introduce, but henceforth they intend to do so. There is ground for great rejoicing in these indications of a really healthy zeal in France.

All true friends of the young will hail with approval the action of the Lord Mayor of London in discontinuing the supply of wine to the younger boys of the Bluecoat School on the occasion of their customary Easter visit to the Mansion House. We sincerely trust that this excellent innovation will now become an established practice.

The British Weekly announces that a "Discussion of the Atonement" is about to be commenced in its pages. The principles to be observed are stated as follows:—

> It is well to explain that we shall not seek to go beyond the Scriptures. Considerations drawn from other regions have weight, but they belong rather to an advanced stage of the argument. But in treating the evidence of Scripture, we recognise that light and truth are still to break forth from the Word.

This is well enough, and under the guidance of the Spirit much good may result, but we are not so assured as to the soundness of the following reasoning:—

> As for the Primitive Church, we hold that they started from the understanding they had of the book put into their hands. Thus they are no law to us who have had the book and the interpreting Spirit longer. We hold the same about the Reformers, the Puritans, and our fathers, though believing that in many respects orthodoxy has retrograded rather than advanced since the Reformation.

We fear that the lapse of time has not made men understand Christian doctrine better than did the Apostles and their immediate successors, and that "orthodoxy has retrogaded rather than advanced," not only "since the Reformation," but since the days of the Primitive Church itself. If we have had "the interpreting Spirit longer," probably the early Christians had it stronger. We shall be glad, however, if the proposed discussion shows that our fears are groundless, and hope that a useful purpose will be achieved by its mode of dealing with this sacred subject.

Miss Stirling, of the Salvation Army, previous to her departure to complete her term of 100 days' imprisonment in Chillon Castle, bade farewell to a meeting of friends at the Portman-rooms, Baker-street, W., on Wednesday afternoon. Miss Stirling has already suffered incarceration in a prison-cell for fifty-three days, for having admitted children to religious meetings in the Canton Vaud, without having sufficiently assured herself of their parents' consent, which she believed they had. Her appeal to the Federal Tribunal has been rejected, although the judges have intimated their impression that the sentence was unduly severe. We are sure our readers will uphold this devoted sister in prayer, that the days of enforced solitude may prove days of communion with her Lord, that her heart may be filled with praise, and that she may come forth more than ever qualified to declare the unsearchable riches of God.

In The Nonconformist and Independent, Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes gives an interesting and instructive retrospect of the missions he has conducted (forty-six in number) during the last two years. Amongst other "impressions" he chronicles the following:—One important use of a mission is that it follows up the effect often produced upon the hearts of hearers on the Sabbath-day, instead of allowing it to wear off. That the attitude of Christians present, "receptive or non-receptive, believing fully or feebly," has much to do with its success. That "prayer and pains" should precede and follow such effort. "Good preparation for a mission is itself a mission."

In each place visited, Mr. Hallowes usually devotes one afternoon to Foreign Missions, and one to Social Purity, thus giving a practical turn to his teaching. He also believes that much might be accomplished by missions of three days' duration, when it is inconvenient to extend them for a longer time. There is much else that we have not touched upon, which our readers, who are interested in this very important subject, will be well repaid for studying.

An article in the current number of The Quarterly Review, upon "Waste," is so valuable and timely a contribution to the subject with which it deals, that it is to be regretted it is not accessible in a cheaper form for wide circulation. The question of the intemperate and unwise use of non-intoxicants is thoughtfully touched upon, and much wise advice is given in regard to many habits which, seemingly innocent in themselves, are yet productive of waste, and might with advantage be forsaken.

Perhaps, however, the most striking of the writer's remarks are those in which he censures the labouring classes for their imitation of the richer classes in the matter of dress, many workmen now-a-days wearing clothes quite unsuited to their occupations. In this direction there certainly is room for great improvement, the desire for cheap finery being productive of much waste, which might with great benefit be avoided. The upper classes have, however, set an unhealthy example as regards luxury in dress, as in other things, and perhaps the needed reform ought to be inaugurated by those who are mainly responsible for the present excess.

It is stated that the voluntary contributions to the Episcopal Protestant Church in Ireland, during 1888, amounted to no less a sum than £148,000, an increase of over eleven thousand on those of the year 1887. Since the disestablishment the sum of £3,500,000 has been contributed, and the total sum now appropriated to parochial sustentation is something under £4,000,000. Very painful statements are put forward year by year in regard to the distress of numbers of the poorer clergy, but in the face of figures such as these it is not very easy to see why there should be such striking inequalities in the ranks of a body of men not much exceeding twelve hundred in number.

We hope the following letter, which appeared in The Times of Thursday, last week, will meet with a hearty and universal response from those to whom it is addressed :—

Sir,—Will you kindly grant space for a few words on behalf of the observance of the Sabbath at the forthcoming Paris Exhibition? You are aware the Sabbath is not regarded there as a day of rest as it is by our British public, and we presume the Exhibition will be open on Sundays as on other days, but we trust all our English exhibitors will unanimously join in closing their exhibits on the Sabbath Day, and so teach our French brethren one good lesson.—The Harrison Patent Knitting Machine Company, Exhibitors, 133, Portland-street, Manchester.

It is stated that bull-fights with Spanish bulls are to be held in Paris during the forthcoming Exhibition. They are to take place weekly, and arrangements are made to accommodate for the disgusting sight thirty thousand people. The animals, it is said, are not to be killed by sword-thrusts, but simply tortured until they are no longer fit to make entertainment. When we read of the hideous pagan spectacles of the Flavian amphitheatre we are ready to think that Christianity has created a new humanity. Alas, there are modern tendencies that awake us from such a dream.

A correspondent, writing with respect to the state of our English villages, says :—

Drink is prosecuting its deadly work. In my village most of the children are brought up to drink beer; in harvest time a youth of sixteen will be allowed (by Christians) as much as three pints a day. What is the Church doing to counteract this state of things? Should there not be a united effort put forth by all true Christians to have no dealings with the accursed thing; to put it far from them? Not long ago a person gave me to understand that Mr. ——, the curate of her parish, was very nice, and, she added, "He invited my husband to go and have a pipe and a glass with him." It would have argued better for the welfare of the village youths if he had invited the husband to help him in forming a temperance class, and to get all the village boys and girls to sign the pledge.

It was recently said by a Paris publisher "Only two topics pay in French novels—blasphemy and lubricity, according to a word of Mr. Matthew Arnold." Such has been the outcome of sceptical philosophy, and, says Dr. Pressensé, in The Christian World :—

I note with deep regret the unblushing immorality of many of the theatrical performances of to-day... There is, indeed, a hopeful feature, and that is, the ever-deepening sadness and the pessimism that characterises the productions of French fiction.

It would be well for certain classes in England, with their materialistic drifts, to learn a lesson from this gloomy pessimism of France. Materialism is a strong enemy of man. It kills the nobler emotions out of which joy comes. It makes the senses the masters of life, and puts men on a lower level than that of brutes. No wonder that without conscience, and God, the soul by its misery protests against the swine's food with which the materialist tries to satisfy himself.

It is well that the following facts should be printed in Belgium on a red placard, and hung up, as they are, in workshops, with the approval of manufacturers:—With a population of six millions the annual consumption of alcohol is in Belgium seventy millions of quarts (litres). The population is increasing at the rate f 14 per cent.; the consumption of alcohol at 37 per cent.; madness at 45 per cent.; immorality at 74 per cent.; while suicide is increasing upon the past at the rate of 80 per cent., and mendicity 150 per cent. There are 5,500 schools, and 136,000 drinking places. It is of God's pity that in every kingdom protestors against this all-wasting traffic are raised up, but the connivance of Governments with such a fearful and costly source of misery and crime is becoming intolerable.

The Hospital, referring to the fact that there has been some excitement in Scotland in consequence of a nun taking the veil at Dumfries, the occasion being the first of the kind since the Reformation, takes wise advantage of the opportunity to make some sensible observations in regard to "consecrated women," and we can only regret that it is but seldom our secular press deals so pointed and aptly with such a topic. Amongst other remarks, the writer of the article says :—

Every nurse ought to consecrate her life more or less to the work, because it is a labour which demands the best that can be offered, and it is not to be lightly taken up, or hastily repented of. But the days of convents, we hope, are over for ever, and women with their great capacities for doing, as well as suffering, will never again, in great numbers, lock themselves up behind barred gratings... To fly from the world is surely a cowardly act, to fight with evil, as manifested in disease, is surely a brave one. If women wish to consecrate their lives, let them consecrate them to deeds, and not to words.

This day week The Standard had a very fair and generous leader on the Eight Hours' Labour Question, which is widely agitating the working men. It recommends perfect frankness on the part of opponents, and contends that the British workman can now-a-days appreciate honest opposition. It holds, moreover, that because of this reasonableness the question will not become dangerous. Whether this be so or no, the agitation for shorter hours of labour in many occupations is a just one, and the practical bearing of the consideration for others, which our Christian religion urges, is among the most pressing demands of the age. This only can solve the labour question.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—One of the most interesting occasions that we have ever seen in connection with these institutions was the Easter Festival at the Stepney Home last week. There was an immense crowd of friends and sympathisers, and the only drawback was the want of room. Next week we hope to give notes of Dr. Barnardo's excellent address to the young people present.

THE MAY MEETINGS.—Those who wish to get the fullest accounts of these numerous anniversaries should subscribe for the ten daily issues of The Christian World, published from Tuesday to Saturday of this and next week. The ten numbers will be sent by post for 1s. 3d. (J. Clarke & Co., 13, Fleet-street, E.C.). The first number, dated Tuesday last, contains four sermons, besides full reports of meetings, and is really a wonderful penny-worth.

NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSION.—Some fifty of the workers of this Mission spent Good Friday amid the humble tenements of the dock labourers at Millwall. Street after street was made vocal with sacred song and Gospel testimony. At a crowded meeting in the mission-hall in the evening searching and refreshing addresses were given. Easter Monday found Mr. Chorley and his workers in Victoria Park, where the living voice was supplemented by the distribution of a large number of Gospel books, which were everywhere well received. The evening meeting of this occasion was held in the Balls Pond Hall of the Mission, and was largely attended.

Dr. Fulton and Romanism.

The Christian public of the New England States have lately been familiar with the name and speech of Dr. Fulton, as one of the keenest adversaries of the Romish Apostasy. Some two years since he felt an irresistible call to enter the lists as a speaker and writer on Romish teaching and practice, and for that purpose he resigned his pastoral charge in Brooklyn. He was moved to this, not merely in the interests of Protestantism as the birthright of the nation, but with a view to the enlightenment and salvation of individual Roman Catholics. He threw himself into the work heart and soul, and he has not been without an ample reward.

Nowhere, perhaps, has the fruit of his labours been seen more distinctly than in Boston, Mass. That New England city had for years past, in its municipal and social arrangements, been under the heel of Romish officials. The Bible was tabooed, and religious freedom was hemmed in on all sides. In August, 1887, Dr. Fulton preached his first sermon in Boston, exposing the inherent rottenness and the oppressive character of the Romish system. That sermon may be described as one of the matches that lighted the torch which has, in the providence of God, set the city of Boston fairly on fire with Anti-Popish zeal. The effect of the labours of Dr. Fulton, Rev. Joseph Cook, and other reformers, was seen last December, when the city arose in its might, and at the polls defeated the Romanists, so that now its Mayor and other civic officials are thoroughly Protestant, and freedom to teach the Bible and preach the Gospel is happily restored. Boston may be trusted, we think, to retain the precious possession of religious liberty which it has won.

Dr. Fulton is now on a visit to Europe. He is expected to speak in the Hall of Mr. R. Mellor, Nottingham, on Sunday and Monday next. He purposes being present at the meeting of the Protestant Alliance in Exeter Hall, on May 16. Immediately thereafter he intends to proceed to Rome, in order to study the workings of Popery at its fountain-head. We expect to see him back in England in July, when, if the way opens up, he is desirous of raising his voice as a witness against the abominations and manifold evils of the Papal system. We can certainly promise that those who may hear Dr. Fulton will have their interest awakened by his glowing recitals and experiences. May he be enabled to arouse from its lethargy our country, that seems in danger of dropping into "the lap of Rome"!

Dr. Fulton's pen, as well as his voice, has been busy; he has written four books on different phases of Roman Catholic doctrine and practice. They are :—"Why Priests should Wed"; "Washington in the Lap of Rome"; "Rome in America"; and "The Fight with Rome." The first of these will be published in a week or two, in popular form, by Mr. John Kensit, of Paternoster-row.

Communications for Dr. Fulton may be sent either to our care, or to the office of the Protestant Alliance, 9, Strand, W.C.

Missions and their Friends.

We have already directed attention to an important series of papers by "A Friend of Missions" which has just been concluded in The Methodist Times. They are now issued in a pamphlet, "A New Missionary Policy for India."* They were introduced by an editorial article headed, "The Fatal Mistake of Dr. Duff," which is said to have consisted in his conclusion, "when he was only twenty-four years of age, and after he had been in India for but six short weeks, that the missionary policy of all the missionary societies must be reversed!" His own proposal was "to educate the native aristocracy into Christianity, rather than to begin with Christ at the other end of the social scale, and to preach the Gospel to the poor and the despised. None can doubt the purity of Dr. Duff's motives and the intensity of his convictions. But no affectionate reverence for his memory ought to shut our eyes to the plain and palpable fact that his policy is a failure."

The writer of the articles quotes Rev. F. W. Gostick as saying in The Harvest Field:

> There should surely be some overwhelming reason to account for the fact that missionary societies are spending 37 per cent. of the large sum which they annually spend on secondary education, and 67 per cent. of the amount spent on colleges, on this small class, and also for the fact that so many of the societies' most able men should be given to this work.

It is contended, on the contrary, that

> The record of actual conversions in the high schools and colleges which have been carried on by Dr. Duff and his successors is lamentably brief... It may well be doubted whether the mission high schools and colleges can show an average number of Brahman conversions of one for each school and college for every five years of their existence. Meanwhile they have been diverting from evangelistic work the energies and talents of at least three-fourths of the ablest men sent out by all the Protestant missionary societies...

Nor is the ill result of Dr. Duff's system a merely negative one. The writer asserts—

> Christianity has no more pronounced foes in India to-day than many of the Brahmans, who are indebted for their education to Christian liberality. The men who are organising Hindu tract societies, and endeavouring in every possible way to promote an anti-Christian renaissance of Hindu thought and feeling, have in numberless instances graduated from the missionary colleges. This very fact enables them to parody and travesty the history and teaches of our Scriptures...If Christ and his Apostles had adopted the policy now pursued by so many Indian missionary societies, they would have attacked Judaism in its citadel by devoting all their energies to the conversion of the Pharisees. But we know that, whilst Christ uttered his scathing rebukes to the Pharisees, the glad tidings were ever proclaimed to the multitudes...

The conclusion is that experience teaches, and the "Friend of Missions" counsels, that our great missionary societies should devote the money now expended in higher education, partly to primary schools for the masses of the people, and partly to the development of native agencies; and send their best men to the work of preaching the Gospel.

The second paper dwells upon "the evils of a false position."

> Every missionary landing in India finds himself at once received into "society." In Calcutta he is presented at Court, and makes his bow to the Viceroy. In the other Presidency towns he is always welcome at the public receptions at Government House. The missionary in India with £300 a year and his bungalow—and this may be taken as a fair average of all the societies—is able, with ease and comfort, to mix in Anglo-Indian society in a style which he could not possibly do on less than £1000 a year in England....Viewed from the native standpoint, his social position is yet more "magnificent." The day-labourer in India gets as wage from two annas to four annas (2d. to 4d.) a day. The English artisan gets as many shillings. It is therefore plain that the relation of the missionary's income to that of the masses whom he is sent out to evangelise is in the same ratio as that of an Anglican bishop to the day-labourers in his diocese....The effect of this mode of living is inevitably to separate the missionary from the people, instead of bringing him into close contact with them. It is almost impossible for any man to occupy for years the position of a feudal lord without developing the feudal spirit. Men do successfully fight against it here and there, but it is not in human nature generally to wield almost absolute power, and receive abject reverence, without losing sight, more or less, of the great Christian principle of the brotherhood of all men.

The writer is careful here to state that this state of things was not brought about by the present generation of missionaries, and many of them are more than willing, of which they have given substantial proof, "to adopt a change in the style of living all round."

The third article points out a Via Media between the condition described in the previous paper and the asceticism and enforced celibacy which some have advocated. With regard to the latter, it is said that "the Hindu Fakir can always beat the Christian pseudo-Fakir on his own ground. Christianity is not an ascetic religion. Hinduism, in some of its phases, is essentially so. Unnatural asceticism is anti-Christian, and these attempts have so far proved that Christianity cannot be propagated by non-Christian methods."

> What, then, is the untrodden Via Media? In the India of to-day there are three totally distinct modes of living—the Anglo-Indian, the Eurasian, and the Native. The first of these is that adopted by the civilian and military classes and by the missionaries of the great Protestant missionary societies. The second is that adopted by the large town population of mixed descent and by the Roman Catholic priesthood. The third is that of the great mass of the people, which the Salvation Army has tried to adopt with such disastrous results. Last week I endeavoured to show that great evils arose from the adoption of the first by our missionaries. I now ask all true friends of missions, including the missionaries themselves, whether the time has not come when all those missionary societies who disbelieve in the principle of enforced celibacy should, for the first time, and unanimously, adopt the second of these styles of living. It would mean a considerable sacrifice for all concerned. It would involve the reduction of stipends from £300 to £150 per annum for married missionaries, and a corresponding reduction for single men....
> It may possibly be argued that health will suffer seriously from such a change in the mode of living. But it would be exceedingly difficult to prove that the health of non-commissioned officers in the army, foremen in mills and places of business, and other Europeans who live in India on an income of £100 to £200 per annum, is worse in any way than that of civilians and commissioned officers in the army.
>
> The advantages of the style of living which I have ventured to call the "Via Media" over ascetic methods, which have found so much favour of late, are manifold. There are very important advantages in the existence of one happy Christian home in a purely heathen Indian town. It is an object-lesson of the blessings of Christianity which has more weight than hundreds of sermons. Many educated Hindus to-day watch with a scarcely-to-be-regretted envy the fellowship and sympathy which unite the English missionary and his wife. The missionary home is a powerful influence for the amelioration of the lot of Indian women and the regeneration of Indian society. On the lines of the Salvation Army this phase of missionary influence vanishes. This is only one of many advantages which the "Via Media" has over the methods of the ascetic school.
> The gain which would result to the missionary societies from the substitution of this for their present policy would obviously be great. The immense distance which now separates the English padre from his Indian flock would be at least diminished by one-half.

It is insisted that three items of expenditure should on no account be diminished, but rather increased, viz.: the allowances for children in England; for sickness; and the present sanatoria on the hills must also be maintained unsparingly.

The concluding paper discusses "the secret of missionary finance," and advocates, after the example of Mr. Hudson Taylor and General Booth, that no pains or energy should be spared to record vividly the Progress of the War. The dull annual report must be supplanted by monthly or even weekly literature, illustrated in a popular fashion, and recording the work from week to week with a freshness and accuracy emulating that with which the secular press would record the progress of a great European war...Happy will be that Church and prosperous will be that missionary society whose leaders will thus devote all their energies to gain the sympathy and confidence of the great masses of the Christian public.

We cannot suppose that these criticisms and propositions will pass unchallenged. We shall look with interest for the replies which may follow. Our own impression is that the work in India is not so closely confined to one pattern as would appear from these sketches; and that in the future it need not be closely confined to the writer's via media. There is surely room for educational work like that of Dr. Duff, though it should not have the chief place allotted to it. It is well to call attention to the home life of the missionary as a powerful factor in the evangelisation of India; and to show that in Fakirism the Englishman cannot compete with the Hindu. We do not see why there should not be missionaries in each of the three circles into which Indian society is broadly divided. The main object, however, must be, first, definite conversion to God, and then the encouragement of native preachers and the formation of native churches under native pastors. The "Friend of Missions" is unquestionably right in his contention that the Scriptural course of the Gospel is upward from the poor to the rich, and not downward from the educated to the illiterate. "To the poor the Gospel is preached."

Rev. Sam Jones in San Francisco.

This evangelist concluded his meetings in San Franscisco on March 31. The last service was a memorable one. Every available inch of standing room was taken, and thousands were turned away for want of room.

The meetings throughout were very largely attended. The secular press misrepresented the evangelist's utterances in various ways, and many were thus prejudiced against him, but not those who heard him. He has the power of sending his messages home personally. He fearlessly denounces sin in every form, and lukewarm church members are well shaken up. It is thought by those able to judge that fully 1200 real conversions were recorded during the meetings. We thank God for sending his servant to us. Robert S. Boyns.

San Franscisco, April 3.

BERLIN.—During the past winter a few courageous Christians, several of them pastors and doctors, have conducted a campaign against immorality, which stalks in Berlin as unblushingly as in most other large cities. The public conscience has been effectually stirred, in spite of the opposition of many influential journals. Never for a moment asking whether the tales running in their columns were inflaming evil passions, the editors of the organs of culture and modern progress have railed at the denouncers of wickedness, alleging it to be "immoral" publicly to rebuke social evils!

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Some Remarks on the Papers of "A Missionary."

V.—Missionary Interest at Home.

I HAVE spoken of Missionary Funds, and of Missionary Interest so far as they represent it. But there is another branch of the subject, upon which "A Missionary" dwells, and upon which I must say a few words.

"A Missionary," in his second chapter, notices some recent signs of awakened interest, and says, "Thus the Church seems to have shaken off the sleep of ages." God grant that this may prove to be true! But our friend, when he speaks of "the Church," is really speaking of a comparatively small circle; and it is quite evident that he knows very little of anything going on outside that circle. The circle which he calls "the Church," is the circle of Christian people mostly connected with the revival movement of the last thirty years, with Mr. Moody's English campaign, and with the Mildmay Conference. Now, I am one of those who recognise to the full the wonderful work which God has graciously done in and by that circle of his servants. But there are vast numbers of godly, praying, consecrated people who have scarcely, if at all, been touched by it, and who know as little about it as its leaders know about them.

Now it is true that the circle really referred to by "A Missionary" has lately awakened to a much livelier sense of the solemn obligation involved in the Lord's great commission. In the estimation of many Christians, it was the reproach of the revival and evangelistic and consecration movements at home, that they almost entirely ignored foreign missions. Of course, the immediate object of these movements was different; but the fact really was that the leaders in them were for the most part not awake upon this subject. There were exceptions to this statement, no doubt. Mildmay began early to look abroad (though Mildmay itself, as we know it, is little more than twenty years old). Mr. Grattan Guinness's important work is not new. There were ardent individuals like Major Malan. But my general statement will not be disputed. The last half-dozen years have seen a mighty and a blessed change in the circles referred to. Mr. Grattan Guinness has not given his rousing appeals at the Mildmay Conference in vain. Mr. Hudson Taylor's quiet persuasive influence has been honoured of God to touch many hearts. THE CHRISTIAN has done a noble work by its wonderful collection of foreign missionary news from all parts of the world. Perhaps our brother, Reginald Radcliffe, may be called the Apostle of the new movement, or, let me say, the Elijah the Prophet. I thank God for Elijah with all my heart; still, he only began to lift up his voice a few years ago; and I have sometimes felt that while he believed it was almost a solitary voice, there were "seven thousand in Israel," nay, seventy and seven thousand, quiet people in obscure town parishes and remote country villages, who never even heard the names of Reginald Radcliffe and Grattan Guinness, but who knew the names of scores of missionaries, and watched their work, and read their printed letters, and prayed for them, and worked for them. And if this was so in the Church of England, as it was to my personal knowledge, much more was it so among the Wesleyans! Surely no one will suggest that missionary interest is a new thing with them!

Yes, it is not "the Church" that is waking up. In my judgment "the Church" as a whole is pretty fast asleep still. It is one important section (I don't mean denomination) that is waking up. But there have been other sections (again, I don't mean denominations) awake a long time, and working hard for the evangelisation of the world before the school represented by "A Missionary" touched it with their little fingers.

"A Missionary" reveals the narrow range of his vision by the illustrations he adduces of this awakening. He mentions the recent missionary conferences at Manchester, Sunderland, and other places. I heartily thank God for them, because they have helped to awaken the circles that needed awakening; but there were many other circles awake before. "A Missionary" uses the expression, "the gathering hosts at Manchester" (and other places). I had the privilege of addressing the first of the new Missionary Conferences at Manchester, three or four years ago. It was deeply interesting, but it only touched a very limited circle, even of devoted Christian people. Perhaps three or four hundred were present. Some months afterwards I addressed the ordinary annual C.M.S. meeting in Manchester. It was held in the Free Trade Hall, which was thronged to the ceiling. I suppose there were four thousand present at least, and the hymn singing was overwhelming. I never judge meetings by the numbers attending: I well know that it is an utterly fallacious test. The smallest meeting is sometimes the most fruitful. Still it was not I who used the phrase "gathering hosts." But my point is that probably very few of either circle even knew of the meeting held by the other. Ergo, let us not generalise too quickly.

Again, "A Missionary" mentions, as an illustration of the awakening, the new Missionary Review of the World, published in America, under the editorship of Dr. Pierson and Dr. J. M. Sherwood. Most justly does he praise it. It has been warmly welcomed, and is eagerly read by all of us who are sufficiently wide in our sympathies. And I rejoice that there is now a constituency for such a magazine.

But "A Missionary" is probably quite unacquainted with the missionary journals of long standing and wide circulation, which have prepared the way for it. For the first fifty years of this century there was a comprehensive one, which recorded the work of all societies, called The Missionary Register. Its volumes are most deeply interesting. It was gradually superseded, as missions extended, by the magazines published by the different societies. No one journal could possibly keep pace with the growing work. The Church Missionary Intelligencer, with its sixty-four pages monthly, and masses of close type, contains as much matter as Dr. Pierson's new Missionary Review, yet I find it utterly fails to record adequately even the work of the one society it represents. But it is supplemented by lighter magazines, quarterly papers, &c., and altogether we circulate over two million copies annually, of which one million are sold. This is one society only. What if I added on the others? Surely some few Christians were awake before my friend Dr. Pierson began his admirable Review!

May I venture to allude to one curious illustration of what I am saying. A few years ago I wrote a certain article in The Church Missionary Intelligencer. Certain paragraphs in that article were quoted shortly afterwards in certain tracts. From those tracts the same passages got quoted in one or two magazines. These magazines were quoted by other magazines, both in Europe and America, and the result is that again and again I meet with my own words, sometimes the very identical words, sometimes shaken up and re-arranged, in all sorts of unexpected places. I have actually heard them delivered in eloquent speeches. Of course their original source is utterly unknown to the writers and speakers who have honoured them by unconsciously reproducing them. I am not sure that "A Missionary" himself has not been influenced by them, though he does not use the very words. But the fact is that the new movement owes much more to the quiet, older movements than it is willing to acknowledge, or, indeed, than it is at all aware of. Many friends are like a revered member of the C.M.S. Committee, now gone to his rest, who one day came to me with one of the undenominational missionary papers in his hand, and said to me, "Look there! why don't you give us in your Gleaner an interesting article like that?" I looked at the article: it was copied bodily from the Gleaner itself, without acknowledgment!

"A Missionary," again, speaks of the recent "missionary crusade" preached by two or three of our honoured American brethren in the North of England and in Scotland, as a new thing. As regards Scotland, did he ever hear of Dr. Duff? Perhaps Dr. Duff, having had the misfortune to be an educational missionary, is regarded as out of court; nevertheless, as a missionary pleader at home, we have no man living who (to use an expressive colloquialism) can hold a candle to him. As regards England, is Robert Moffat so soon forgotten? But I will go further back, and come to much less mighty men. I have in my possession the actual original notes, written on half-sheets of note paper in a very minute hand, of sermons and speeches delivered by Rev. W. H. Havergal (the father of "F. R. H.") during a tour round Cornwall, for the Church Missionary Society, in 1826. Those speeches are very much like Mr. Reginald Radcliffe's and Mr. Hudson Taylor's in the present day. There is no tabulation of results; there were no results in those days to tabulate. There are no historical sketches of missions; missions, with one or two exceptions, as Tahiti and Sierra Leone, had as yet no history. They were appeals to the heart and conscience, based on the Lord's command and on the need of the heathen. Now, Mr. Havergal was but one of several devoted servants of the Lord who, in those days of slow travelling by stage coach, journeyed all over the country, preaching a "missionary crusade," and sowing the seed which did, very slowly, yet very surely, in uncongenial soil, and despite adverse influences of all kinds, spring up to the glory of God.

On the branches of the subject dealt with in this paper, "A Missionary" falls into unconscious mistakes from pure lack of knowledge. But his general conclusion is most true, and cannot be too earnestly emphasised. What is wanted is a higher spirit of consecration to the Lord. I believe it is strictly true that our missionaries have represented the very best and highest consecration attained to by the Christian Church; and if it is desired to improve the quality of the missionaries, the quality of home Christianity must be improved first. In one respect, without the invidiousness attaching to the phrase as used in the articles under review, we may speak of the "average missionary." There have been missionaries above the average in self-abnegation, devotion to the work, and likeness to Christ; just as there have been Christians above the average at home. Even the "average missionary," as a matter of fact, is generally above the average of home Christians (I mean true Christians, not professing merely); but home Christians have no right to expect it, or to complain if it is not so. But there is no doubt that what is called the "consecration movement" is now turning into missionary channels, and I unfeignedly rejoice at it. Many of the best candidates who now come forward avow their indebtedness to it: certainly this is so among the Church Missionary Society's candidates. But when a home Christian, who has been at a convention and there received some special spiritual blessing from the Lord, immediately begins to judge every man by his use or otherwise of certain phraseology, and to criticise severely the missionary who has come home after twenty years' arduous service and has never been at a convention in his life, because that missionary happens to use a slightly different spiritual dialect, I say that that home Christian shows very little of the spirit of Christ.

A PLACE FOR A HOLIDAY.

THE Vereinshaus (Mission House), Blankenburg, Schwartzathal, Thüringen, is a centre of evangelistic work. Situated at the entrance of the lovely Schwartza valley, with its splendid pine woods, exquisite scenery, and salubrious air, it offers to the tourist a charming resort, and to the tired worker a most refreshing rest, united with home comforts, and is within easy distance of Berlin, Dresden, Weimar, and the most interesting spots of Thüringen. Terms and other particulars may be had from Fräulein Von Weling, at the Mission House. References, Rev. Principal Cairns, D.D., Edinburgh, and Rev. D. B. Croom, Montrose.

Arrangements can be made for those wishing to remain the summer for the study of the language. The Mission House is entirely undenominational, and affords a good opportunity for an insight into Continental evangelistic work and acquaintance with many eminent Christian workers. An annual conference for the deepening of spiritual life is held in August. Any letters, accompanied by stamped envelope for reply, shall have immediate attention if addressed to Dr. Latchford, Medical Mission, St. Giles, W.C.

SIGNOR ROSTAN, of Messina, the deputation from the Waldesian Church Missions in Italy, has addressed meetings in many places in England. His appeal for support for the work has been heartily responded to.

ARMED EUROPE.

THE following letter has been addressed by Canon Westcott to The Guardian:—

SIR,—About fifteen years ago a writer in The Times called attention, in an impressive article, to the armaments of Europe. He showed that war itself could "add but little to the burden of warlike preparations which were then carried on in a period of unbroken peace"; that the forces, which were gathered ostensibly for security, were in fact the chief source of danger to nations which were filled with mutual suspicion; that "the evil already done was almost as great as any the world had yet suffered from, and was even more difficult to remedy." Since that date the armaments have been greatly increased, from six millions of men under arms, it is said, to ten and a half millions; the jealousies of the European nations have been inflamed; and those who speak with authority of the popular strain in Italy and Russia (if not already in France and Germany) describe it as close upon the breaking point. It can indeed hardly be otherwise. If material force is to be the only safeguard of freedom and right, there can be no prospect of peace, or even of stable rest, except in the dominion of a conqueror and the exhaustion of the conquered. A war of despair seems to be the natural issue of an indefinite period of continuous mistrust and increasing burdens.

The writer whom I have quoted laid the responsibility for the evil upon governments. "If such a state of things," he says, "is permitted to continue, it will be a disgrace to European statesmen." The real blame ought, I think, to be laid elsewhere. It rests upon Christians, and, in the largest measure, upon English Christians, who have been, and are, in a position to claim an impartial hearing from the Continental powers. But as yet they have not spoken with one voice. Our unhappy divisions have hid from us the grandeur, the power, and the obligations of our common faith in Christ, to our own great loss and to the loss of the world. There is, however, a prospect that we are beginning to take a truer view of our debt to the world. During the last few years there have been signs on many sides that there is a growing conviction that Christians, as Christians, have a witness to give on social questions. They have spoken on temperance and on purity. And now at length the time seems to have come when they can unite to express some of the views which they hold as to the true relations of States.

In the unavoidable absence of Lord Nelson, I was allowed to preside here at a meeting in which representatives of the Church of England and of the chief Nonconformist bodies were invited to consider their duty in regard to the warlike preparations of Europe. The following were present at the meeting: Mr. J. B. Braithwaite, Mr. W. C. Braithwaite, Mr. B. Broomhall, Mr. Percy W. Bunting. Rev. Dr. Clifford, Rev. Dr. Edmond, Mr. G. Gillett, Rev. J. P. Gledstone, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Rev. Dr. Westcott. Letters of apology for absence, with expressions of full sympathy with the objects of the meeting were received from Earl Nelson, the Dean of Worcester (Dr. Gott), Rev. Dr. R. Bruce, Rev. Dr. Falding, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Rev. Dr. A. Mackennal, Rev. Dr. Paton, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, Rev. Dr. Reynolds. After a full exchange of opinions, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

I. That in the opinion of this meeting the present condition of the armaments of Europe demands the urgent attention of all Christian Communions, with a view to—

(1) United prayer to Almighty God upon this subject.

(2) Combined action, in any ways possible, for the bringing about a simultaneous reduction of the armaments.

II. That with the object of carrying into effect the above resolution, the members of the present meeting pledge themselves to do their utmost to bring the resolution under the notice of their respective Communions.

III. That the members of this meeting resolve themselves into a Provisional Committee, with power to add to their number, to take such further action as may seem to be desirable; and that Messrs. G. Gillett, 9, Birchin-lane, E.C., and W. C. Braithwaite, 3, New-square, Lincoln's Inn, W.C., be requested to act as hon. secretaries of the Committee.

Note.—Those persons who wish to express their adherence to the movement are requested to send their names and addresses to either of the hon. secretaries.

We met for the most part as strangers to one another; but the spirit of the discussion, the calm, clear, sober words which were spoken, the steady determination to keep the treatment of the question free from the possibility of a political construction, the universal and deep sense, of what we owe to our one Master, in openly confessing his will, gave a strong pledge of the breadth of the sympathy with which the main resolution is likely to be received without difference of class or party.

Other cognate subjects were touched upon—the proposed Permanent Treaty of Arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, the significance of war as the extreme outcome of that spirit of selfish competition which follows from the acceptance of a material standard of well-being, the desirability of seeking co-operation with the movement on the part of the Roman and Greek Churches—but it seemed best to confine immediate action to a single point on which there was complete agreement.

The proposal to work for the simultaneous reduction of European armaments is definite, and deals with an urgent peril. It does not involve any abstract theories. It is not complicated by any considerations of party politics. It emphatically recognises that which is the object of our greatest statesmen. Such a disarmament would secure the lasting and honourable peace which the leaders of Europe have shown lately, once and again, that they sincerely desire. And we may reasonably hope that a strong expression of popular feeling will be welcome to those who have the conduct of affairs, as strengthening and encouraging them to adopt measures by which they may be delivered from the embarrassment of a policy which more and more tends to turn the provision for home defence into a menace. We are all sensible of the difficulties by which the question of disarmament is beset, but we cannot admit that they are insuperable.

If once we realise that the true interests of nations are identical, and not antagonistic, it must be possible to find some settlement of the existing causes of debate upon the Continent which will satisfy the legitimate aspirations of the great and generous nations in whose satisfaction Europe will find peace.

The effort has a wider bearing. I will venture to say that the opportunity for this confession of our faith is a gift of God. It is, I believe, a superficial view to refer the popular disparagement of Christianity, its origin, either to critical objections to its documents or to physical objections to its creed drawn from physical science. It springs in the last resort from moral causes.

Men can see that if our faith is true, we ought to have the remedy for the great sorrows of the world, and to show openly that we believe in its efficacy. They ask for great deeds and not only for great words. The claim is reasonable, and we must satisfy it or accept defeat. No unanswerable subtilties of literary or metaphysical argument will bring assurance to those who long passionately for the revelation of a living Lord. But if we are enabled to show that we have as Christians that which inspires us to work unfalteringly for a noble end, I believe that many who now range themselves against us will be ready to do homage to the truth which they have misinterpreted through our past faithlessness.

In this aspect we cannot forget that the favourable time for Christian action may soon pass away. The policy of disarmament, which can now be pressed as a service to the brotherhood of nations, is likely, before long, to find other advocacy, if the cause is not won in the name of God. And it will be an evil day for the world, if that which may now be so effected as to guard all the noblest heritages of the past, is at last extorted by the revolutionary movement of a class.

When Emerson said sadly, "The power of love as the basis of a state has never been tried," he proposed unconsciously the problem of the Church of Christ. To acknowledge the task which is laid upon us, even in this single matter which is now offered as the object of our prayers and labour, to approach it as men who know that they are not alone, to recognise in our trials the just retribution of our lukewarmness in times gone by, will be at least, if we see no immediate success, to make the fulfilment of the will of God for the nations easier for those who shall come after us.

XXVIII.—CHASTISEMENT.

HEBREWS xii.

IT is hardly possible to suppose that any shall read these lines who have not drunk of the bitter cup of affliction. Some may have even endured a great fight of afflictions. Squadron after squadron has been drawn up in array, and broken its regiments on the devoted soul. It has come to us in different forms, but in one form or another it has come to us all. Perhaps our physical strength and health have been weakened in the way; or we have been racked with unutterable anguish in mind or body; or have been obliged to see our beloved slowly slipping from the grasp of our affection, which was condemned to stand paralysed and helpless by. In some cases, affliction has come to us in the earning of our daily bread, which has been procured with difficulty and pain, whilst care has never been long absent from our hearts, or want from our homes. In others, homes which were as full of merry voices as the woods in spring of sweet-voiced choristers, are empty and silent. Ah! how infinite are the shades of grief! how extended the gamut of pain! How many can cry with the Psalmist, "All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me!"

We can see clearly the reason of all this suffering. The course of nature is out of joint. Man's sin has put not himself only, but the whole course of nature into collision with the will and law of God, so that it groans and travails in its pains. Selfishness has also alienated man from his fellows, inciting him to amass all that he can lay hands on for himself, oblivious to the bitter sufferings of those around him, and careless of their woes. Whilst behind the whole course of nature there is the incessant activity of malignant spirits, who, as in the case of Job, may be plotting against us, revelling in any mischief, which, for some great reasons, they are permitted to work to our hurt.

There are different ways in which affliction may be borne.—1. Some despise it (5).—They refuse to acknowledge any reason in themselves for its infliction. They reject the lesson it was designed to teach. They harden themselves in stoical indifference, resolving to bear it with defiant and desperate courage. 2. Some faint under it (5).—They become despondent and dispirited, or lose heart and hope. Like Pliable, they are soon daunted, and get out of the Slough of Despond with as little cost as possible to themselves; or, like Timorous and Mistrust, turn back from the lion's roar. 3. We ought to be in subjection.—Lifting the cup meekly and submissively to our lips; calmly and trustfully saying Amen to every billow and wave; lovingly trying to learn the lesson written on the page of trial; and bowing ourselves as the reeds of the river's edge to the sweeping hurricane of trial. But this, though the only true and safe course, is by no means an easy one.

Subjection in affliction is only possible when we can see in it the hand of the Father of spirits (9).—So long as we look at second causes, at men or things, as being the origin and source of our sorrows, we shall be filled alternately with burning indignation and hopeless grief. But when we come to understand that nothing can happen to us except as our Father permits, and that, though our trials may originate in some lower source, yet they become God's will for us, as soon as they are permitted to reach us through the defence of his environing presence, then we smile through our tears, we kiss the dear hand that uses another as its rod, we realise that each moment's pain originates in our Father's heart, and we are at rest. Judas may seem to mix the cup, and put it to our lips, but it is nevertheless the cup which our Father giveth us to drink; and shall we not drink it? Much of the anguish passes away from life's trials, as soon as we discern our Father's hand; then AFFLICTION BECOMES CHASTISEMENT.—There is a great difference between these two. Affliction may come from a malignant and unfriendly source, chastisement is the work of the Father, yearning over his little children, desiring to eliminate from their characters all that is unlovely and unholy, and to secure in them entire conformity to his character and will. But, before you can appropriate the comfort of these words, let me earnestly ask you, my reader, whether you are a child? None are children in the sense of which we are speaking now, save those who have been born into the Divine family by regeneration, through the grace of the Holy Spirit. Of this birth, faith is the sure sign and token, for it is written: Those that believe on his name, are born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. Are you a child? Does the Spirit witness with your spirit that you are born of God? Can you look up into his face and cry, Abba, Father? If so, you are surrounded by your Father's tender, loving care. Nothing can reach you without passing through the cordon of his protection. If, therefore, affliction does lay its rough hand upon your arm, arresting you, then be sure that it must first have obtained permission from One who loves you infinitely, and who is willing to expose both you and Himself to pain because of the vast profit on which He has set his heart.

1. All chastisement has a purpose.—There is nothing so absolutely crushing in sorrow as to feel oneself drifting at the mercy of some chance wave, sweeping forward to an unknown shore. But a great calm settles down upon us, when we realise that life is a schoolhouse, in which we are being taught by our Father Himself, who sets our lessons as He sees we require them. The drill-sergeant has a purpose in every exercise; the professor of music, an object in every scale; the farmer an end in every method of husbandry. "He does not thresh fitches with a sharp threshing instrument, neither is a cart-wheel turned about upon cummin; but the fitches are beaten out with a staff, and the cummin with a rod." So God has a purpose in every pain He permits us to feel. There is nothing fortuitous, or empirical, or capricious, in his dealings with his own.

The purposes which chastisement subserves are very various. Of course we know that the penalty of our sins has been laid on the head of our great Substitute, and that, therefore, we are for ever relieved from their penal consequences. But though that is so, yet often chastisement follows on our wrong-doing; not that we expiate the wrong-doing by suffering, but that we may be compelled to regard it in its true light. Amid the pain we suffer we are compelled to review our past. The carelessness, the unwatchfulness, the prayerlessness, which have been working within us, pass slowly before our minds. We see where we had been going astray for long months or years. We discover how deeply and incessantly we had been grieving God's Holy Spirit. We find that an alienation had been widening the breach between God and our souls, which, if it had proceeded further, must have involved moral ruin. Perhaps we never see our true character until the light dies off the landscape, and the clouds overcast the sky, and the wind rises moaningly about the house of our life.

Times of affliction lead to heart-searchings, and we become increasingly aware of sins of which we had hardly thought at all. And even though the offence may be confessed and put away, so long as affliction lasts there is a subdued temper of heart and mind, which is most favourable to religious growth. We cannot forget our sin so long as the stroke of the Almighty lies on our soul, and we are compelled to maintain a habit of holy watchfulness against its recurrence.

It is also in affliction that we learn that fellowship with the sufferings of Christ and that sympathy for others which are so lovely in true Christians. That is not the loftiest type of character which, like the Chinese pictures, has no background of shadow. Even Christ could only learn obedience by the things that He suffered, or become a perfect High Priest by the ordeal of temptation. And how little can we enter into the inner depths of his soul, unless we tread the shadowed paths, or lie prostrate in the secluded glades of Gethsemane. We who attempt to assuage the griefs of mankind must ourselves be acquainted with grief, and become men of sorrows.

Be sure, then, that not one moment's pain is given you to bear that could have been dispensed with. Each has been the subject of Divine consideration before permitted to come, and each will be removed directly its needed mission is fulfilled.

2. Special discipline is evidence of special love (6).—It costs us much less to fling our superfluities on those we love, than to cause them pain. Indulgence is a sign, not of intense but of slender love. The heart that really and wisely loves will bear the pain of causing pain, will incur the risk of being misjudged, will not flinch from misrepresentation and reproach; from all of which a less affection would warily shrink. It is because our Father loves us that He chastens us. He would not take so much trouble over us if we were not dear to his heart. It is because we are sons that He sets Himself to scourge us. But, oh, how much He suffers as He wields that scourge of small cords! Yet, hail each blow, for each sting and smart cries to thee that thou art being received into the inner circle of love.

When suppliants for his healing help came to our Lord, for the most part He hastened to their side. But on one occasion He lingered yet two days in the place where He was. He dared to face the suspicion of neglect, and the loving impeachment of bereaved love, because He loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus. He loved them too much to be satisfied with doing small things for them, or revealing only fragments of his great glory. He longed to enrich them with his precious revelation of resurrection life. But his end could only be reached at the cost of untold sorrow, even unto death. Lazarus must die, and lie for two days in the grave, before his mightiest miracle could be wrought. And so He let the thunder-cloud break on the home He loved, that He might be able to flash on it light which broke into a rainbow of prismatic glory.

If you are signally visited with suffering, such as you cannot connect with persistence in carelessness or neglect, then take it that you are one of Heaven's favourites. It is not as men think, the child of fortune and earthly grace, dowered with gifts in prodigal profusion, who is best beloved of God, but oftenest the child of poverty and pain and misfortune and heart-break. "If ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards and not sons." Oh, ye who escape the rod, begin seriously to ask whether indeed ye be born again!

3. Pain is fraught with precious results (10, 11).—"Not joyous but grievous: nevertheless afterward." How full of meaning is "the afterward." Who shall estimate the hundredfold of blessing from each moment of pain? The Psalms are crystallised tears. The Epistles were in many cases written in prison. The greatest teachers of mankind have learnt their most helpful lessons in sorrow's school. The noblest characters have been forged in a furnace. Acts which will live for ever, masterpieces of art and music and literature, have originated in ages of storm, and tempest, and heartrending agony. And so also is it with our earthly discipline. The ripest results are sorrow-borne.

"The path of sorrow, and that path alone, Leads to the Land where sorrow is unknown."

Holiness is the product of sorrow, when sanctified by the grace of God. Not that sorrow necessarily makes us holy, because that is the prerogative of the Divine Spirit; and, as a matter of fact, many sufferers are hard and complaining and unlovely. But that sorrow predisposes us to turn from the distractions of earth to receive those influences of the grace of God, which are most operative where the soul is calm and still, sitting in a veiled and darkened room, whilst suffering plies body or mind. Who of us does not feel willing to suffer, if only this precious result shall accrue, that we may be partakers of his holiness?

Fruit is another product (11).—Where, think you, does the Husbandman of souls most often see the fruit He loves so well, and hear the tones of deepest trust? Not where his gifts are most profuse, but where they are most meagre. Not within the halls of successful ambition or satiated luxury, but in cottages of poverty, and rooms dedicated to ceaseless pain. Genial almost to a miracle is the soil of sorrow. Necessary beyond all count is the pruning knife of pain.

Count if you will the precious kinds of fruit. There is patience which endures the Father's will; and trust that sees the Father's hand behind the rough disguise; and peace that lies still, content with the Father's plan; and righteousness that conforms itself to the Father's requirements; and love that clings more closely than ever to the Father's heart; and gentleness which deals leniently with others, because of what we have learnt of ourselves.

Nor is it for very long. Jesus, who endured the cross, and shame, and spitting, is now set down on the right hand of the throne of God. Ere long we, too, shall come out of the great tribulation, to sit by his side. Every tear kissed away; every throb of anguish stayed; every memory of pain allayed by God's anodyne of bliss. The results will be ours for ever. But sorrow and sighing, which may have been our daily comrades to the gates of the celestial city, will flee away as we step across its threshold, unable to exist in that radiant glory. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain." "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." "Wherefore lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees."

VIII.—THAT COUPLE.

One Sunday morning when it was raining hard, and consequently the pews were emptier than usual, there strayed into church two strangers, who were duly shown into one of the vacant pews in front of the pulpit. They were distinguished-looking people; the gentleman was dark, with raven black hair, and his lady was as fair as he was dark.

Evidently they were stranded by the accident of the weather, and being unable to get to their usual place of worship, had turned in at the first open door they could find. They attracted considerable attention, not from any eccentricity or peculiar behaviour on their part, but from their remarkable appearance. Indeed, they were reverent and attentive throughout the service. When the text was given out they retired each to a corner of the pew, and settled themselves as if to endure the sermon.

The subject was taken from the twelfth chapter of St. Luke: "A man's life doth not consist in the abundance of the things he possesseth." The preacher said, "Neither does it consist in the use we make of our abundance, but in the use we make of it for God. We really possess nothing as absolute owners. Our possessions are God's gift, or rather loan, to us, to be used for Him, and we shall have to give an account of them hereafter."

The couple opened their eyes, and looked at one another, then looked up at the pulpit. They afterwards told me, that they were accustomed to sermons which put subjects before them for their consideration or otherwise, as they were disposed; but this one came straight at them as if it was intended for them alone, and what was more, it was upon a verse about which they had been speaking together at breakfast in the morning.

As the sermon went on, the lady took a paper or letter out of her pocket, the gentleman handed her a pencil-case, and she began forthwith taking notes, looking at her husband every now and then. If they had been within reach, no doubt they would have nudged one another, as some people do.

The preacher said: "What ingratitude and denial of God it is for anyone to speak of my goods, my barns, where shall I bestow my goods? how shall I enlarge my barns? The poor deluded man we read of in this Gospel, was only thinking of himself and his own advancement and progress in wealth. He did not acknowledge or thank God from whom his abundance had come." With illustrations and stories the lesson was sent home, or at least the intention was to do so, that men might be led to remember their Creator, and more than that, their Redeemer who loved them.

The couple remained upon their knees in silence after the sermon, and then rose up and sat in their pew till I passed by. It was clear from their looks that they desired to speak to me, so leaning over the pew, I addressed them kindly.

The gentleman said, "We have been remarking that it was very strange you should have taken the text you did this morning, and that we should have been here. We set out to go to another church. How did you come to choose that subject?"

I said, "I suppose the Lord chose it; and, besides, it comes in the lesson for the day. Why do you ask?"

The gentleman replied, "We were speaking about that very text this morning, and wondered what it could mean; and here you bring it forward and apply it as if you meant us. It never came to my mind to deny God, but I see plainly enough that we are living as if there was no God at all. We just live from day to day to take our pleasure and enjoy ourselves, and study our health, of course."

I said, "Will you allow me to call upon you this afternoon, as I have people waiting in the vestry to see me at this time?"

The gentleman assented, and handing me his card, passed out.

In the afternoon I did not fail to call and see these new friends. I found that the lady was titled, and the gentleman was the younger son of a marquess. They had no family, and were living, as the gentleman had said, for themselves and their own pleasure. He was a member of Parliament, detained late in the House night after night, and his wife also spent much of her time in the Ladies' Gallery of the House, taking as much interest in the proceedings of Parliament as her husband.

They received me kindly, and spoke out frankly enough.

"Do you mean to say that we are going to hell in living as we do?" asked the gentleman.

"Yes," I replied, "the Scripture says, 'The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the people that forget God.'"

"Dear me!" he exclaimed, "that's a thing to know. No one has ever hinted such a thing as that to us before. We never do any harm to anyone. We wish to be left to ourselves, and we leave other people to themselves. We are very happy together, and quite content."

I said, "Then you have the more reason to thank God, and acknowledge his kindness to you. You should not live as if you were your own and your possessions your own, for God created you, and has redeemed you for Himself, with no less a price than the blood of Jesus."

"To tell the truth," said the gentleman, "I do believe there is a God, but I have no idea of Him as a person. He is to me a kind of abstract being, no one knows where, and sometimes I have my doubts about the things He does. What are we to do? If we cannot help ourselves we are obliged to submit, you know."

I replied, "I am glad that you acknowledge there is a God. Now dare to believe that He knows you and loves you both, and longs for you to be acquainted with Him. He so loves you that He gave his Son to die in your place, that if you believe in Him you should not perish, but have everlasting life. Just think, He loves and cares for you, and He has given you your position and possessions, and yet you do not know Him! The Son of God so loves you, that He willingly shed his blood to wash away your sins, and yet you do not thank Him!"

It was as much news to that couple, put in this way, as if they had been Mussulmen, as the gentleman called it. The anxious look with which they regarded me while I was speaking proved to my mind, that they were not resisting God, or even disposed to do so. On the other hand, it appeared they were willing to receive the word, and they did receive it. They were both of one heart and one mind in the matter, and both very thankful to hear this definite teaching.

It seemed as if the Lord had opened their hearts to take in the word spoken. I had prayer and thanksgiving with them, and then took my departure. So easy was their transition from death into life, that I could not help doubting the reality of their change. However, I had reason subsequently to be condemned for so doubting.

As time passed on, and I had more communication with my friends, I found evident tokens of grace in them. While hundreds of others who had long known the way of salvation were disputing and backsliding, these two went steadily forward, growing in knowledge and in obedience to the Word. Their home was happy before; but it was empty compared with what it was now. They went to many houses such as theirs had been, and told their story with more or less success.

The gentleman's father was a dying man, and his butler, who was a Christian, had tried more than once to speak a word to lead his master to Jesus; but now there came the nobleman's son and daughter-in-law with bright faces to confirm the good news. They had the joy of bringing their dying father to Jesus, and besides him, they were blessed to others of their kindred.

That couple were noticed for their regularity at the services, and their joy and sympathy in and with the work of the Lord.

The New Beehive.

FLOWER MISSION.

THE bright spring flowers are giving forth their sweet odours, and our country friends can have fellowship in an increased degree with thousands of the sick and suffering poor in the hospitals, infirmaries, and workhouses around. The flowers give us openings to hearts to tell again and again the sweet message of Christ's redeeming love. In our meetings for prayer often the note of praise ascends for another and yet another being found of the Good Shepherd before passing away. While time lasts we can never know the results of the softening influences among our toiling East-enders by the thousands of spring bouquets accompanied by fitting words from loving hearts to their sick and poor ones.

FACTORY GIRLS.

Many of these workers in the factories around have all day long been surrounded by the ribald laugh, the vulgar joke, or snatch of a low song. When they gather in our topmost floor they are surrounded by gentle loving ladies, willing to teach them all womanly ways; they listen to sweet solos and join in singing the songs of the better land. Good books are read to them. Tender ties between teachers and scholars are formed, leading young hearts to become softened and ready for the working of God's Spirit. Our hearts are continually hearing the joyful sound of someone fully deciding for Christ.

We have formed our converted factory girls into a fellowship band, and they have, at their own desire, gathered a school of waifs and strays from the streets in one of our halls on Sunday afternoon. The young converts meet once a week, to study the next Sunday's lesson with an elder worker. Their youthful love for the Saviour is being poured into the hearts of these little ones and into the homes where they live. The parents are so grateful to have these bright young Christian girls looking them up and taking an interest in their little ones.

YOUNG MEN'S CLASSES.

Our house is so arranged that entrance doors and halls permit of a much greater variety of home mission work. Thus we are enabled to help the growing sons of our people, and young homeless men whose education is deficient. Very bright is our well-lit lower hall on many a week evening. At each table the young lady teacher is busy with arithmetic, drawing, &c., closing in the last hour with reading the Scriptures and pressing home the lesson. Those who are converted become centres of power and blessing to the others. Throughout the winter they became known to us; they are now emigrated, and have already been settled on well-selected Canadian farms, instead of wandering for work in this overcrowded city. For these and for the band sailing on May 16th, which I hope to accompany, we ask continued prayer.

BIRD FAIR.

We are loth to leave this very large and open door of witness for the Master, for never in our experience were there such opportunities. No tract is refused, no kindly word unheeded. We are never without a crowd, often of hundreds. We are continually cheered by hearing of one and another having been "born there." Going through Cheapside one of the men selling the "penny wonders" accosts us: "I lives near you, miss; how are you?" At Kensington a 'busman asks the same question; he and his wife found peace four years ago in one of our meetings. Thus among these thousands buying and selling on the Lord's Day the up-lifted Christ is taking possession of hearts, and causing them to shine in their own little corner.

Our Bible-woman and district nurse have had a full time of service, showing the poor and needy how to nurse their sick in spite of their tiny rooms and limited accommodation. We have held on the soup dinners to the needy children, calling forth much gratitude.

Our young lady workers have been gaining experience by working with the elder sisters on the permanent staff. Two have been sent abroad by the Zenana Society, and two by the China Inland Mission. Others are young ladies who, with the approval of their parents, come for six months' training. Several missionaries formerly with us are home on furlough from China and India.

EMIGRATION.

This is our chief work, and watching over those who are sent to us is a great delight. Mrs. Merry will take our place whilst we go forth to place out the fifty-seventh band of children. The fifty-eighth family will then be gathered into our Training Home and sent forth we hope early in the month of August. All business matters and correspondence will be attended to if addressed to Mr. Joseph Merry.

Yours in the service of the little ones,

Home of Industry, ANNIE MACPHERSON.

YOUNG EMIGRANTS IN CANADA.

MRS. L. BIRT, of the Liverpool Sheltering Home, writes that her thirty-second party of young emigrants arrived in good spirits at the Distributing Home, Knowlton, Ontario. The demand for them was three times larger than the supply, such is the desire of the farmers to adopt healthy, trained children into their families. In a few days every child was comfortably placed, and Mrs. Birt was soon afterwards greatly cheered by receiving from many of them letters brimful of gratitude for having been introduced into the new and spacious country.

To make the Knowlton Home more suitable for its important purpose, some additional premises are now being built. This outlay was very necessary for the proper conduct of the work, seeing that the children who are taken out are of both sexes. The cost will be about £200, which it is hoped the friends of motherless girls and of fatherless boys will readily meet. Mrs. Birt will certainly come back encouraged to her increased responsibilities in connection with the new and more convenient Sheltering Home, now being erected in Myrtle-street, Liverpool.

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH MISSION.—The open-air services, which have been carried on since 1856, at Old Surrey Chapel and Christ Church, commenced on Easter Sunday, at Belvedere-road, a few yards from Westminster Bridge. Between the hours of 12 o'clock and 1 o'clock quite a thousand people gathered to hear the Gospel story. Mr. W. Benson, the evangelist, was accompanied by a goodly band of workers. Nine addresses were delivered, some remarkable testimonies being borne to the grace of God. One speaker pointed to the bridge, over which, previously to his conversion, he went with the purpose of committing suicide. The Mission is unsectarian, and the assistance of Christian workers will be heartily welcomed.

CHRIST RECEIVETH SINFUL MEN.*

"Go ye into all he world, and preach the Gospel to every creature...And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the Word with signs following."—MARK xvi. 15, 20.

"The salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and they will hear it."—ACTS xxviii. 28.

"Their sound wenti nto all the earth, and their words unto the end of the world."—ROM. x. 18.

"From you sounded out the Word of the Lord."—1 THESS. i. 8.

SINNERS esus doth receive;
Sound this word of grace to all:
Let them on his name believe—
Even now obey his call.

Tell them o'er and o'er again,
Christ receiveth sinful men;
Make the message clear and plain,
Christ receiveth sinful men.

Tell them He will give them rest,
When they trust—his Word is plain;
He will take the sinfulest:
Christ receiveth sinful men.

Seek them out—the sons of woe,
Dying near our hearth and home
Guilty all—both high and low—
To the Saviour bid them come.

Hark! they cry from distant lands,
"Bring the Word, that we may live."
China's myriads spread their hands!
Afric's tribes a welcome give!

Telling far and near the same,
Christ receiveth sinful men;
Over all the world proclaim,
Christ receiveth sinful men.

MR. BALDWIN IN MOROCCO.

MR. E. F. BALDWIN, writing from Mogador, Morocco, at the beginning of April, says:—

The work goes on well now. There is a lull in persecution; hence many meetings—five on Sundays, four on Wednesdays and Saturdays, and three on other days. We are trying to make the most of our opportunities. On our last trip Mr. Nairn and I were reported killed, and the statement was believed by all except my family. True, we were roughly handled, but not a hair of our heads perished. Hosine is back, and Abraham is on his way. They were separated by Abraham being in prison and put in irons nine days, his outer clothes being also stolen. For about six months they were away on a journey on the lines of Matt. x.; many believed, and many were baptized. The work grows in other places. We hope to devote the summer months to systematically training in the Word the most promising converts, in order to their doing service as native evangelists.

Blessing has begun among the Jews. I have recently baptized three Jews and four Moslems. One of the Jews is just out of irons for his faith; one or two others await baptism. The last steamer brought us Mr. Sheehan, a non-commissioned officer from Gibraltar, to join us on Matt. x. lines. Thank God, there are six Matt. x. missionaries (men) here in actual work; one is Mr. Martin, and two natives.

I am just off on another trip, going, firstly, to Casa Blanca, wearing Moorish clothes, which we all (men) now wear, finding it much better for the work, and more comfortable every way. Blessing and trial continue intermingled. I hope in the coast towns to visit and establish several groups of believers who have never seen the face of a foreign missionary.

FRANCE.—Pastor L. D. Martin, of Vabre, Tarn, is about to resume deputation work in this country on behalf of French evangelisation. He may be addressed care of Rev. Dr. McDonald, 7, Gloucester-place, Edinburgh.

JEWS & THE NEW TESTAMENT.

ESSRS. BARON AND BARNETT, of the Mildmay ission to the Jews, continue to distribute the ord of Life to people of the Hebrew race herever they may be found. During the past ree months they have been labouring in rance, Spain, and Morocco.

February found them in Paris, where the ews number nearly 60,000. Disregarding arnings not to venture to speak of Christ in e Jewish quarter, near the Hotel de Ville, ey boldly went and told the darkened people Him by whom God may be savingly known. umerous conversations were engaged in, and, s elsewhere, the community was found to be ery mixed in character, some being atheisti- ally rationalistic, others Pharisaically self- ghteous.

Taking circular tickets for North Africa, they ft Paris for Madrid, where only two or three ews now reside. One of them, a man of the orld, plainly said, when approached with egard to the hope of Israel, "I only care for he present; about the future no one knows, for o one has come back from the dead to tell s." Jesus and the resurrection were unknown o the poor man; but he soon heard something efinite on this from Mr. Baron. Proceeding o Cadiz, which four hundred years ago had a arge and prosperous Jewish community, with nany Rabbis and colleges, the missionaries vere able, after several hours' search, to find ut only three or four Jews, all of them natives f North Africa. "It is wonderful," writes Mr. Baron, "how the terrible edict of expulsion of 492 has succeeded in completely banishing he Jews from a land where they had taken uch deep root, and flourished for centuries. There are supposed to be about two thousand Jews in the country (though I very much doubt if there are so many), but all are foreigners iving under the protection of other European Powers."

Mr. Baron reached Tangier towards the end of February. Though descendants of the Spanish Jews, the Jews of North Africa are of an inferior type to their European brethren. Conversation was carried on with difficulty, there being comparatively few who could make themselves understood in Hebrew. Copies of the New Testament were accepted by many who could read. With a party of Christian workers, including Mr. Saadi, from Harley House, Bow, Mr. Baron went to Tetuan, which has a Jewish population of from six to eight thousand. The cross-country journey was attended by many difficulties and inconveniences, even by perils and dangers. Tetuan is the Jerusalem of Morocco; the Rabbis are practically judges in the communities over which they preside, in things civil as well as religious. The missionaries stayed in the Jewish quarter, but during Sunday, which was market day, they found it difficult to secure any audience, the people being absorbed in buying and selling. Mr. Baron writes: "One group in the market square, whom we tried to interest, refused at first to listen to us, or to have anything to do with our books. "We are Jews, and you are Christians," they said. "Why do you come to us? We have our own books, and do not want yours. We must not, and will not, read them." I reminded them that this was the answer the Jews always gave to their prophets. When Jeremiah came, saying, "Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old path: Where is the good way? and walk therein, so shall ye find rest unto your souls," the Jews replied: "We will not walk therein.' And finally, when the Lord Jesus, the greatest of the prophets, came, appealing to the Scriptures which they were supposed to search, and which He assured them testified of Him, He had mournfully to exclaim, 'Ye will not come unto Me, that ye might have life.' But the Lord God of Israel is faithful and true, and the promises given to our fathers have been fulfilled, the Messiah having come and made atonement for sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and brought in everlasting righteousness for all who believe. The people afterwards became more interested, and a few of them asked for copies of the New Testament." Subsequent discussions showed the old spirit of hostility to the righteousness of God, but the word of reconciliation was nevertheless spoken to those willing to hear, as well as to others. That the labour was in vain cannot for a moment be believed by those who acknowledge the Word of God to be living and powerful, and destined to accomplish that whereunto it is sent. It is hoped that the visits to other cities of North Africa will yield the workers more encouragement.

Evangelistic Notes.

Dr. John W. Kirton has had a series of most successful meetings in connection with the Sailors' Mission, Lowestoft.

Mr. George King has recently been addressing meetings at Greenwich, Hatcham, and Saling (Essex), with much acceptance. The local clergymen speak highly of his services.

Risby.—A week's evangelistic services have been held in a marquee in this Suffolk village, conducted by Mr. Charles Boyall (of the Pastors' College). There were several professed conversions, and many were awakened to deep spiritual concern.

Leith.—Mr. M. Steedman has finished a three weeks' mission here with much acceptance, and with gratifying results. A marked feature throughout was the large proportion of men present. Believers were refreshed, and many careless ones impressed. Of those who went into the inquiry-room upwards of fifty professed to find peace.

Ben Hogan (writes a correspondent at Jamestown, N.Y.) is rather a peculiar character, but God is using him. Since his conversion, ten years ago, he has brought many to the Saviour. He does not reach the lower class as quickly as he reaches the higher class; this is the strangest of all. He is working here at present with good results.

Mr. George Clarke has been evangelising in Newtownards during the past week. Vast numbers of people have attended the meetings from the towns and country around. The hall in which the services were held proving too small for the congregations, he has had to adjourn to the largest church in the place. Mr. Clarke has been invited to hold a united evangelistic mission at Larne during June.

Eastleigh.—At this little village, in which the important railway junction of Bishopstoke is situated, a quiet work for God has for the last nine years been carried on principally by working men. Lately there have been times of great blessing, and on Good Friday sixteen believers obeyed the Lord in baptism, eight of them being railway servants. Tracts for distribution will be thankfully received by E. Ford, Daisy-cottage, Eastleigh, near Southampton.

Rev. E. A. Telfer has been conducting the services for some weeks in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. Mr. Charrington has seen much blessing attending the earnest preaching of this servant of God. The addresses to believers have been seasons of great refreshing. It is a rare thing for a night to pass without some soul being born again. The attendances keep up. On Sundays hundreds are turned away, although the building accommodates 5000 persons.

Evangelistic Village Mission.—Besides recently opening four new mission stations in neglected villages and hamlets, about seventy souls have been received into the fellowship of different churches during the last twelve months, and we have still a large number of candidates waiting for admission. These are not the result of special Gospel services, but mostly the outcome of Bible exposition, in which the people become greatly interested; awakening and conversions follow, and the Bible henceforth is the constant companion and chief delight of the converts. We shall be pleased at any time to welcome Christian friends interested and desirous of seeing something of our work. G. D. SHIPLEY.

Breachwood Green, Welwyn, Herts.

Parson's Hill, Woolwich.—A week's Gospel services have been held here by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker. The meetings were well attended, and a considerable number professed to yield themselves to Christ.

Faith Mission.—A successful mission has been carried on for the last six weeks in Tayport, Fifeshire, by this Mission; many have professed to be converted. A blessed time has been experienced, and many church-goers have been greatly blessed. R. McG.

"AT THE FEET OF JESUS."

LUKE viii. 35.

"AT the feet of Jesus"
Love and sorrow meet;
Tenderly the Master
Soothes in language sweet.

"At the feet of Jesus,"
Sobbing out my grief,
Telling all the troubles,
Find I heart-relief.

"At the feet of Jesus,"
Discord all around,
There, in blest communion,
Harmony is found.

"At the feet of Jesus."
Tarry here awhile,
Till earth's shadows banish
In his sun-lit smile.

"At the feet of Jesus,"
Storm-clouds gathering near,
There a quiet haven,
Calms my every fear.

"At the feet of Jesus,"
Lonely one stay there,
His companion be thou,
His compassions share.

"At the feet of Jesus."
Hurry not away—
There shalt thou in glory
Sit through endless day.

Literature for Saskatchewan.

FOR some years past I have been the happy recipient of your encouraging, instructive, and greatly appreciated paper. Such publications are a great help to me in my work, not only by the reading of them myself, but to the different settlers who, as a rule, in this isolated part of the Dominion, are very fond of spending their long winter evenings in reading either to themselves or to their families.

My duties as the itinerant missionary for this portion of our large diocese causes me to come in contact with those living many miles from neighbours. Not only the English, Scotch, Irish, and Canadian settlers are pleased and willing to receive good reading matter, but our native brothers and sisters—halfbreeds and some Indians who have been taught English—are very eager to take home any papers or books that I can manage to collect, and which I distribute after the services. Could my fellow-countrymen realise what a help good religious books and papers (no matter how old) are to us missionaries, there would be a greater effort made to send such to the mission field.

We are living some 500 miles north-west of Manitoba, and have to travel with horses and oxen some 250 miles south ere we reach our nearest railroad station. A. H. WRIGHT.

PAINTINGS AT THE PARIS EXHIBITION.—DEAR SIR,—Will you warn parents against allowing their young people to see the larger paintings in the French Salons at the approaching Exhibition? I have read the description in The Daily Telegraph of April 27. Some are so revolting in savagery, brutality, and indecency, that a girl, woman, or youth might receive an evil impression or shock which would have effects that could never be effaced.—Yours respectfully,

Y.M.C.A. MEETINGS.

Forest Gate.

THE second annual meeting of this branch was held last week at Woodgrange-hall, Woodgrange-road, Forest-gate, Mr. George Williams in the chair. The new rooms of the Association at Woodgrange-road consist of a lecture-room and parlour comfortably furnished. The report of Mr. A. Strangman, honorary secretary, stated there were many reasons to be encouraged in the work. The acquisition of the new premises had already proved beneficial, but larger attendances would be ensured if the members practically realised the main purpose of the Association, which was "to associate their efforts for the extension of Christ's kingdom amongst young men." It was hoped soon to have a tent in some prominent position, where members could be employed in a little mission work.

The Chairman said he was delighted to find that the branch had progressed so well. He was told that there was a large number of young men in the locality, and he hoped they would be influenced to join the Association. He gave a number of instances of good result from the efforts of the Association. It was opposed to anything like proselytism from one denomination to another. The object was to do young men good and try to bring them into union with Christ, and then they would find their place in their separate and particular churches. Other speakers addressed the meeting, including Mr. Kennedy, of Exeter Hall.

Stratford Conference Hall.

WHILE highly, and with reason, appreciated throughout populous East London, the important work done by the many agencies which have the Stratford Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A. for their home and centre, is both well and favourably known to servants of God far and near. Making common cause with all who follow the one Lord, and serve the great Master, the labourers simply direct their effort to the salvation of sinners. The churches of the neighbourhood have on their rolls the names of worthy members who found the light of God in the Conference Hall; this, moreover, is not the only ground of joy on the part of denominational workers, for not a few cases might be mentioned of backsliders retracing their steps through God's mercy having met them at one or other of the bright and earnest meetings held in connection with this useful institution. It is very cheering to know that the extent to which the Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A. supplements the endeavours of pastors and teachers is being more generally and heartily recognised.

The fourth annual meeting was held on Thursday, last week, when Mr. E. Fox Butlin, the devoted secretary, presented a report full of interest. Real cause of rejoicing was found in the fact that the audiences which assemble week by week to hear the Gospel proclaimed in the hall, continue large, with a proportion of men much above what is usually met with. The crusade against strong drink by the Mizpah Band, now numbering about four hundred members, and the Sunday visitation of common lodging-houses, in order that life and godliness may be brought under the notice of their inmates, are likewise efforts which also continue to be blessed of God. Mr. C. Boardman, who is not only the treasurer, but the very life and soul of the institution, made a brief statement. It was not pleasant to hear the announcement that £839 of the building debt still remains. We join him, however, in the hope that during the present year the encumbrance will be removed, as well as the needful funds be supplied to pay for the thorough cleaning of the building.

Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, who occupied the chair, spoke of the rapid growth of the district, and emphasised the importance of the work done in the Hall. Addresses were also delivered by Rev. A. Jeffrey, and Messrs. J. G. Watson, T. A. Denny, and C. Russell Hurditch. All knew more or less of the extent and thoroughness of the work done—every official and helper in every endeavour being actuated simply by love to the Lord Jesus Christ—and their words were as stimulating as they were hearty.

We trust the Hall and its agencies will continue to flourish more and more, and that while, as now, praying for God's blessing upon others, the labourers will still have much joy in their own souls through the manifest Divine recognition of their work of faith and labour of love.

Kennington.

THIS branch, established in 1872, has since done a very useful work at Clapham-road. It has recently taken the large hall at 234, Kennington Park-road, and an inaugural meeting has been held to celebrate the removal. The hall has been adapted to the requirements of the work.

Mr. George Williams presided, and in the course of his speech spoke very warmly of the value of Association work. Rev. J. P. Gledstone spoke of the urgent necessity of growth into true manhood. He invited young men to be in the front in every good cause, and urged upon all the necessity of doing their utmost to disseminate the principles of peace. Canon Hussey spoke, not of peace, but of war—war with the powers of darkness, illustrating his remarks by a number of telling incidents. Mr. John Hayward, Rev. W. J. Mills, and Rev. Walter Horne lso gave encouraging addresses.

A statement was read by Mr. W. H. Libby, briefly reviewing the seventeen years' work of the Association, which had been blessed to many young men. Former members are now engaged in mission work at home and abroad. As soon as the funds permit, a suitable man will be employed, to devote his whole time to the work of the Association, and to bring its influences to bear upon the vast numbers of young men living in the district. The collection was a liberal one, one gentleman promising five pounds per annum if nineteen others would do the same. Four have already promised, and it is hoped that the needful help will be forthcoming.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.—Mr. A. Haegert, director of this Mission, writes:—"We arrived from England, with six new missionaries, on December 2. During the four months ending with March, patients from twenty-five villages were attended at Bethel. Our nine dispensaries allay much misery, and, as a rule, patients from 150 villages receive treatment every year. During November last eleven men and women were baptized on confession of their faith; in February another man joined the church, and there is hope that many others will follow. Famine is tormenting thousands of the people. Heads of families come daily, saying, 'We have nothing to eat; give us some work, rice, or money.' The Santhals are a brave and hardy race, and it is sad to see them starving."

EVANGELISATION THROUGH THE POST.—M. Samuel Porchère, of 5, Rue Benoit, St. Etienne, Loire, has organised a work which is being conducted with vigour and hope in some parts of France. The "Mission des Lettres Affectueuses" takes account of the fact that sorrowful events often precipitate occasions for evangelisation. A series of letters, suited to the various circumstances of life, has therefore been prepared, and printed copies of these are sent by Christian workers to persons whose homes have been visited by accident or death. Other missives are also sent to persons newly married, or to families in which a birth has taken place. This work can be carried on more thoroughly in some places than in others, and to some extent it has long been practised in England. M. Porchère's letters are very readable and we trust they will be instrumental of much good in France, where he would be glad of more helpers.

Rev. J. McNeill on Open-Air Preaching.

THE annual Conference on Evangelisation of the Presbytery of London (South) was held on April 23 in Trinity Church, Clapham-road, and was well attended. Rev. Dr. Raitt, the Moderator, presided, and the subject of Conference was "Open-air Services." This was opened by Rev. John McNeill, of Regent-square Church. All were agreed, he said, on the need and the importance of open-air preaching, and he would deal with the more practical side of the subject, gathered chiefly from his own experience.

His first contention was that congregations ought to do this work rather than individuals. It was expected to be done at missions, but ordinary congregations had not taken kindly to it. He would have ministers, elders, and deacons present, whether able to take an active share in the work or not. They should, so to speak, unchurch themselves to get at the people. They should begin in an impressive way numerically; but at present it was a rare thing for the congregation to join in the service. He remembered on one occasion a prominent elder came out, but when he saw the scant audience he ducked his head and disappeared. So true it is that there is still a kind of shame about the matter, as if it were not quite the thing. What an impression it would make in gathering the people if the congregation went out in a body. We need to put our best foot first, but at present we make a poor show, and the pillars of the church are absent. It would never be well done if left to ten or a dozen people. The Christian religion began at the roadside, so there is no need to be ashamed to go there still.

Mr. McNeill next touched upon the singing, which should be well done. The melodies should be easy, flowing, and such as the people know. He had often felt his blood boil at open-air meetings to find a miserable two or three turn up, instead of having a volume of sound which would draw and impress the people.

His last point related to the preaching. One of his professors used to advise the students, if they wanted to test their sermons, to try them at the street corner. Some preaching needed to be aired, for it was apt to be heavy and dull indoors. Ministers who read their manuscript could not see the effect upon their congregations. If they did, it would be an eye-opening process. Out-of-doors the people would not stand if the preacher did not speak to the face and ears. A good deal of the preaching of the present day does not grip the conscience. Above all things the preacher must be able to interest the people. In closing his instructive address, Mr. McNeill said: "I never feel myself so near Jesus Christ as when I stand in the open air. I seem to have got rid of nineteen centuries, and to be standing close by the side of my Lord and Master."

Among those who took part in the subsequent discussion were Rev. W. J. Maxwell, of Wimbledon; Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, of Somers' Town; Rev. J. R. Howatt; Mr. Robert Stark (organising agent), and others.

JEWS IN PARIS.—Mr. Feingold, who has a mission-hall at 6, Rue Malher, which was recently closed by order of the police, writes to say that permission has been given to re-open the hall, and to hold meetings. The free dispensary is also at work.

PORT SAID, EGYPT.—A "Sailors' Rest and Strangers' Welcome" has recently been opened at this port through the kindness of one of the friends of the Evangelisation Society (21, Surrey-street, Strand). All passing Christians will find a hearty welcome, and impromptu meetings can be got up with very little notice. Any support to this little establishment would be gladly received by Mr. W. H. Taylor, Bible Society's Depôt, Place Lesseps, Port Said. Books, periodicals, texts, &c., would all be most acceptable.

REV. H. E. STONE,

Nottingham Baptist Tabernacle.

THE hard-working pastor whose portrait we give to-day is a good specimen of the many servants of God up and down this land who are laying out their life and energy in his service, without attracting much notice outside of their own sphere, but on whose labours there rests the seal of undoubted success. Springing from the great "middle class" that is the backbone of our British commonwealth, he has been content to live and work among the industrial masses, first in London and now in the lace-making centre of Nottingham. His ministerial career is proof positive that to those, at any rate, who toil and spin for their daily bread, the consoling message of the Gospel is welcome, when it comes in its proper garb and is backed up by the life and testimony of one who has experienced its renewing power.

Born in Colchester some forty-two years ago, Mr. STONE had the advantage of a Christian training. He took to a business life in London at the early age of fourteen, and for a time was content to live for the passing hour. He happily came under the benign influence of the late Rev. Baptist Noel, and was the subject of God's converting grace. His youthful energy and zeal were soon turned into channels of active evangelistic work, and we are interested to know that his first preaching station, in the neighbourhood of Bedford-row, was on the site of an extinct brewery. Would that every baneful centre of that kind in the great Metropolis might become a fountain whence issued forth the sweet and healing waters of salvation. After serving his apprenticeship in Christian service as a worker among the poor, Mr. Stone decided to give himself wholly to the Gospel ministry, and was duly enrolled as a student in Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College. He must have passed through his curriculum there with honour, for on leaving the cloistered shades of Newington-butts he was called to the pastorate of the Baptist Chapel in Arthur-street, Gray's Inn-road. Here he laboured assiduously and successfully; at the same time taking his due share in outside work at such centres as the Agricultural Hall, the Holborn Amphitheatre, and other places where the masses are brought together to hear the Gospel. Something of the fruitfulness of his work at Arthur-street Chapel may be judged from the fact that during his pastorate it was a recognised nursery for Christian young men, who in turn became students at Mr. Spurgeon's College, and preachers of the Gospel.

A vacancy having occurred in the large Tabernacle at Nottingham, Mr. Stone was invited in the autumn of 1880 to take the pastoral oversight of the church and congregation there. He felt the call to such an important post to be of God's ordering, and accepted it; events have fully justified the choice of the congregation. Nottingham is one of the leading centres of industry in the Midlands. It has been a seat of manufacture for centuries, and has increased in size till its population is now estimated at about 200,000. Among the workers are, of course, vast numbers of young men and women; and no nobler sphere of service could well be coveted by an earnest-minded minister of the Gospel than that of influencing for good so many lives verging on maturity. The Nottingham Tabernacle was erected mainly through the efforts of Mr. Samuel Peach, head of one of the lace firms in the city, and is a splendid building with a seating capacity of two thousand.

When Mr. Stone entered on the work at Nottingham the building was burdened with a heavy debt, of which, we regret to say, some £6000 yet remains to be cleared. This must have hampered to some extent the aggressive work of the church, though it scarcely seems so, judging from the multifarious agencies that are in operation. Mr. Stone has made special endeavours to reach the many young people in his congregation. He was the first to introduce into Nottingham the regular monthly sermon to young men. A still more notable innovation was a quarterly sermon to young women. The girls far outnumber the men in the town factories, and of course they stand in need of greater care and supervision, in view of the allurements by which they are surrounded in a great centre of population. These quarterly sermons are most practical in their application to the duties of daily life, and it may well be hoped that they have exercised the best influence on those to whom they were delivered. Mr. Stone has gathered some of them into a neat little volume, published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, entitled "Friendly Words to Young Women."

A local writer, speaking of Mr. Stone's pulpit methods, says:—

> His sermons are well-studied, pictorial, full of sanctified common-sense, and not too profound. He does not fence with abstractions, but attacks iniquity in the concrete. His voice is clear and ringing, and ready at any moment to burst into song. It is a positive treat to find him absolutely free from "starch," and to watch him, before and after service, rushing about, chatting with everybody, and shaking hands all round. This, perhaps, accounts for not a little of the esprit de corps amongst the Tabernacle workers and adherents.

The Sunday-schools have increased greatly under the present pastorate. The scholars have a special Sunday evening service in the lecture-room. The Tabernacle is not only a busy centre of Gospel work, but has become a fruitful mother of children in the shape of several mission stations planted in needy parts of the town. Those who come within the scope of Mr. Stone's ministry are taught the duty and privilege of working on behalf of others, so that we imagine there are few "sleeping partners" on his communion roll, which, by a recent statement, was nearly eight hundred strong. We may quote still further from the writer already referred to:—

> The Tabernacle, indeed, is a veritable religious beehive. Let us glance at a week's diary. On Monday afternoon the handsome lecture-room, where three hundred persons can be seated, is utilised for a gathering of children from Board schools, who are eager to listen to Mr. Stone's forty-five minutes' Bible talks. On Monday evening the same room is usually filled at the congregational prayer-meeting. There is an admirable institution for Tuesday evenings, when Mr. Stone gives illustrated science lectures. These are sometimes specially adapted to young men, when invaluable teaching is afforded on matters pertaining to physical and social life. Wednesday evening is devoted to a well-attended congregational preaching service. Thursday is the weekly Band of Hope night, when a fine regiment of some five hundred young people go through their training in the theory and practice of total abstinence. The same evening there is a temperance meeting (for the pastor flatly forbids the banns between the Bible and the beer-barrel) and a young women's Bible-class is also held. With an evening off on Friday, great energy is thrown into the temperance entertainment on Saturday evening, which has proved a great success. It is a bright, melodious spot for working people to drop in at on the way to or from market.

The closing reference in the extract leads us to refer to the interesting colportage and visitation work done at the Saturday evening fair by one of the agents of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association, who is attached to Mr. Stone's congregation. In a place like Nottingham, where secularism and infidelity are rife, and are assiduously propagated by means of literature, it is very necessary to have a counteractive in the shape of good and cheap publications. This colporteur makes an excellent show in sales, as well as being an active visitor in the homes of the people. There is also a missionary who directs his special attention to rescue work among the victims of the drink, and he has many a wonderful tale to tell of the trophies of grace who have been snatched from the jaws of destruction and restored to a sober and righteous life.

Among his numerous other engagements Mr. Stone finds time to conduct a live congregational monthly magazine. He has also published "Christ our Example," and "David, the Man after God's own Heart." His name is to be found as an occasional contributor to current literature of an expository and helpful kind. We think we were justified in calling him, at the outset of this sketch, a hard-working pastor; we earnestly pray that the Divine blessing may increasingly rest on his abundant labours.

A HELPFUL READER.—A country evangelist writes to us:—THE CHRISTIAN has helped and cheered me very many times. I get the bookseller in our village to provide some copies weekly. Those not sold I pay for and give away to people likely to continue taking the paper. In several places where it was not known it is now taken weekly. Another plan is when reports of mission work appear, to mark them and send copies to those interested. I know of cases where this has resulted in their subscribing regularly. The paper gets increasingly interesting and helpful, and I hope others may be led to copy my example.

MISS J. P. RHIND, of the Soul-Winning and Prayer Union, writing from Shanghai on March 8, says:—"I have settled down in Mrs. Dalziel's Missionary Home, where I have every comfort. I have been provided with a Chinese teacher, and am hard at study. I have very much to praise my Heavenly Father for in this respect, as my teacher is a decided Christian. It is very touching to hear him pour out his heart in broken English for blessing on himself and others, especially several of his fellow-students, some of them also decided Christians, whose heathen parents are opposing their baptism. Will you please insert a request for prayer in THE CHRISTIAN, that God would give showers of blessing on the seed sown by his servants, both native and foreign, in this Anglo-Chinese College? If each of the students were converted, and separated by the Holy Ghost, for the work of winning souls, what a blessing they would be to this vast country."

SALVATION ARMY IN PARIS.

DURING the past few years we have been devoting much attention to opening stations in the provinces of France, chiefly in the large towns where corps have been established. We have at the same time been constantly upon the watch to secure a central hall in Paris. Our Quai Valmy Hall has recently been crowded as never before.

We are thankful to say that we have secured premises answering exactly to our requirements in an exceptionally good situation. At No. 3, Rue Auber, in the very heart of cosmopolitan Paris, we have secured two three-storey buildings, containing a hall holding 450 to 500 people, a small shop, two glass-covered courts, suitable for printing purposes, and eight rooms for officers' dwelling and offices. In the flat over the hall, we are fitting up ten large offices for headquarters. Our place stands close to the stage entrance of the Eden Theatre. It is well in view from the front street. We are lighting the hall with electricity, and will have a large light glowing in front for a short time every night.

We opened the hall by a series of special meetings beginning Thursday last. We are arranging for special meetings in various languages during the exhibition months, and we are organising a convention for the beginning of July, at which we hope to meet with friends and leading officers from France and Switzerland, together with some friends from England.

We have obtained the whole premises at an annual rent of £450; Mr. F. Crossley, Mr. John Cory, and several Manchester friends, have generously come to our aid for the cost of fitting up; but we still require £480. We hope and believe that the Christian interest and sympathy which the opening of such a fort and headquarters in Paris at this time will create will bring in the remaining amount.

We shortly open the theatre we have lately leased in the Rue Belleville, and which holds 500 people. Will your readers pray that these new advances in the French capital may be mightily blessed of God, especially during this exhibition time, when multitudes from various lands will throng the city.

CATHERINE BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

3, Rue Auber, Paris.

Writing of the opening meeting on April 25, Mrs. Booth-Clibborn says:—"The meeting was well attended, and was a time of power from on high. The addresses given by Colonel Clibborn, M. Peyron (of Nimes), Colonel Paschkoff, and myself, were listened to with deep attention. Many friends came from all parts of Paris, and expressed to us their thankfulness to God for the opening of the hall. The large audience of strangers, boulevardiers, and people of every class, seemed very much impressed with the singing. We shall have special meetings, in various languages, during the Exhibition months, and are full of expectation of times of blessing through the power of our God. Last night, as some crash of music and song in the Eden Theatre, close by, wafted to us a faint sound of Orpheus in Hell, which our neighbours were performing, we realised all the grandness of our opportunity, and the solemnity of the call, to bring the Gospel to those who sit in the darkness and shadow of death, in the world of fashion and gilded sin which lies all around us."

MAJOR WHITTLE IN ABERDEEN.

THE mission here closed last week. The interest and power increased from day to day, and we never remember, out of a long experience now, to have heard the evangelist preaching with greater vigour. The exposure of the life apart from Christ, the self-life, whether it assume the bestiality of lust, the cold-blooded cynicism of infidelity, or the worship of rank and of money, has been scathing and complete. Nor has she who liveth in pleasure and is dead as she liveth been spared. The miserable, selfish existences of empty-headed, hollow-hearted girls of the period—those yellow-backed novel readers, who care more for the puppy dog they lead round with a string than for the God that made them and the Lord Jesus Christ who died for them—these and such like lives have been laid bare night after night, and over against them has been lifted up the Lamb of God in all his love and loveliness. The goodness of God in presence of such meanness and heartlessness has broken down many a stout rebel and softened many a hard heart.

The evening meetings were held in the large Music Hall and in the South Parish Church, and have been largely attended—hundreds being turned away on the Sabbath evenings. Dr. Moxey assisted in reading the hymns, Scripture lessons, and extracts in prose and verse from Christian authors. These have been used of God in bringing souls into the light. He also preached in two of the churches and held three afternoon meetings in another for children, which were well attended, and resulted in the surrender of little hearts to Jesus. Mr. Charles E. Whittle has also taken several services, and has been signally blessed in dealing with young men. His leading of the choir and cornet playing in the large hall has been much appreciated. The afternoon Bible-readings on Pardon, Peace, Purity, Power, and Paradise have filled the large Y.M.C.A. Hall, and saved and unsaved have been alike refreshed and blessed.

The Major's address is now Evirallan, Stirling, N.B. On May 12 he leaves for Inverness.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., May 5, 1 Chron. xv. 25—29, xvi. 1—14; Mon., May 6, 1 Chron. xvii. 1—15; Tues., May 7, 1 Chron. xvii. 16—27; Wed., May 8, 1 Chron. xxi. 1—14; Thurs., May 9, 1 Chron. xxi. 15—30; Fri., May 10, 1 Chron. xxii. 1—15; Sat., May 11, 1 Chron. xxviii. 1—10.

ST. CLEMENT'S, IPSWICH.—A mission to children, conducted by Mr. Lewes Sayer, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has been held in this parish. Mr. Sayer readily secured the interested attention from evening to evening of his youthful hearers, and it is earnestly hoped that lasting blessing will result from his bright and forcible addresses. Several children were led to join the Children's Scripture Union. Mr. Sayer was assisted by Rev. G. Todd, Mr. R. Dennis Browne, and other friends.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE, 1889.

BELOVED CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—The twentieth Mildmay Conference, being the thirty-third since the first gathering at Barnet in 1856, will, God willing, be held on June 26, 27, and 28. What memories of the grace and goodness of our Covenant God does the retrospect of past Conferences awaken! Can we doubt that He whose hand has been so evidently upon us for good will look with favour on our coming together again to commemorate his mercy, to worship his holy name, and to seek counsel at his mouth? And surely it is more needful than ever, as the years roll by, as the "perilous times" foretold come upon us, and as the signs of the "approaching day" multiply, that we should draw nearer to one another in our Lord's presence, exalting his name alone above all sectarian differences, to obtain guidance and strength for the duties, the difficulties, and the burdens of the service to which his grace has called us.

We no not feel that we can do better than adhere to the old lines on which our Conferences have hitherto mainly proceeded. Suitable as less formal arrangements might be to smaller gatherings, the numbers attending and the size of the Hall make it practically a necessity to continue to do as we have done in the past; and a definite subject with which brethren, prayerfully chosen beforehand, will deal, is again proposed for consideratian. That subject is in brief "WITH CHRIST." Such indeed is the position, the privilege, the prospect of his people: "With Christ" in his death and resurrection—"With Christ" in service and suffering—"With Christ" in glory! Could we have a more elevating, a more inspiring, a more instructive theme? Here we come face to face with the most fundamental truths; here we may contemplate our wondrous calling; here we can feast our souls with anticipations of inconceivable bliss.

We earnestly trust that God the Holy Ghost will take of the things of Christ and show them to us; that He will preside over our gatherings, and will teach the speakers how to speak, and the hearers how to hear. We are sure that you will join us in frequent prayer that such may be the case, and that you will come up to the Conference in believing expectation of very rich blessings from the heart and hand of "the Master of Assemblies" Himself.

Your affectionate fellow-servants,

S. A. BLACKWOOD. ALFD. R. PENNEFATHER.

WITH CHRIST.

Wednesday, June 26.—WITH CHRIST IN DEATH AND RESURRECTION.

I am crucified with Christ. We be dead with Christ. Our old man is crucified with Him. We are buried with Him. We have been planted together in the likeness of his death. Nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. Quickened together with Christ—Risen with Christ. Your life is hid with Christ in God. (Gal. ii. 20. Rom. vi. 8. Rom. vi. 6. Rom. vi. 4. Rom. vi. 5. Gal. ii. 20. Col. ii. 13. Col. iii. 1. Col. iii. 3.)

Thursday, June 27.—WITH CHRIST IN SERVICE AND SUFFERING.

Where I am, there shall my servant be. Workers together with Him. In what place my Lord the King shall be, whether in death or life, there also will thy servant be. Let us also go, that we may die with Him. Ye are they which have continued with Me in my temptations. If so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together. If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him. (John xii. 26. 2 Cor. vi. 1. 2 Sam. xv. 21. John xi. 16. Luke xxii. 28. Rom. viii. 17. 2 Tim. ii. 12.)

Friday, June 28.—WITH CHRIST IN GLORY.

When I awake, I am still with Thee. With Christ, which is far better. I will that they whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am. With Me in Paradise. A Lamb stood on the Mount Sion, and with Him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. They that are with Him are called, and chosen and faithful. They shall walk with Me in white. He that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. So shall we be ever with the LORD. With Him in glory. (Ps. cxxxix. 18. Phil. i. 23. John xvii. 24. Luke xxiii. 43. Rev. xiv. 1. Rev. xvii. 14. Rev. iii. 4. Rev. vii. 15. 1 Thess. iv. 17. Col. iii. 4.)

BIBLE CARRIAGE IN GEELONG.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST,—You will see by the address below that the pillar of cloud has removed from Ballarat East, and rests upon South Geelong. We have put up a comfortable cottage, house, and depôt. I am fully persuaded that this town, Geelong, is becoming a centre; the Bible-carriage work will here have its headquarters for the colonies. Nearly five years have gone since we started from England with the sole object of scattering the seed corn of the Gospel through these colonies. The many tons of Bibles, Testaments, Gospel books, and tracts, which have been circulated in towns and settlements, in farms and remote stations, through the bush; the crowds of colonials who have heard, and the many who have received, the good seed into good and honest hearts; all these are full proofs that God, even our own God, has been with us, and given us his blessing.

Ever since the Lord put it into my heart, about the year 1855, to get two wheels and put them under a box, and arrange a Bible-stall for markets, fairs, and streets, in England, I saw that this was the work for these last days. I saw also it would require men to walk and live outside the camp, as there would be much uphill arduous labour needed, to preach the Gospel freely, and provide an honest living by selling Bibles, Testaments, and Gospel tracts. I have travelled like a gipsy, a stranger in all places, alone, yet not alone: God was there—in the market, on the public-house floor, in a crowd of smokers, drinkers, and gamblers, often going along the road rejoicing at the success of pointing some poor soul to a Saviour, or leaving the precious Book in dens where Satan's revellers have carried it away, and in it have found the river of life which makes glad the city of God. Still the work increases, and Bible-carriages and waggons, with strong horses pulling them along, are finding their way in many parts of the world.

Paul's admonition to Timothy was, "Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ;" and all who with the single eye and whole heart for the blessed Master seek his glory, must not expect smooth things in following and labouring for Him. Thus one young man tells me that in Gippsland Bush, where no road exists, but ruts and deep mud, one stormy night he tied his horse to a tree, curled himself up in his van to sleep, and praised the Lord that he had its roof to shelter him, while he remembered that the blessed Master he serves had not where to lay his head.

We have the large carriage now settled as a Gospel van, with its fine, strong platform, and Scripture texts in gold letters all round, as our stand in the Market-square, the Mayor of the town kindly giving us permission to work there. It is a fine place for the crowds, who listen to the Word with great attention.

The smaller carriage goes this week to the West Coast, to visit the townships and farms in that region. Brother Brewster is working his carriage on the townships along the Clarence River, New South Wales, while the brethren of Tasmania are using the carriage we sent for that colony, in Gospel work with good success.

We remember at the throne of grace those Christians at home who have, in the Lord's grace, favoured us with boxes of Bibles from time to time; knowing that we cannot, but He can and will, reward them according to the good fruit they have borne to his honour and glory. Love to all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. JOHN HAMBLETON.

Foster-street, South Geelong,
Victoria, Australia.

BIBLE-CARRIAGE WORK. — Mr. Charles Taylor, with the Bethany Bible-carriage, is working in Leeds. The van stands facing a crowded thoroughfare in the very heart of the town, and it does one's soul good to see the people crowding around the carriage (in the day time as well as at night) attentively listening to the message of salvation.

WORK AT ROUEN.

DEAR SIR,—This city is the centre of a lovely district, and is worthy of a more extended stay than is generally given to it by tourists. Especially if it is desired to see work for God in foreign lands would I advise Christian tourists to spend a Sabbath in Rouen, and to see for themselves the good work carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Herivel, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, amongst the British sailors who come to this port in such numbers every year. The Sailors' Institute, which is part of the chapel and Mission premises, in the centre of the city (close to the quays and the cathedral), is a veritable place of rest for our sailors. English services are held every Sabbath morning and evening. One's heart is cheered to see the crowds pouring into the French services on Sunday and Thursday evenings.

A month recently spent there was made all the more happy because of the Christian society we met and the opportunities of work amongst both British and French, of which we gladly availed ourselves. Our family party lived in a flat over the chapel (38, Rue Grand Port), which we rented, and, if by only this means, were able to help the Mission funds. Similar arrangements could be made by others. Rouen is only a little more than an hour's rail from Dieppe, and two and a half from Paris.—Yours faithfully, EDWARD H. BROWN.

Sandown, I.W.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

"THE Word of God is not bound." Such is the keynote of Captain J. Kearney White's new report of the work done during the past year by this Society, an advance copy of which lies before us. Captain White, the hon. secretary, believes the Bible to be the best cure for the troubles in that unhappy country, and certain it is that its entrance has in many places given light. The Readers are simple and humble men drawn from the ranks of the people, and able therefore to sympathise with them in the circumstances of their daily life. Their work, carried on quietly and unostentatiously, is to read and expound the Scriptures in the home, by the wayside, and, indeed, wherever an audience can be obtained. They are welcomed and beloved, and have the joy of seeing very cheering results from their labours.

The Society has to mourn the decease of several of its most valued supporters during the past year. Amongst these stands the name of Mrs. Hardy, of Armagh, who annually gave £150 for the support of three Scripture Readers in the south and west. Her manner of giving greatly enhanced the value of the gift. "What is giving?" she would say; "it is only the scratch of a pen, guided by Him whose are the silver and the gold." Her principle was "not to think of what we give to God, but of what we withhold from Him."

We very warmly commend this excellent work to the interest of our readers. The offices of the Society are at 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for May 10 (John xv. 7):—"If ye abide in Me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

KING'S WEIGH-HOUSE FLOWER MISSION.—The workers have now recommenced their pleasant work, and hope to enlist the help of more friends in their efforts on behalf of the poor, whose homes, in the majority of cases, are cheerless and desolate, and to whom the flowers are very comforting and refreshing. Any assistance, either by gifts of flowers or by personal help, will be welcomed. The hon. secretary is Miss Kemp, Darby-street Mission Schools, Royal Mint-street, Minories, E.C.

"MAY MEETINGS."

Temperance Work in the City.

FOR eleven years the City of London Total Abstainers' Union has promoted principles of total abstinence in commercial houses. Nowhere, perhaps, is such effort more needed. The annual meeting took place at 186, Aldersgate-street, on Friday last. Mr. F. G. TOLLER, the secretary, in his report, mentioned that meetings have been held in connection with two firms who had not previously entertained the Union, while the attendances during the year have been well sustained.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, as president, delivered an address, pointing out that, looking at the matter from a business point of view, it is advisable to boycott intoxicating liquors. Surely the heads of commercial houses in the City cannot be indifferent to such an Association, seeing that the drink traffic so greatly hinders the legitimate commerce. Mr. C. KEGAN PAUL contended that people are better without strong drink whether in health or in sickness. Mr. W. BINGHAM called for more earnest and hearty work in the cause during the coming year. During the evening a capital selection of music was given.

Monthly Tract Society.

AT the fifty-first annual meeting of the Monthly Tract Society, held at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday last week, cheering testimony was borne of steady progress. The Secretary, Mr. J. R. MACKENZIE, read extracts from the report. Though eternity alone will reveal the results in their fulness, the Lord was pleased during the year to afford numerous proofs of the good accomplished by the tracts. Lord Ebury has become president of the Society, under the auspices of which an aggregate of 380,000 tracts were distributed at the Glasgow and Brussels Exhibitions. This is additional to the ordinary circulation, by which the total distribution during the year was brought up to nearly three millions. Special efforts were put forth to attract particular classes of people, and free grants were made to upwards of sixty societies and missions. Ministers and other workers have acknowledged the usefulness of the tracts, the reading of which have been blessed to many wanderers from God and his righteousness.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, who presided, spoke highly of the Society's aim s and operations. Rev. JOSEPH NETTLETON, for many years a missionary to the Fijians, followed with a hearty address. He dwelt upon the remarkable extent to which tracts have been used of God, and commended the Society to support for its truly evangelical and catholic character. By way of illustration, Mr. Nettleton told of a man who, while in sorrow, read a tract, which led to his speedy conversion. That man previously kept a "penny gaff," but he promptly turned the place into a mission room. In that room the Gospel has since been preached by young men, members of Mr. Nettleton's own church, with the result that a great many people living in the neighbourhood have turned from their sins to serve God.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN maintained that simple seed-sowing, such as the Society engages in, is greatly needed to-day, when scepticism is permeating society to an alarming extent. He spoke of the need for tracts being examined as to their teaching before they are circulated, and emphasised the importance of Gospel testimony being borne in continental countries. Rev. Z. B. WOFFENDALE pointed out that alongside ritualism infidelity is showing itself very active. He traced his own usefulness to a course of Bible study, to which he was provoked by reading some tracts given him many years ago by Mr. John MacGregor.

Rev. W. BURNETT, of Lille, having spoken of France as a promising sphere for that work, Sir ROBERT PHAYRE introduced to special notice the Protestant work of the Society, and moved that the chairman sign a petition, on behalf of the meeting, praying the House of Commons to take the measures necessary for passing into law a Bill for appointing commissioners for inquiry into the condition of monastic and conventual establishments. Sir Robert powerfully contrasted Rome's degrading system with Christ's elevation of woman to the high position she can hold under the Gospel. The motion was seconded by Mr. MACKENZIE, and the resolution having been carried, the petition was duly signed.

Further details of the Society's good work may be had from the report, to be obtained from Bridge House, 181, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

THERE was a large assemblage in Exeter Hall on Monday morning, when the annual meeting of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society was held. The proceedings were characterised by much enthusiasm, the chair being occupied by Mr. T. Morgan Harvey. An abstract of the report was read by Rev. G. W. OLVER, one of the secretaries. In Continental countries as well as elsewhere, over a wide field, God has very graciously owned the preaching of the Gospel. In India a solid work is being quietly done; while there may not be room for exultation there certainly is no reason for despondency. In proportion to the number of members registered ten years ago, the progress of Methodism in India has been more rapid than among the home churches. As a result of special effort on the part of the friends of the Society, the committee was not only able to meet the year's expenditure, but considerably to reduce the standing debt.

The CHAIRMAN, in a vigorous address, spoke of what he had himself seen and heard of missionary work in South Africa. With reason, however, he deprecated unfriendly criticism based alone on figures, and showed that in ways that cannot be tabulated the work of God is gradually expanding. Rev. E. E. JENKINS made a few remarks, chiefly directed against the criticism of some who advocate a somewhat different policy from that followed by the Committee, on the subjects of higher education and the employment of lay agency.

Sir RICHARD TEMPLE delivered an address of cordial sympathy. Having spoken of the undoubted duty of Christians to send the Gospel to the ends of the earth, he met objections which have of late been raised against organised and world-wide missionary effort. Referring to the demands which some have made for preachers to go forth on ascetic lines, he pointed out that the wives and daughters of missionaries are in the habit of rendering important service on the field in educational and other directions; while Christian family life exhibits to the heathen domestic beauties and graces which otherwise they would never see. Sir Richard spoke earnestly in support of the policy of the older missionary societies, in maintaining educational as well as religious work, saying that the results of the combined endeavour have already been greatly blessed. When he first went to India, the educated natives generally believed the Hindu religion; now not one in ten of them believes it. In conclusion, he urged the Methodists to go forward in their good work. Mr. MOSES ATKINSON, of Leeds, followed, pledging the support of provincial Methodism to the furtherance of missionary work.

Rev. WM. CRAWFORD, of Dublin, dwelt upon mission work in Ireland. Though the population is almost closed against them, there is much consecrated activity. Serious losses have been sustained through mixed marriages with Roman Catholics, and the emigration of church members to America. He reminded the meeting that Christian England must never forget that she holds Ireland for God. When the heart of the people has been won, then with fair hope of success will the story of Jesus and his love be whispered into the ear of the population. Rev. GRAINGER HARGREAVES, from China, spoke of the sad need of her benighted millions, and showed that Christianity is the only hope of the Empire. Though there is no "forward" movement out there, there is certainly an "upward" one, and the labourers have been greatly encouraged.

Rev. EGERTON R. YOUNG, of Canada, gave an account of his well-known work among the Indians on the North American Continent. Many of that scattered family have found in Christ the need and desire of their hearts. The story was full of interest, and listened to with great delight.

National Temperance League.

ON Sunday afternoon, the annual sermon on behalf of this old-established temperance organisation was preached in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, by Rev. John McNeill. The anniversary meeting took place in Exeter Hall, on Monday evening, the Bishop of London presiding. Mr. ROBERT RAE, the secretary, gave a resumé of the report, which spoke of increasing progress in the cause, and furnished interesting particulars respecting the work done during the year. The CHAIRMAN delivered an able speech, in which he reviewed with satisfaction the work accomplished through such agencies as the League. The movement, said his lordship, is really affecting the great body of the people, and the use of intoxicating liquors is visibly declining.

Miss AGNES WESTON gave an interesting and encouraging account of the work in the Royal Navy. Rev. J. JACKSON WRAY (a comparatively recent clerical recruit) spoke forcibly of the need of the churches and the ministers of Christ being aroused upon the drink question. Ministers of Christ, he said, are sometimes appealed to to cast out the demon of drink, but they cannot, because "this kind cometh not out but by prayer and fasting"; if they expect the masses of the people to abstain from strong drink they must themselves set the example. Father O'CALLAGHAN, a Roman Catholic priest, of Manchester, delivered a rousing speech on the necessity of educating the people and the children in our schools as to the evils of drink. Mr. GEORGE WHITE, J.P., Sheriff of Norwich, and Mr. JOHN TAYLOR, also spoke; the latter said the League ought to double its present income.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

THE friends and supporters of this Society, who assembled at Exeter Hall on Monday evening, had good reasons for encouraging one another in the extension of the Society's usefulness and the continued blessing attending its operations. Setting before themselves the duty of being faithful in little, and so to prove worthy of much, should God entrust much to them, the committee are content to throw heart and soul into labours which do not readily meet the public eye, but which, nevertheless, are not overlooked by Him whose Word they circulated, to the utmost of their power, in its purity and integrity. The secretary, Rev. Dr. BULLINGER, read extracts from a report which admirably emphasised the duty and responsibility of all who would extend the knowledge of the true God in the earth. Under every head and department of the Society's work a definite and decided increase was reported. The year's receipts reached the total of £4,003, the circulation of Scriptures—Bibles, Testaments, and portions—in various languages, being 93,829. Many societies and institutions, at home and abroad, benefited by free grants, and testimonies of blessing have been received from not a few workers.

Sir ROBERT PHAYRE, who presided, spoke briefly as a warm friend of the Society. Rev. RICHARD ROBERTS followed with a stirring address. He showed that in the Bible we have thoughts from God, telling us what He is, and what He expects from us. Enjoying that revelation ourselves, we should earnestly make it known to others, in all its clearness, so that they also may realise its saving power. Mr. Roberts related that not long ago, when in Paris, he heard two men who had been converted from atheism give their experience. It turned out that their atheism was not a revolt against Jehovah, but rather against the God of the priests, and that no sooner did they read the New Testament in its purity, than they came to a mind and heart knowledge of Divine truth as it is in Jesus. Therefore, he urged increased vigour in the circulation of the Holy Scriptures, which are still "able to make wise unto salvation."

Mr. James Inskip, Rev. G. D. Hooper, and Rev. James Neil having made brief speeches, each glorying in the distinctly Protestant principles on which the Society works, Mr. T. B. Miller urged Christians more earnestly to give themselves to the study of the Word of life. The proceedings were very hearty throughout. The Society's Depôt is 7, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. Lansdell, says a contemporary, has been accomplishing wonders in Central Asia. The latest news of him is from Chinese Turkestan. Mountains varying from 17,000 to 20,000 feet have been traversed, some of them covered with solid ice and snow. The journey in its entirety has never before, so far as is known, been made by any European. Yet in one of those remote and inhospitable regions he found Moravian missionaries.

Mr. J. W. Wilson, of the Town Mission, Redruth, Cornwall, purposes to sail for Australia at the beginning of August, being moved to take this step on account of his wife's health. Any friends who are sending young relatives to Australia about that time, and who desire that they should be well cared for on the voyage, might with advantage entrust them to the charge of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson. Their address is Tasmania Cottage, Redruth, Cornwall.

"The Nun of Kenmare," Miss Mary F. Cusack, in a recent letter says:—"I do not suppose it would be possible for you to realise the power of the Romanists in the United States. They absolutely control the press. The next move will be to have a Roman Catholic president. Sometimes I think I could do most good by returning to England and telling what I know and can prove as to the state of this country, where the Pope reigns supreme."

Dr. Valpy French, late Bishop of Lahore, who went as a missionary to India under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society in 1850, has arrived in England. He has spent some time in a tour in Palestine and the East, where he has taken many opportunities of assisting the various forms of missionary effort that are being carried on. Bishop French, says The Echo, has not given up his Indian work. Though he has resigned the see of Lahore, he means to return to India, and to resume his old work as a plain travelling missionary. Before returning he will speak at some of the London May meetings. If ever there was a man full of the Apostolic spirit, it is Dr. French.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on evangelistic meetings to be conducted in Edinburgh (West End), during May, by Dr. Pentecost.——For blessing on open-air services in front of Christ Church (Rev. Newman Hall's), and at Westminster Bridge.——For blessing on a two weeks' mission in Glasgow, commenced on Sunday last, by Mr. William Thomson.——For blessing on a mission in St. Andrew's Parish Church, Northampton, in May, by Rev. Walter Bradbury.——For blessing on services at Woolwich, by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker.——For tent services at Malmesbury, Wilts.——For blessing on Major Whittle's meetings at Stirling, during this week.——For the deliverance of an aged servant of Christ, in isolation and deep distress, residing in Liverpool.——That, if it be God's will, Mrs. W. J. Lewis, of Ryde, I.W., who is suffering from a severe illness, may be restored to health.

OBITUARY.

PASTOR LOUIS JUNOD, OF NEUCHÂTEL.

THIS well-known pastor has just died at the age of sixty-nine. A native of Neuchâtel, he spent a considerable period of his life in Holland and France. From 1880 to the time of his death, he was chaplain to the Pourtalès Hospital, Neuchâtel. He passed away while in the act of prayer, and his sudden decease was announced at a public meeting held to bid God-speed to his son Henri, who with his wife and another lady worker are leaving as missionaries for Delagoa Bay.

REV. MARMADUKE MILLER.

This well-known United Methodist Free Church minister has died at Manchester, in his sixty-first year. Mr. Miller was one of the foremost men of his denomination, and held in succession the most important offices, including the presidency of the Conference. He was a popular public lecturer and preacher, and was well known in all Nonconformist churches as an advocate of religious equality. Many of his lectures and sermons have been published. Mr. Miller was a prominent figure on public platforms at the time of the American Civil War, when he warmly advocated the cause of the North. During recent years he had been suffering from heart disease, and six years ago he gave up pastoral duties, but he continued his preaching engagements in various churches of the denomination.

PRINCESS EUGENIE, SWEDEN.

We regret to record the death, on April 23, of this Princess of the royal family of Sweden. The present king is her eldest brother. She was possessed of rare gifts. Latterly her life was spent in "doing good." In 1860 she removed to her villa "The Home of Peace" ("Fridhem"), on the island of Gothland, in the Baltic, where during the summer months she devoted herself to Christian work of a very varied character. Spending the winter of each year in Stockholm, she contrived to gather round her many noble-minded men and women, enlisting their sympathies in Christian enterprises. She was the President of the Swedish Society for the Preventing of Cruelty to Animals; gave much support to the mission among the Nomadic Lapps, a work from which she saw much fruit. In later years she was mainly instrumental in founding the Eugenia Home for Crippled Children. There is scarcely any philanthropic institution or movement in Sweden which has not benefited by the personal effort of this Christian woman. On one well-remembered occasion she sold a number of jewels to raise money for the erection of a hospital.

CHARLES T. B. WILLIAMS, M.D., F.R.S.

A distinguished Christian physician has lately been called to his rest at the ripe age of 84. Dr. C. T. B. Williams for many years occupied the foremost rank as a consulting physician, and a teacher of medicine and pathology. His was an exceptionally long and successful career. In 1841, together with Sir Philip Rose, he took an active part in founding the Consumption Hospital at Brompton, of which he was appointed consulting physician. For the last fourteen years he has lived in retirement at Cannes, where he passed away most peacefully. For years he made his Bible a study. His Greek Testament was well marked. He was always particularly anxious to get at the literal meaning of the text, and towards the close of his life his great pleasure was to retranslate very literally the texts for each day in "Daily Light." He was a delightful instance of a man of deep learning and great mind, with a very simple, child-like faith. While in practice in London, he took great interest in the "Christian Medical Association," reading papers or giving addresses at the meetings. He often took part in Bible readings at Cannes, and always welcomed to his villa and its pretty grounds any Christians visiting Cannes. He was buried in the cemetery there, beside a dearly loved daughter, numbers of residents following his remains to the grave. Rev. Dr. S. C. Morgan, of Leamington, is his son-in-law.

Bundoran, on Donegal Bay, Ireland, has a well-appointed Holiday Home, connected with the "Colonel Archdull" Memorial Y.W.C.A. Particulars as to terms and special railway fares may be had from the superintendent.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

SIGNOR SONZOGNO, editor of the Secolo, of Milan, who is publishing many thousands of portions of an illustrated Bible every week, is putting up at his own expense night refuges for the destitute in the large towns of Italy.

A PROTESTANT CATHEDRAL is about to be erecte at Berlin at a great outlay of money. As the city greatly needs churches and pastors, the proposal has excited much hostile comment on the Continent. It is said: "Why not provide twenty places useful for preaching the Gospel, instead of one useless building, which, however beautiful it may be, will certainly cut a poor figure beside the cathedrals which have come down to us from the Middle Ages."

CARDINAL LAVIGERIE'S ANTI-SLAVERY CRUSADE is regarded by many Continental Protestants as calculated to do more harm than good. At a large missionary conference held recently at Halle, the condemnation was both unanimous and vigorous. It was held to be a glaring inconsistency and anachronism that followers of the Prince of Peace should follow a Roman Catholic dignitary in preaching a "Holy War," which, moreover, must soon be understood throughout Africa as an attack with carnal weapons upon Mohammedanism, greatly to the prejudice of Christian effort of all kinds.

THE CHURCH OF ROME AND THE SCRIPTURES.—In a neighbouring commune to Paifve, Belgium, where an important Gospel work has been in progress for some time, the priest has vigorously preached against the New Testament, and by his order several copies have been burned. Le Chrétien Belge aptly says: "In France the Pope suppresses Lasserre's version of the Gospels, which met with such splendid success; in Belgium and elsewhere, the priests command that the 'Protestant Books' be burned; and in Great Britain, the position at present assumed is one of recommending the people to read the New Testament! Thus the Church of Rome shows that it can be all things to all men according to circumstances."

Appeals.

Shoreditch Christian Mission.—DEAR SIR,—We are wishful to prepare a shelter from July heat for some of our delicate poor ones. Donations of money, or letters for seaside homes, will be most thankfully received by me. SARA E. HANDS.
24, Charles-square, Hoxton, N.

Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise.—We have made a special grant of anti-infidel publications of the value of nearly £10 to the Open-Air Mission, and so long as we can meet the demand we shall be glad to send to any address in the United Kingdom (London excepted) a 3 lb. parcel on receipt of six stamps to pay carriage. Contributions thankfully received in aid of the gratuitous distribution of anti-infidel tracts at home and abroad.—W. R. BRADLAUGH, 70, King's Cross-road, London, W.C.

Hospital Work in Jerusalem.—Might I solicit contributions towards the new hospital for the Jews' Society mission work in Jerusalem about to be built. I have lately received two letters from the medical missionary there, in which he expresses a hope that the foundation stone of the new building may be laid this year. He states that the number of Jews is increasing so much in the city that the greatest urgency is felt—JOHN EVANS PRESTON, Clerk, Julianstown Rectory, Drogheda, co. Meath, Ireland.

Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling.—Over a half million French tracts have been sent to Paris. Mr. W. Soltau, of the McAll Mission, writes:—"We shall be glad to receive any number of them for use here and in the provinces." The Secretary of the Paris City Mission writes regarding the booklet, "The Inquiring Parishioner," recently translated into French: "It is admirable, and supplies a real want." Contributions towards the free circulation of these publications would be greatly valued by Mr. JOHN MACFARLANE, Manager.

Bloomsbury Institution, Birmingham.—Will Christian friends kindly send cast-off or cheap clothing for distribution amongst the poor of this neighbourhood? The work is carried on by working men and women, and they are doing all in their power. During the past year over 1500 services of different kinds have been held, 10,000 free dinners and breakfasts have been given during the winter; 300 or 400 have professed to decide for Christ during the year, some great drunkards and bad characters. Parcels of clothing can be sent (carriage paid) to the secretary, Mr. THOMAS HEURN, Bloomsbury Institute, Birmingham.

Seventy-seven Pledges have been taken in the past year through the influence of the Perth Women's Temperance Association.

PROGRESS IN SPAIN.

MR. W. GREENE, C.E., of Loughton, Essex, who is travelling in Spain, writes from Campo de Criptana, La Mancha:—"Mr. George Lawrence and his three daughters and myself have arrived in this village of 10,000 souls. The majority of the population is favourable to us, but the chief priests and fanatics are against us. The new hall, just finished, is in the centre of the town, and capable of seating 300 persons. It is all paid for, so we start without debt.

"The whole of the great spiritual development here is the result of one New Testament well placed thirty-four years ago. Souls are thirsting for the truth, so it is easy to speak to them. When we came here at Easter we saw the idolatry of Rome in full blow. The Spaniards, however, are opening their eyes, and as the reform goes on the wealth of the country increases."

The new hall is about to be opened for use. A Bible-carriage will be required to complete the equipment, so that the Gospel and copies of Holy Writ may be taken into the many large villages round about. Miss Lawrence has begun a Bible-class for women, and the outlook is full of promise. In conclusion, Mr. Greene asks for fervent prayer for blessing on this important effort.

Northern Light.

DR. JOHN BROWN, the genial author of "Rab and his Friends," passed, on introduction, an opinion on the late Rev. John McNab, of Johnshaven, which would make a worthy epitaph. "That is, and no mistake, a man o' wecht and power, yet sound to the very core of the kernel within the rough shell." He was unknown to fame, yet he might justly be placed alongside of the late Dr. Joseph Leckie, of Glasgow. The U.P. Church has reared many choice spirits to be remembered—John Ker and William Robertson, of Irvine, whose preaching gifts were not surpassed in Scotland.

The last survivor of the men whom Grace Darling and her father rescued in 1838 from the wreck of the Forfarshire has just passed away in Mr. John Kidd. This sturdy old man was noted for his sterling honesty, independence, and intelligence. He "came out" at the Disruption, and for many subsequent years was a deacon in Barry Free Church.

The National Bible Society of Scotland has sent 150 copies of the New Testament to Glasgow Royal Infirmary to replace others well thumbed and worn by the use of patients.

Lady Aberdeen has been delivering words of wisdom and power to the women of Edinburgh. Her ladyship does not think culture and a well-stored mind barriers to a woman being a good Christian wife and mother.

The Scottish Monthly Visitor Tract Society has existed fifty-six years; during that time no fewer than 181,450,942 silent messengers have been issued.

Saturday, April 27, was a memorable day in Barony Church, Glasgow. The new "Barony" was solemnly dedicated to the service of God, a somewhat Anglican order of dedicatory ceremony having been drawn up by Dr. Marshall Lang, the minister. The church is opposite the old Barony. There are to be no pew rents in the new church, and a week of special services is to commemorate its opening.

LUKE NORTH.

"JOYFUL NEWS" FOREIGN MISSION.—Rev. Thomas Champness records with deep sorrow the death of Mr. Edlin, one of two Joyful News evangelists who went out to the Mysore, India, a year ago. Mr. Edlin was a very devoted and active worker for Christ, and his death is a sad loss. Mr. Champness touchingly asks for the prayers of Christian people in this sore trial. During May he purposes sending out six new men to different mission fields.

Letter to the Editor.

A QUESTIONABLE LEGACY.

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of April 12 (page 8) you refer to a legacy of £5000 having been bequeathed by a Staffordshire lady to a Roman Catholic "priest," in order that he may annually say for the repose of the soul of the testatrix such a number of masses as he may think right, having regard to the amount of the legacy; and you also refer to another legacy for the same purpose.

As an old practitioner in the law, I venture to offer through you to the other persons interested under the will of the testatrix, an opinion, that both the legacies are absolutely void, and I advise that the matter be placed in the hands of some solicitor of high standing whose sound Protestant principles can be relied upon.

Your old friend, TRUTH.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

"COMING IN HIS KINGDOM."

DEAR SIR,—I should be glad of an explanation of Matt. xvi. 28, "Verily I say unto you, there be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom." See also Mark ix. 1; Luke ix. 27.

Yours, &c., M. E. K.

In each of the three Gospels mentioned, this statement of our Lord is followed by a record of the event to which it undoubtedly refers. While it signified much besides, the transfiguration was certainly designed to give the disciples some idea of the future appearing of Christ in power and glory. Those who were with Christ on the Mount had a foreview of the glory and power of the long-expected kingdom of God. When Peter said, "Master, it is good for us to be here," he showed that the grandest anticipations of the Messianic hope were more than met in what he saw, and we can hardly wonder that the effect upon him was lasting. See 2 Peter i. 16—18.

DAVID'S EXPERIENCE.

Some time since I was travelling in Wales, and found myself in company with an intelligent man, who was taking a short holiday. In the course of conversation he told me that he was the master of a workhouse in a northern city. When the city was named, I was quite ready to believe his assertion that the workhouse there was the largest in England. Now, I have a theory that the Lord's people seldom or never get into workhouses (though I hope and believe that many are brought to the Lord after they have become inmates.) I thought that my travelling companion in Wales could, from his large experience, give me some facts that would confirm or remove my previous impressions on this subject. So I asked him: "Do you meet with many in your workhouse whom you notice to be decided Christians?" He said: "I can only remember one; an old man, whom I marked as a Christian, and quite different in his behaviour from the others in the workhouse." H. C. N.

"MANY CALLED, FEW CHOSEN."

We have received several communications on the words of our Lord in Matt. xxii. 14, "For many are called, but few chosen." Some of our correspondents have drawn inferences from the parable with which Matt. xx. opens, and at the close of which, in ver. 16, the same expression occurs in the Authorised Version." As, however, for sufficient reasons, the revisers have omitted the words in chap. xx., we have only to deal with chap. xxii. 14. The hint that the words have a special reference to the Jewish nation is worthy of consideration. As a whole, Christ's own people—"the many"—disregarded his call; the high and official classes ill-treated his messengers, and even compassed his own death. On the other hand, among the outcasts from the "partings of the highways" were found a goodly "few" who were ready to hear his word, and heartily answer his call. Some, again, send us comments by Dr. John Cumming, with whom Dr. J. Arnot substantially agreed in regarding the "called" as saints, of whom the "chosen" are choice ones. This view does not seem to us to be tenable. Those who heard our Lord's words could not but put upon them the more obvious and common interpretation.

"THE LAST DAY."

DEAR SIR,—I shall be glad of an explanation of the phrase "the last day" in John vi. 39, &c., xi. 24, xii. 48. These passages are quoted against the teaching that there will be two resurrections. In John vi. some difficulty arises from a variety of construction in the Greek, the preposition en (in) being sometimes omitted. T. C. D.

The phrase, "the last day," was familiar to the Jews in our Lord's time, and was employed to designate the consummation of God's purpose by the manifestation of the Messiah in glory, and the putting of all things under his feet. The expression is therefore an inclusive one. From other Scriptures we learn that the "last day"—and it is well to remember that with the Lord "a thousand years are as one day"—will be divided into several periods, including the coming of Christ in glory, the resurrection of the sleeping saints, the reign of a thousand years, and the judgment of the wicked. As his purpose was to state the great outstanding truth that men will be brought to account at last, without regard to details as to times and seasons, our Lord spoke of the two resurrections in language which, in the absence of further explanatory revelation, would doubtless have been agreeable to the theory of one simultaneous resuscitation of the righteous and unrighteous dead. The absence or presence of the preposition before the dative case does not alter the meaning of the expression.

MR. T. SHULDHAM HENRY will give addresses at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, on Thursday evenings at 8.30 on the following subjects:—May 2, Backsliding; 9, Unholy Alliances; 16, Fruit Bearing; 23, Our Threefold Victory; 30, Our Responsibility to the World.

SUNDAY NEWSPAPERS.—Rev. W. Atterbury, secretary of the New York Sabbath Committee, has recently written as follows to Mr. Charles Hill, secretary of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association:—"In nearly all our largest cities most of the morning journals now publish a Sunday edition. In New York all the morning papers but one do so. The influence of these Sunday papers is regarded with great anxiety and alarm by thoughtful Christians. No other agency is doing so much to secularise Sunday, perhaps I might say, not all the agencies combined. One of our most eminent surgeons, Dr. C. R. Agnew, who died a few months since, told me that on grounds of mental health he would not admit the secular paper into his house, for the mind (and by sympathy the body) needed an entire change of thought and interest on the Rest Day."

BYROM HALL, LIVERPOOL.—Anniversary services in connection with this mission-hall, of which Mr. Bennet Anderson is the pastor, were held on Easter Monday. In the afternoon a meeting for praise and testimony was held. Among the speakers was Rev. Justin D. Fulton, D.D., of Boston, U.S., who is about to start on a special mission to Rome to study the Papacy at its headquarters; he spoke of his special work in America. A resolution was carried expressing sympathy with Dr. Fulton in his mission. In the evening several addresses were given. Reports from the church Sunday-school, Band of Hope, sewing class, branch mission, &c., were read, showing that during the year forty persons had been baptized. The Bands of Hope, penny bank, sewing class, &c., were working very satisfactorily. During the year 185 garments had been distributed amongst the children of the poor.

THE UNION HALL MISSION, in its annual report, tells of evangelistic effort among the poor in various parts of London. There are in all seven stations, with halls, in which the Gospel of God's grace is preached. Domiciliary visitation is carried on with diligence, and helpful religious literature is distributed. By tent services and open-air preaching, during the summer months, many are reached who would not otherwise be warned to repent, and urged to find their all in Christ. The children are cared for, and special meetings are convened for fathers and mothers. Other good agencies are also employed, and it is pleasing to read that there has been much encouragement. In fact, for some time past a very gracious work has been in progress in some of the halls, and many among the young have professed to find peace through believing. We are sorry to learn that this good work is suffering restraint through lack of the needful funds. The director is Mr. Robert Bilke, Abergeldie, Greenhill-park, Harlesden, London N.W.

The Book World.

The Weekly Pulpit. Elliot Stock. The fifth annual volume of an unpretentious but useful serial. Over eighty sermons and outlines, for the most part of a practical character, and many illustrations, expositions, and hints, generally full of suggestion, will make this handy book helpful to many a busy preacher and teacher.

Infidelity Refuted by Infidels. By S. P. Sprecher. 1s. Funk & Wagnalls, 44, Fleet-street, E.C. An able pamphlet by Rev. Dr. Sprecher, of Cleveland, Ohio. Reviewing the theories of infidels in various ages, the author shows them to be self-destructive, and concludes by pointing out the security of the grounds of faith and hope in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Crime: Its Causes and Remedy. By Gordon Rylands, B.A. T. Fisher Unwin. This admirable treatise is of deep interest, containing as it does so many valuable suggestions for the repression of crime by the practical and common-sense means of reducing the number of criminals. The Introduction, and the chapter which contains an inquiry into the causes of crime, are singularly valuable; whilst other chapters on present methods of dealing with crime, on the prevention of drunkenness, &c., are deserving of careful consideration by all those who are interested in the welfare of the people. On the subject of drunkenness, however, and the means to be used for reducing and repressing it, we think Mr. Rylands has much to learn.

Le Livre de la Jeune Fille. Par un Père de Famille. Lausanne: Henry Mignot. A compilation deserving of high commendation. It contains much valuable matter, arranged under over 200 headings, culled from the works of writers of different periods and nationalities. In the first part the attention of young women is directed to the importance of securing "the pearl of great price"; in the second, they are counselled as to life's difficulties and responsibilities; and in the third, spiritual privileges and duties are explained to excellent purpose. Christian young women, able to read French, will find the perusal of this manual a very profitable exercise. (Paper covers, 2 fr. 50; 3 fr. 75, and upwards.)

Thoughts upon some Words of Christ. By David Wright, M.A. Elliot Stock. A very thoughtful and suggestive book. The language is good and the spirit reverent. The treatment of Judas' history and Sodom's overthrow are specially worth reading, though we think the deductions from Jude go beyond the revealed purposes of God, and cannot agree with the application of Ezek. iv.7. In "The Sabbath of Man" we notice a confusion between the Mosaic and Pharisaic Sabbath, and are surprised to read that Paul "did not separate any other day (after giving up the Jewish Sabbath) from the week as a special and particular day." Such verses as Acts xx. 7, 1 Cor. xvi. 2, Acts. xxi. 4, &c., seem to mark the Apostle as a careful observer of "the first day of the week." Spite of these blemishes, the book is well worth reading and considering.

Disease and Sin. By A Medical Muser. Wyman & Sons. It is somewhat difficult to treat this book seriously. It certainly contains much instruction upon subjects with which the author is competent to treat; but it is amusing—sometimes even ludicrous—to read the opinions expressed on a wide range of subjects, upon which it is at least usual to allow a little liberty of judgment. All evil, moral and physical, according to the author, is the direct result of sin, and needs only proper attention to be paid to the will of God to put an end to it. Even "the devastations caused by floods, storms, and earthquakes...may be due to the sin of man in not securing a proper distribution of forest and moisture; not utilising petroleum and other sources of force which exist in the earth; and not regulating the discharge of electric clouds." Concerning moral diseases, the author thinks "the time may come when science will recognise among mental phenomena something that may be regarded as the immaterial bacillus of avarice, or the bacterium of envy, or the spirillum of falsehood." He magnifies his profession, and thinks that medical science, in the perfected form it is going to reach, will find an antidote for every ill, and that by its means the last enemy—Death—will be destroyed. The author is evidently serious; but very few will be able seriously to read his musings.

The Life and work of St. Paul, by Archdeacon Farrar, is now being republished in serial form by Messrs. Cassell & Co. As a contribution to New Testament exposition, the work occupies a place of its own, being both lucid and eloquent throughout. Like Dr. Farrar's "Life of Christ," this book serves a very useful purpose in helping Western people of to-day to realise notable Eastern scenes of eighteen hundred years ago. The illustrations are numerous, and we have no doubt many will be glad to possess themselves of the book in this serial form. There will be twenty-nine monthly parts at 7d. each.

The Footprints of the Revealer: the Gospel from God. By Rev. Walter Morison, D.D. 5s. Nisbet. A remarkable book, especially addressed to young men. The author intimates that his main object has been to give "a statement, sympathetic in spirit, adequate in argument, popular in style, and convenient in form, of the grounds of belief in Christianity as a revelation." He has succeeded admirably, and we shall be glad to hear that many thoughtful and earnest young men are studying his attractive, cogent, and convincing pages. With great power Dr. Morison shows that, all things considered, a revelation from God is only a reasonable expectation on man's part. Quite rightly, also, he imposes upon rationalists the impossible task of accounting for the declarative utterances of Israel's prophets, to say nothing of their predictions, on any other assumption than the absolute truth of their claim to be God's spokesmen. The teaching is as sound as the argument is triumphant, and we trust the book will have a useful mission, and be blessed of God to many readers.

MAY MAGAZINES.

The Theological Monthly. 1s. Nisbet. "The Clergy and Freethinkers," by Rev. Alex. J. Harrison, is able and useful. The other contents are quite up to the average.

Scribner's Magazine. 1s. F. Warne & Co. Besides high-class articles, amply illustrated, descriptive of life and scenery, we have here the first part of a deeply interesting contribution by Mr. Eugene Schuyler, entitled, "Count Leo Tolstoi Twenty Years Ago." Mr. John Trowbridge writes ably on "Photography."

The Homiletic Magazine. 1s. Nisbet. Every department is well represented this month. Rev. W. J. Deane's exposition of our Lord's miracle in the country of the Gadarenes (Matt. viii.) is admirably thorough. Rev. Dr. Clement Clemance contributes outlines of a capital address to children on Matt. vii. 13, 14, "Two gates, two ways, two ends."

The Reporter's Magazine (4d. 5, New Bridge-street, E.C.) gives prominence to a very interesting interview by the editor with Mr. Hill, the news editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, on the best way of reporting public meetings. Mr. Hill contends that "the reporter of the future" will be the man who can give a vivid descriptive account, and he strongly condemns the cut and dried, formal reports that are now so common.

The Expositor. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton. In addition to important critical discussions, this well-known monthly contains a somewhat remarkable article by Rev. W. W. Peyton, bearing the title "The Bread Problem of the World. Our Lord's first Temptation." Though declining to follow the author in his speculative theorisings, we readily admit that his article—which in literary character is a veritable poem—is very interesting and suggestive. The Gospel record of our Lord's temptation is, however, quite free from the mysticism with which Mr. Peyton invests the subject.

The Everlasting Nation is the title of a new monthly magazine (3d.), edited by Rev. A. A. Isaacs, vicar of Christ Church, Leicester, and published by Messrs. Abraham J. Lev & Co., 9, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury-square, W.C. Devoted to history, biography, prophecy, literature, Biblical exegesis, and passing events relating to the Jewish people, these pages will, it is hoped, not only find many sympathetic readers among Christians, but have an attraction for educated Jews which may be greatly blessed of God. That this new monthly has a truly useful career before it is our earnest prayer. The contents of the first number are varied and excellent, Dr. Saphir being amongst the contributors.

S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO.

The Mother's Companion, edited by Mrs. Benjamin Clarke, is a monthly of practical worth, and always readable.—The Family Friend is a companion periodical, bright and useful.—The Friendly Visitor, for such as require bold type, and are open to homely and good counsel, is an excellent magazine.—The British Workman is deservedly prized. This month's issue contains, among other things, a sketch and portrait of Mr. Isaac Holden, M.P.—The Children's Friend, and The Infants' Magazine, both continue up to the mark of their high reputation. These are all penny magazines.—The Band of Hope Review is a capital halfpenny illustrated sheet.

CASSELL AND CO.'S SERIALS.

Conquests of the Cross. 7d. Part 2 introduces the reader to early Christian effort in India and Greenland. Some intensely interesting information is given of the Moravians and their missionary activity.—The Countries of the World. Part 60 completes the new and revised edition of this valuable work.—The World of Adventure (7d.) presents in its eighth part many exciting scenes, showing that sometimes "fact is stranger than fiction."—Part 31 of Cassell's Illustrated History of England (7d.) brings the story down to the reign of Charles II.—The History of Protestantism. The first volume of this great work by Dr. Wylie, is concluded with part 12, which is devoted to the narration of important developments in Luther's reformation work.—Part 56 of the Commentary for English Readers (7d.) carries the reader forward to Psalm xl. For fulness and clearness this beautiful work will long hold a high place in popular theological literature.—The Pilgrim's Progress and Holy War (6d.) With part 8, the second division of the famous "Progress" begins.—Milton's Paradise Lost, illustrated by Doré, and edited by Dr. R. Vaughan, has reached part 16.—The Library of English Literature. Part 4 of this work, selected, edited, and arranged by Professor Henry Morley, is devoted to further "Shorter English Poems."

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

The Sunday at Home. (6d.) "Of all Degrees" is the title of a new serial by Leslie Keith, begun in this issue. Writing of "Scotch Preachers in Reformation Days," Professor Blaikie gives a deeply interesting account of Knox and his brethren. Among other instructive and entertaining articles are "Some American Poetesses," "Recent Discoveries and the Christian Faith," and biographical sketches of the late Dr. W. Fleming Stevenson and M. Rosseauw Saint Hilaire.

The Leisure Hour. (6d.) The bill of fare is well up to the mark. Isabella Fyvie Mays writes "A Recollection of Two Old Friends," Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Hall. Mr. W. J. Gordon begins a description of the Panama Canal, and Mr. W. J. Hardy contributes an attractive article on "The Handwriting of our Kings and Queens," with facsimiles. "Mines and Miners" and "A Walking Tour in the Vosges" are among the other interesting contents.

The Boy's Own Paper. (6d.) For exciting incident and useful information there is no better monthly for boys. "The Medals of the British Navy" is a contribution of special value. "Bird Impudence" and "Birds that sing and all about them" are articles which will be enjoyed by many.

Friendly Greetings (4d.) has much for young and old alike. "Dr. Johnson's Death-bed" and "King Henry the Fifth" are two of many good items. In The Tract Magazine (1d.) Professor Blaikie writes on "Charles Simeon, of Cambridge," and Mary E. Ropes continues her very sensible articles on "Cottage Politics." The Cottager and Artisan (1d.) contains a sketch, with portrait, of Sir Edward Baines, the well-known Leeds journalist. For the young The Child's Companion and Our Little Dots (1d. each) have many pictorial and other charms.

The Girl's Own Paper. (6d.) Sarah Tytler begins a new serial, entitled "A Young Oxford Maid." "Art and Heart," or decoration for the poor, is an article of practical worth. Studies in "The National Library" are continued by E. F. Bridell-Fox. The light and useful are admirably combined in this ably conducted monthly for girls.

"HOME WORDS" OFFICE.

THE FIRESIDE (6d.) occupies a place of its own among illustrated monthly magazines. Its contents this month are as varied and wholesome as ever. The editor, Rev. Charles Bullock, begins a capital biographical sketch of the late Mr. Bright.

HOME WORDS and THE DAY OF DAYS (1d. each) are useful magazines, furnishing interesting narratives and good counsels. HAND AND HEART (1d.) is another attractive publication.

SHELVED CHRISTIANS: A WORD TO INVALIDS. Another booklet by Miss Spiller, of Hampstead. Grace and truth adorn the pages, which, we are pleased to learn, have ministered comfort to many "shelved" workers. (1d. Partridge.)

IDEAL SABBATHS. We heartily welcome Mr. Francis Peek's recent Contemporary Review article in pamphlet form. The subject is of immediate importance, and the treatment practical and powerful. It is hoped that many who are now quiet on this subject will, on perusing this tract, be awakened to a realisation of the great and many issues involved. (1d. Isbister.)

EVANGÉLISATION POPULAIRE. M. P. Trivier, Pasteur à l'Auberson, Sainte-Croix, Switzerland, has prepared a series of Bible-text sheets, well printed in red and blue, which may either be distributed as tracts or attached to walls. The Scripture verses and expressions are well-selected, and in French-speaking countries these "cartes"—a goodly number of which may be had for a franc—are likely to prove very useful.

EQUALLY YOKED and UNEQUALLY YOKED, companion booklets (6d. per dozen), contain two poems by Mr. W. Luff. The opening stanzas quite invite a reading of the whole, and highly important instruction is conveyed with much power. We trust these stories in verse will be largely circulated, especially among young women, whom they are likely to set thinking seriously before forming life-alliances such as so frequently end miserably. (Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, N.B.)

MR. MOODY'S SCHOOL for the training of Christian workers, in Chicago, bids fair to be a very great success. Excellent teachers have been secured—Professor Moorhead, Rev. W. W. Clark, Miss Dryer, and others well known to Bible students. The plan followed in the summer school at Northfield will be carried out. The mornings are devoted to study, the afternoons and evenings to practical Christian work. Some of the pastors of the city give instruction in the school. The school will continue sixty days, and will give an impulse to many of our churches.—Congregationalist.

A MISSIONARY MURDERED.—A telegram received from New York reports that Rev. Henry Hobson with his wife, and a female companion of the latter, have been brutally murdered on the island of Ruatan, Bay of Honduras, Central America, by a young coloured man-servant, whose object in committing the foul deed was to get possession of any valuables that might be in the missionary's house. Mr. Hobson, who was a native of Jamaica, and about thirty years of age, was a Baptist missionary, and had been labouring in Ruatan (which is the largest of the Bay Islands group) since November, 1884.

PROFESSOR DRUMMOND'S TALK to "The Boys' Brigade" in Glasgow on Sunday of last week was as novel in its method as it was important in its matter. We give his chief points. (1) GEOGRAPHY. Where is the kingdom of God? Within you. (2) ARITHMETIC. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you." (3) GRAMMAR. Verb, "Seek;" mood, imperative, giving a command. Upon this framework was built a thoroughly useful and practical address, and the lessons he enforced will, we cannot doubt, stick like arrows in the minds of those who listened to the Professor's earnest counsels.

A PROPOSED CHURCH FOR TOTAL ABSTAINERS.—A movement of some importance is at present on foot amongst the total abstainers in Greenock, and is intended as a protest against those ministers who admit men connected with the liquor traffic into the eldership and management of their churches. At a well-attended meeting of abstainers in Borland's Temperance Hotel, a motion was made to the effect that they form themselves into a committee for the purpose of supporting a church on purely evangelical and temperance principles. If this idea is carried out, it would be rather a novel departure on the part of the temperance body, and, as stated above, is intended as an effective protest against the temporising attitude of some ministers on the liquor question. After discussion, it was agreed that those present form themselves into a committee to consider the matter, and report to a future meeting. The project of a new church for abstainers alone has caused a great deal of talk, and opinions are divided as to the wisdom of the policy.—British Weekly.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. J. H. Thompson, vicar of Cradley, who died suddenly last week at an advanced age, has bequeathed £3000 to the Church Missionary Society.

A lady gave £1000 at the close of March to the Church Missionary Society for work on the Dark Continent, as her rejoinder to Canon Isaac Taylor's strictures.

Bishop Barry is expected to arrive in England from Sydney about the last week in June, and he will at once commence his duties as Assistant-Bishop of the diocese of Rochester.

During the recent Passover season, the new rector of Spitalfields, Rev. J. H. Scott, invited all his Jewish parishioners to a special service at his church, to be conducted in their familiar Judeo-German dialect. No fewer than three hundred Jews still adhering to the ancient faith accepted the invitation. At the rector's desire they removed their hats during the service, and from first to last they showed no signs of hostility. The Gospel of Jesus the Messiah was powerfully proclaimed to them by Rev. C. N. Nagel, himself a Christian Israelite.

Those who listened to the Spital sermon at Christ Church, Newgate-street, must have been greatly disappointed. There was a splendid congregation—some seven or eight hundred bright intelligent youths, as well as children of a larger growth. The Bishop of Llandaff no doubt is a learned and devout man, but he lost an excellent opportunity by forgetting the needs and capabilities of his audience. If it is absolutely necessary to have a bishop to deliver the Spital sermon, there are surely Bishops on the Bench who would be able to touch the hearts and awaken the interest of the young Blues instead of sending them to sleep!—City Press.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Alex. Ramsay was last week inducted to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church at Highgate, N.

At the annual evangelistic conference of the Metropolitan Presbyteries, Mr. Robert Stark, the organising agent, reported that special services have been held during the winter in a larger number of churches than in any previous year. During the summer open-air work will be entered upon in the London parks and elsewhere.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Rufus P. King has cheered the workers in Jamaica by a very acceptable visit there.

On April 23 John T. Dorland gave a powerful Bible-reading to a large audience in the Friends' Meeting House, Bristol. On Saturday last he and his wife crossed to Dublin to attend the Yearly Meeting, which began there on Wednesday.

By invitation of the teachers of Bristol adult school, about 600 of the men and their wives took tea together on Easter Monday. A very enthusiastic meeting was held, and addressed by Wm. Hobson, Cardiff, and John T. Dorland, Canada. Owing to the growth of the school the first class had to migrate last Sunday to larger premises at the Friends' New-street mission-hall. Other branch schools are in contemplation.

At Yorks. Quarterly Meeting, held in Leeds, on April 24, very earnest anti-opium addresses by many Friends were given, and a memorial to Parliament adopted. A foreign mission conference was held, and addressed by Henry Ecroyd Clark, late of Madagascar, Mary Whiting, lately travelling in Syria, and Charles Terrell, soon going to India. There were pressing appeals for missionaries for India.

BAPTIST.

Rev. James Owen, of Swansea, has been elected Vice-President for the year of the Baptist Union.

As the result of two months' services by students from Regent's Park College Association, a Church has been inaugurated at Hawkhurst, Kent.

During the past winter two Bible-classes have been established and conducted in the Baptist Chapel at Sandhurst, Kent, by the pastor, Rev. T. G. Atkinson, for young men and young women respectively.

Dr. Harwood Pattison reports that revivals are in progress in several of the churches in the city of Boston, Mass. Dr. Pattison also mentions that he has never before seen anything like so much interest manifested in foreign missions as there is now in the American churches.

The congregation of Oxford-road Baptist Chapel (an offshoot of Dr. Maclaren's church), Manchester, are inviting a well-known Bristol minister to the pastorate, with the hearty approval of Dr. Maclaren. It is expected that Dr. Maclaren will, ere long, retire from the pastorate of Union Chapel entirely, but continue as morning preacher; he has now preached there for twenty years.

A very interesting missionary meeting was held at West Green Chapel on Wednesday, last week, to bid farewell to Mr. W. L. Forfeitt, of Reading, and Mr. Harry White, of West Green, on the eve of their departure for the Congo. After the two young missionaries had spoken, stirring addresses were delivered by Mrs. Holman Bentley and Revs. Percy E. Comber, Philip Davies, G. Cameron, and A. E. Scrivener, who are also returning to the Congo. The prominent features of the addresses were the need of increased missionary zeal on the part of Christians at home, and the vast field for labour abroad.

CONGREGATIONAL.

An effort has lately been made by Dr. J. B. Paton, of the Nottingham Congregational Institute, to promote special missions in the churches and mission stations of his old students, and at a very small cost he has been able to send out about twenty old students as missioners, with gratifying results.

Three members of the church at Upper Chapel, Heckmondwike, have during the past year finished their college course, and entered upon the pastorates of Congregational Churches, whilst another has begun his studies at Hackney College. This church has a membership of over 500. Connected with it are a mission chapel at Healey, a Christian Band, Young Disciples' Union, Band of Hope, Busy Bee Society, Benevolent Society, and other institutions, all of which are in active working order.

METHODIST.

Cleveland Hall, Cleveland-street, Euston-road, the building which is being added to the plant of the West Central Mission, is to be opened to-day (Friday). A meeting will be held at Cleveland Hall at 3, and at St. James's Hall at 7 p.m.

The Central China Wesleyan Methodist Lay Mission employs twelve lay missioners in the heart of China, in the midst of 25,000,000 of Chinese. They follow the plan of itinerant evangelism, and combine with it medical and orphanage work.

For several months past inquiry has been made by the Wesleyan Home Mission authorities into the relative strength of Methodism in the agricultural parts of the country, with a view to extended home missionary operations. In England about 7000 villages and hamlets are supplied with Wesleyan Methodist services, giving sitting accommodation for 870,000 people. The lay preachers number 15,500. More than 7500 English villages are untouched by Wesleyan agencies, and it is proposed to permeate these places with home mission agencies.

Bank Holiday in London with the Wesleyans is always observed as a mission band field day. On Monday, last week, members of the Mission Band Union had a grand rally day in Southwark. Several gatherings were held in the open air, and in Long-lane Chapel. The closing gathering of the day was an evangelistic service in Southwark Wesleyan Chapel conducted by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. At the close many entered the inquiry-rooms, and a number found peace in Christ.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Mr. W. Spencer Walton, has been in Dublin delivering evangelistic addresses, and giving accounts of the mission work at the Cape with which he is connected Some of his meetings have, however, been postponed owing to his sudden illness.

About £150,000 has been left by Mr. Henry Campbell, to found an hospital and college at Belfast, in the latter of which the sons of ministers preparing for the ministry shall have special advantages and privileges.

The annual district meetings of the Methodist Church are being held this week in various parts of Ireland. It is said that a larger number of ministerial candidates are offering themselves than for some years previously.

The Irish Episcopal Church has had a prosperous year, and its income, which shows an increase of more than £11,000 over the previous year, has responded to the return of better times. The parochial reports, presented at the Easter Vestries, were in many instances hopeful and encouraging.

A series of largely attended Gospel meetings, at which several professed decision for the Lord, was held last week by Rev. R. Crawford Johnson in the Methodist Church, Portadown.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie has finished eight months' labours among the Free Churches on the South side of Glasgow, and is now enjoying a much-needed rest. His labours throughout have been marked by earnest preaching of the way of salvation. And the Gospel has not been preached in vain.

A very successful four weeks' mission in Biggar, conducted by Mr. Ferguson, Lanarkshire Christian Union, has been brought to a close. Many have professed to receive definite blessing.

The Paisley Lodging-House Mission, conducted by Mr. James C. Elder, The Grange, and a large staff of devoted workers, closed a successful winter's work by a week of special meetings.

The "Faith Mission" are to hold a Convention at Rothesay, May 23 to 26. The speakers expected are Revs. C. G. Moore, J. G. Mantle, J. G. Gregson, and Glasgow friends.

The Glasgow Home Mission Union has done a large amount of energetic and successful labour in the cause of home evangelisation. At the annual meeting last week in the Christian Institute it was reported that, in connection with 49 congregations, 407 had been added to the membership, making the total for the year 858.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Baskill, Moville, Mr. Samuel Scott, an earnest Christian, aged 74.—Rev. J. H. Thompson, vicar of Cradley, Staffordshire.—Rev. James Compston, of Upper Tooting, for some years pastor of the Baptist Church at Fivehead, Taunton, Somerset; since January, 1888, he has been much engaged in special evangelistic service, and was well known as a temperance worker.—Rev. Paul Orchard, of Bristol, for forty-three years in the Wesleyan ministry.—Rev. W. B. Philpot, vicar of South Bersted, Sussex.—Rev. H. T. J. Bower, late Wesleyan minister in the Blandford Circuit.—Rev. Amos Abbott, for many years a missionary of the American Board at Ahmednagar, Bombay, India.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 5.—Leviticus XIX.

THE many detached prohibitions and commands which this chapter contains have no perceptible connection beyond being all of them practical directions as to holiness of walk in matters of everyday life. They are introduced with the reason, urged in chap. xi., "Ye shall be holy, for I the Lord your God am holy." Could there be a stronger motive than this as an incentive to holiness? Let us observe that the eighth commandment is expanded in ver. 11, so as virtually to forbid cheating and lying. In cheating we rob a neighbour of truthful dealing, to which he has a right at our hands; and in lying we rob him of truthful speaking, to which he is rightly entitled from us.

The prohibition in ver. 16, "Neither shalt thou stand against the blood of thy neighbour," has been variously explained—probably, Keil's explanation is the best. He treats it as a prohibition against conspiracy against a neighbour's life: "Thou shalt not set thyself against the blood of a neighbour"—i.e., to seek his life. Thus it would appropriately follow the prohibition against talebearing, which is the prelude to strife, variance, and enmity. The spiritual meaning of the prohibitions in ver. 19, "Not to mix things which are separated in God's creation," is clear from 2 Cor. vi. 14.

MONDAY, MAY 6.—Leviticus XX.

Various forms of wickedness are forbidden in this chapter, the ground of such prohibition being the holiness expected of Israel as a people of whom Jehovah could say, "I have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine" (26). When this new relationship to Him was clearly seen, the argument arising from God's own character was irresistible. "Ye shall be holy unto Me, for I the Lord am holy." Observe the twice repeated "I have separated you from other people" (24, 26). Mark also the type (creeping things) in ver. 25, where the carnal-minded heathen from whom Israel has been separated correspond to unclean things creeping on the ground. To eat such unclean food was typically to associate with or find pleasure in the morally unclean people and ways of heathendom.

New Testament exhortations to holiness are likewise grounded on the separation which redemption effects between a world that "lieth in the wicked one" and those of whom the Apostle John can say, "We know that we are of God"; and if this separation is not admitted much of the teaching of Scripture as to holiness loses its point and power. The universalism of the day which ignores the distinction between the Church and the world loses thereby the chief Scriptural motive to holiness. We hear much of "humanity" and of what it is capable of, but little of separation from it as a fallen and corrupt race, out of whose guilt and coming doom believers have been delivered, to be "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation"—"a people for God's own possession that ye may show forth the excellencies of Him who called you out of darkness into his marvellous light" (1 Peter ii. 9, R.V.). Compare with this, as parallel to the subject of our chapter, 1 Peter i. 15, 16: "As He which called you is holy, so be ye yourselves also holy in all manner of living; because it is written, Ye shall be holy; for I am holy" (R.V.).

TUESDAY, MAY 7.—Leviticus XXI.

This chapter contains laws of holiness for the priests. "The priest's family was to be the model of purity."—Sp. Com. Priests were forbidden (1—4) to contract defilement by contact with the dead, except in the case of their own immediate family—the exceptions being father, mother, son, daughter, brother, and unmarried sister. It will be observed that celibacy was no law for God's priesthood, though it is for that of Rome.

The reason for the holiness of the priesthood, as given in ver. 6 and 8, is their being appointed to offer the bread (or "food," it includes whatever was offered on the altar by fire) of their God. Those who were appointed to convey to God that whereon He (typically) fed, must be themselves holy. "The offerings of the Lord made by fire, the bread of their God, do they offer: therefore shall they be holy" (6, R.V.).

Any physical blemish disqualified a priest from offering the food of God to Him, though he might partake of such food himself (21)—i.e., such parts as were reserved for priests. How often are Christians debarred by their spiritual blemishes from offering to God those sacrifices with which He is well pleased (Heb. xiii. 15, 16), though mercifully not debarred from feeding on the portion which He assigns them. They may receive, but they must not offer. All such disqualifying blemishes should be avoided by the royal priesthood, and where they exist, healing—which happily is not beyond reach—should be sought. The first two disqualifying blemishes are blindness and lameness. Compare, as to the remedy for these, Rev. iii. 18: "Anoint thine eyes with eyesalve that thou mayest see"; and Heb. xii. 13: "That which is lame...let it rather be healed."

WEDNESDAY, MAY 8.—Leviticus XXII.

Another aspect of the holiness which God requires in those who draw nigh to Him is presented to us in this chapter. Not only are priests to abstain from things that would defile them, but when they themselves happen to be defiled by infirmity (4), or contact with "uncleanness" (5), they are to abstain from contact with holy things, lest they should defile that which is holy.

A practical application of this principle would make Christians—members of the royal priesthood—careful lest they themselves happen to be in an unspiritual state, and so contract defilement of conscience, thus communicating their defilement to others. Let them rather "cleanse themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God" (2 Cor. vii. 1), and then they will be fit companions for the "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty," of whom God has said: "I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people" (2 Cor. vi. 16—18).

The priest who happened to be defiled was not, however, cut off from contact with that which was to be his food, holy though it was, if only he first "wash his flesh in water; and when the sun is down he shall be clean, and shall afterward eat of the holy things; because it is his food." So let not any sense of defilement hinder the believer from repentance and faith in the "precious blood of Christ," which is the New Testament fulfilment of the injunction: "Wash you; make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes." Then let him appropriate all the soul-sustaining virtue of Christ as the bread of life, "because it is his food."

THURSDAY, MAY 9.—Leviticus XXIII.

We have in this chapter a detailed account of the "feasts (or appointed times) of the Lord"—set feasts, R.V. These were seven: (1) The weekly Sabbath; (2) the Passover; (3) Feast of Unleavened Bread; (4) Pentecost; (5) Feast of Trumpets; (6) Day of Atonement; (7) Feast of Tabernacles. Of these the three latter occurred all of them in the seventh month of the year, and the one before them, Pentecost, was connected, as a supplement, with the feasts of the first month, Passover and Unleavened Bread. So that virtually the Jewish year was divided into nearly two equal parts by the feasts of the first and of the seventh months, at each of which times the feasts clustered round a sacrifice of the highest importance. The first group round the Passover, the second round the Day of Atonement, each striking types of the sacrificial death of the Lord Jesus.

But each of these, Passover and the Day of Atonement, presented a different aspect of the work of Christ. Passover, which commemorated Israel's deliverance from Egypt, presented a type of Christ's death viewed as deliverance from the power of Satan, the prince of this world. The Day of Atonement sacrifice, which gave the high priest admittance within the veil into God's presence, typified the death of Christ as opening up heaven itself, and bringing his people near to God. We have both aspects combined in 1 Pet. iii. 18. Mark the ordinance of the sheaf of firstfruits connected with the Passover, to be waved before the Lord "on the morrow after the Sabbath" (11), this represents "Christ risen from the dead, the firstfruits of them that slept."

FRIDAY, MAY 10.—Leviticus XXIV.

The first nine verses of this chapter describe Aaron's duties and responsibilities with regard to providing and tending the oil used for the lamps in the holy place, as well as the shewbread there to be set forth upon the table. Though the children of Israel were to bring "pure oil olive," the responsibility for seeing that it was provided, and for "ordering" it when provided, was laid upon Aaron. "It appears that the responsibility of keeping up the lights rested on the high priest."—Sp. Com.

Would that we who are called to "shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life" (Phil. ii. 15, 16), could bear this more in mind, and so, instead of trying ourselves to shine by our own efforts, could go more frequently to our great High Priest, who is responsible, and draw upon his resources; then should we find that "the excellency of the power" (for shining, see 2 Cor. iv. 6, 7) is "of God and not of us."

From the 10th verse to the end, there is narrated the death of the blasphemer—the result of a mixed marriage thus implicitly condemned—and in the mode of his public execution by stoning we learn a valuable lesson as to the meaning of "the laying on of hands" (see 14), "let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head." The sin was thus put back upon him who committed it by those who, having heard him, were responsible. So he is made to "bear his sin" (15), which involved its immediate judicial punishment.

The condemnation of murder and injury which follows seems intended to discriminate between the judicial punishment of sin deserving it by the death penalty, and that which if without judicial sanction is but murder.

SATURDAY, MAY 11.—Leviticus XXV.

The Sabbatic year was appointed both for a rest to the land, and that its spontaneous produce that year should be a gift to servants, strangers, and cattle, the rights of the owners being apparently suspended for that year, and their wants being supplied by a special blessing from God upon the sixth year, which (21) was to produce enough for three years.

The year of Jubilee (8—17), at the end of seven times seven years, or every fiftieth year, was to be a universal release to all debtors and dispossessed owners, thus once in the average life of every Israelite would he see around him a shadow of good things to come.

Ye who have sold for nought
Your heritage above,
Shall have it back unbought,
The gift of Jesus' love;
The year of jubilee is come;
Return, ye ransomed sinners home!

It is apparently to the sounding of the jubilee trumpet (9) that Ps. lxxxix. 15 refers, "Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound," for the word for "joyful sound" is that used of the "jubilee trumpet."

The jubilee year not only brought restoration of the land to those who, through debt or poverty, had sold it away, but the expectation of it beforehand was to diminish the value of the land as the time drew nigh (16).

So should the expectation of the Lord's Second Coming, the true redemption jubilee—which so many signs attest to be nigh, diminish the value we are apt to attach to the world, and the things that are in the world (1 John ii. 15—17).

A principle of the greatest importance to Israel is contained in ver. 23, "The land shall not be sold for ever: for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me."

When the Lord returns to claim his own, then, and not till then, will Israel be put in possession of the land by an indefeasible title, and that by One who can say, "The land is mine."

TRACT WORK IN CHINA.—Mr. J. A. Stooke, of the China Inland Mission, writing from Chefoo, says that no agency is better fitted to meet the errors of Chinese religious observance and teaching than wise tract distribution. The majority of the people gladly accept those offered them, and take them home to be read. There are many cases on record where the first spiritual impressions were received through the tracts distributed at open-air preaching.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—The usual Bank Holiday gatherings were held afternoon and evening on Easter Monday at Kilburn Hall, when a number of friends gave helpful and encouraging addresses. Meetings were also held at Bignold Hall, Forest Gate, the principal eastern branch of the Mission. On Easter Sunday a meeting was held amongst the gipsies, who gathered around the workers and listened to the Gospel message. Monday saw the same band of workers pitched again at their stand, and with their voices attracting many of the pleasure seekers. An evening meeting was held in the hall. At West-street Hall, Carshalton, an interesting meeting was held on Good Friday.

THE ANOINTING AT BETHANY.

MARK xiv. 1—9. GOLDEN TEXT: Ver. 8.

VER. 1, 2.—The end of our Lord's earthly life was at hand. "After two days"—it was Tuesday night when He uttered his solemn predictions. Only Wednesday and Thursday intervened before the day of his death. "The Feast of the Passover" was the great Jewish feast, and celebrated the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt. It lasted for seven days, during which unleavened bread was eaten (see Exod. xii.). But it was typical also. Christ is the antitype of the Paschal Lamb: and the Christian life of the believer is a perpetual Passover feast (1 Cor. v. 7, 8). Jesus viewed it in this light, and repeated the announcement of his betrayal and death (Matt. xxvi. 1, 2). His enemies, "the chief priests and scribes," were busy seeking how they might compass his death. They had already determined to kill him (John xi. 53), but they consulted now as to how and when to take him craftily ("with subtilty," R.V.). The city was then rapidly filling with pilgrims from all parts, who were gathering to the feast. To take Him then might lead to "an uproar of the people" (2): hence their conclusion, "not during the feast" (R.V.). They would wait until the seven days of the feast were over. Such was their counsel, but if that were carried out the time of the Lord's death would not accurately fulfil the type. Even the devices of the wicked are so overruled that they accomplish the purposes of God. Wordsworth says:—"Observe Christ's power over his enemies in his death. Oftentimes when they endeavoured to take Him, He escaped from them (John x. 39). But at the time when they had desired not to take Him, viz., at the Passover (Luke xxii. 6), then He willed to be taken, and they, though unwilling, took Him: so they fulfilled the prophecy in killing Him who is the true Passover, and in proving Him to be the Christ."

The anointing in Bethany is the same as that recorded in John xii. 1—9; but must not be confounded with the incident in Luke vii. 36—38. From the account in John we learn that it took place "six days before the Passover"—i.e., on the previous Saturday. Matthew and Mark say, "In the house of Simon the leper." Probably Simon was a relative of the family of Lazarus, and had been healed of his leprosy by Jesus. The name of Simon was very common, so he was still distinguished from others as "the leper."

Ver. 3.—"A woman," not named here, but evidently Mary, the sister of Lazarus (John xii. 3). She was greatly attached to the Saviour. See Luke x. 39; John xi. "Ointment."—"The ointment of nard was highly esteemed in antiquity as a precious aromatic and a costly luxury. It was brought chiefly from Asia Minor in little alabaster flasks, and the best were to be had in Tarsus. Yet the plant grew in Southern India."—Winer, quoted by Lange. It was very costly, and "a pound" of it (John xii.) must have been very valuable. "Poured on his head" and his feet (John xii.). Anointing the head was a distinction conferred upon the guest of honour (Ps. xxiii. 5; Luke vii. 46). Mary deemed her Lord worthy of this, and of the further honour of the anointing of the feet. Her love prompted this unusual service. To her He was worthy of the best and costliest treasure she possessed, and of the highest honour she could pay.

Ver. 4, 5.—"Why was this waste?"—John traces this murmuring to its true source—Judas—and discovers its real meaning—"he was a thief" (John xii. 4—6). But this traitor's whispered objection deceived the rest of the disciples, and they joined in condemning such waste. "Three hundred pence" (see Matt. xviii. 28), about £10, thrown away upon what seemed to them an unnecessary and meaningless service. How plausible the objection seemed! At the same time it drew attention to the objectors as having a special consideration for the poor. But in truth it was the utterance of a hypocrite, concerned only to add to his own store; and whose heart was so destitute of true love to the Saviour that such an act of love was entirely beyond his comprehension. Sacrifices made in order to do honour to the person of Christ he could not understand. "They murmured against her."—The effect of their murmuring upon Mary must have been painful. It was not the first time that her love had expressed itself in a way that others did not approve (Luke x. 39—42). Jesus had defended her then; but would He do so now? or, would He condemn the waste?

Ver. 6—9.—"Let her alone"—excellent counsel for every Christian. It is contrary to the will of Christ that one of his people should, by the spirit of fault-finding, give trouble to another. He defends her act: (1) As "a good work on Me" (6)—a beautiful work. And this because it was prompted by love to Him, and true appreciation of his work. They condemned it because He was less to them than He was to Mary. Her heart was right with Him. The spirit of devotion which led to this work was not one which would allow Christ's poor to want. (2) "Ye have the poor with you always" (7).—The poor will not get less because Christ gets all. He who gives Christ his right place, and makes Him chief, will not fail in practical service. Christ gave Himself to God, but it was for us (Eph. v. 2). In giving ourselves to Him we also shall be giving ourselves for men. (3) "She hath done what she could" (8).—There could be no higher commendation. Such words, spoken by the lips of Jesus, would be more than a sufficient reward for the greatest sacrifice one could make. He not only commended highly what others severely condemned, but He saw a beautiful significance in that which was without meaning to them. It was an anticipatory anointing for his burial. His death was becoming more and more vivid to Him, and this act of loving service was seen to have a beautiful connection with it. Perhaps she did not so understand it; yet her truer love to Jesus may have given her a better understanding of his words than they had. (4) "Wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached," &c. (9).—We are fulfilling this prediction while reading and admiring this woman's devotion now. How strange that an act which at the first sight seemed to deserve the censure uttered against it should be so honourable in the judgment of Christ as to deserve perpetuating thus.

The lessons of this incident are:—

Love gives its very best to Christ.—Our whole life is the alabaster cruse of precious ointment which He deserves, and which is never so well used as when yielded to Him (Rom. xii. 1, 2).

Love which gives Christ his right place is not likely to mistake the service He desires.—Nothing understands Christ so well as love. Even the disciples, while influenced by the spirit of the hypocritical Judas, do not know Christ as Mary does.

Our criticisms of others' service may be reversed by the judgment of our Lord.—It is better, therefore, to cease from fault-finding.

Loving service rendered to Christ is not forgotten.—John xv. 16; Heb. vi. 10; Rev. xiv. 13.

ITALY.—Rev. E. H. Hopkins, and Dr. Elder Cumming left England for Rome last week to attend the Conference there. They will also hold meetings for the deepening of spiritual life on May 7 and 8, at No. 11, Lung' Arno, Guicciardini, Florence.

DEMERARA.—Mr. John Mitchell, who with several other mission workers left England in November last, reports active Gospel labour in many places along the Demerara River. Among the Chinese settlers several have of late confessed Christ, and their steadfastness in the faith is a source of great encouragement to the European evangelists. Georgetown is the chief centre of their operations, in conjunction with the work carried on by Mrs. Huntley.

Extracts from a few letters already received in answer to a request for remarks, critical or otherwise.

"I am enjoying the reading of 'James Brainerd Taylor' very much."

"I think it is beautiful."

"It is charming."

"Oh, it is sweet indeed: so devoted to God: he did indeed get a blessing."

"It is sublime! Glory to God that He does bring out His brightness in the lives of mortal men!"

"I have read it through, and see in it another testimony of the faithfulness of God: it is a great cause of thankfulness as we hear of one and another telling out the fulness of blessing they have received, and how God delights to honour those who honour Him."

"I have read it carefully and prayerfully through, and my soul has been richly blessed. I dare not criticise: it is too deep and rich for me. How real is the tracing of his soul's progress! And as my soul has followed page by page I see in many instances I have passed through like experience. All glory to Jesus! It is by such published lives as these that the real spiritual state of the Church of Christ is shown to the world. And it also acts as a mighty lever to encourage hungry souls to seek and find the real blessing of holiness. Oh that they were multiplied! God bless you in this grand work! my humble prayers shall be with you. I am lending the first part round to my friends and I will do all I can to publish it."

CITY WAREHOUSES.—Sir,—A firm of manufacturers in the City of London hold once a week, for one hour, a meeting amongst their employés in the evening. The workshops are closed that evening an hour earlier for the purpose. There are short addresses, mingled with prayer and singing. If every Christian firm would do likewise, many a careless young man or woman might be led to seek the Saviour, and be saved from the evils that abound.—Yours truly, W. A. S.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, APRIL 29, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

BANK HOLIDAY is always a busy time in Ratcliff-highway, but on Easter Monday the devil seemed more active than ever. On no occasion have we seen more drunkenness and disturbance. The workers at the Strangers' Rest were very busy all the afternoon and evening, seeking to carry the Gospel message to the people, both inside and outside. The meetings were kept on till a late hour, and we left rejoicing over lost ones saved, wanderers brought back, and the privilege of engaging in such a happy service. E. M. T.

BRONCHO-PHTHISIS AND GENERAL DECLINE.

This patient, who first applied to me some years since, was failing rapidly. His symptoms were severe cough and expectoration, entire loss of appetite, short breathing, decrease of flesh, night sweats, and acute pains. For four months he unremittingly followed my instructions, and gradually got well.

In three successive years he took my medicine for a short time, on any return of cough or cold. And writing me in January and February of this year, he says:—"I am pleased to testify to the great value of your medicine. I recommend it to all. I would not be without it for a good deal. By God's blessing it has done me wonderful good. . . . I am a living wonder, and I owe it to you, under God. Use my case as you think proper.—T. W. HOLLEY, Crown-street, LEISTON, Suffolk."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

A CHILD'S LIFE SAVED.

A PLEA FOR CHILDREN'S COUNTRY HOLIDAYS.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION. Superintendent: Mr. GEO. HATTON 4, AMPTON STREET, REGENT SQUARE, W.C.

"That child's life has been saved, so far as I can see, by the Mission," said a doctor to me when I was visiting a poor lodging in St. Giles'. "How so, doctor?" "She seemed fading away, consumption was threatening when the Mission sent her to one of the Holiday Homes. The change checked the disease, strengthened the system, and now she's doing well." Just then her mother comes in, and hearing the drift of our talk, adds—"She come back a different girl altogether; why, bless you, I didn't hardly know my own child—not at first, I didn't."

The above is extracted from a small pamphlet just published by the St. Giles' Christian Mission, which will be sent free to anyone applying for a copy.

Through the kindness of our many friends this Mission was enabled last year to send 100 poor little children to Holiday Homes for periods varying from two to four weeks, and we are anxious to repeat if not extend the work this year, for the need of such holidays is as urgent now as ever it was.

We are also wanting to provide the 1,500 children attending our several Schools with a Day in the Country, and most earnestly plead for the sympathy of the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN" on their behalf.

DONATIONS will be most thankfully acknowledged if sent to our bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C., or to—GEORGE HATTON,

Superintendent of the St. Giles' Christian Mission,

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

TEN Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year over 7,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Miss Sarah Davies, of the "Bird's Nest," Dublin.

We desire to direct the special attention of our readers to the letter by Lord Meath and Lord Kinnaird, on page 15, with respect to young Englishwomen engaged in connection with the Paris Exhibition. We can scarcely conceive of any more perilous position than that in which a young woman may find herself, away from home and without true friends, in a city with so many allurements as Paris. The least we can do is to look after the moral and physical welfare of our kith and kin thus situated in a foreign land, and we hope there will be a hearty response to the appeal of our correspondents.

The first step to freedom is taken when the enslaved are fully awake to a realisation of their position. We should hope for the early unlocking of the doors of the Indian Zenanas, if any considerable proportion of the women of that country were in the same frame of mind as a native lady, whose words are reported in The Times of Monday:—

Though we are by nature extremely averse to this system of seclusion, yet it has been so blindly and cruelly enforced upon us by many who have either no idea or conscience to realise the horrible outrage they commit on nature, that we cannot help it, but succumb to this cruel treatment in the best way we can. We are too weak to rebel against the injunctions of the stronger sex, no matter how ignominious they may be. Yet when we think of some of our sisters' struggles for freedom, we cannot help but regard the world as a picture of hell. Our men enjoy all the freedom of the bird, but love to keep their women in seclusion as tortured slaves of custom. We all have the will for freedom, but not the power. We look to our men for assistance, but that simply amounts to depending on a rotten reed. It cannot be denied that this enforced system of seclusion is inconsistent with the Divine laws, and it is therefore not by choice that we assume a custom by which we are completely shut out of the breautiful world, wherein the Almighty has created us to live, and admire his works. It is idle to think that our Indian women are content with their treatment; they have resigned themselves to their fate. We are the weaker sex, and instead of being helped and respected on this account, we are ill-treated, tortured, and repudiated, as though we were enemies of the human race.

This piteous wail ought to deepen sympathy in the breast of every free woman the world over; it ought also to quicken interest in the work of Zenana Missions, which are doing so much to break down this "enforced system of seclusion."

Several friends have desired us to contradict a statement made in one of the articles on Missions in The Methodist Times, from which we quoted last week. The statement was to the effect that "every missionary landing in India finds himself at once received into 'Society,'" and that in Calcutta he is "presented at Court," &c. A missionary now in England, who was for three or four years in Calcutta, affirms that the general statement on this point in The Methodist Times is absurdly untrue. Now and then some leading missionary resident in the city may receive a card of invitation to some reception from the Viceroy, but certainly not one missionary in fifty does so. As to "Society," it is notorious that it despises and hates missionaries. It seems a pity that those who undertake to criticise missionary work, or, indeed, any work, should not first make themselves cognisant of the facts of the case.

Now that Sir Monier Williams' book upon Buddhism has been published, there can be no excuse for the Western followers of Buddha remaining in ignorance of the vital differences between the teachings of Christ and those of their prophet; for the author has brought to his task many years' preliminary study of his subject in the East, and a scholarly acquaintance with Eastern languages and literature. That the infinite superiority of Christianity has been demonstrated goes without saying, but it may be remarked that the demonstration has been effected with perfect fairness and candour.

The Daily Telegraph, in a recent review of Madame Blavatsky's latest exposition of Theosophy, smartly describes it as leading the bewildered reader "through a jingle of jargon into a morass of metaphysical mystery."

It is announced that an association with the control of a newspaper has been formed in Japan for the defence of Buddhism. Strange to say, however, most of the Japanese journals decry the new movement, and warn the Buddhists against using education as a weapon, inasmuch as in the past education has been remarkably fatal to Buddhism. Probably it is true that the spread of scepticism, as well as the wide acceptance of Christianity, has something to do with this opposition; but too much importance must not be attributed to the appearance of scepticism in the East, for, as the history of Italy and France has shown, a period of dark superstition must almost necessarily be followed by a rebound of the pendulum to the other extreme.

Here is an interesting scene witnessed on Easter Monday, in an omnibus, at a popular seaside resort in the South:—

Clergyman—to one among a number of boys: "Were you at church yesterday?" Boy: "Yes, sir." Clergyman: "Good boy. Go to church; that is the way to go to heaven." Then to another boy: "Were you at church?" "No, sir; I was at chapel." "Chapel!" said the clergyman, greatly shocked; "chapel is the way to hell!"

This is not an invention, but a fact. The gentleman who witnessed it indignantly demanded of the clergyman his authority for such an extraordinary and foolish statement. An eminent and useful London pastor to whom this incident was told the following day, said: "I should have been disposed to remind the clergyman that 'all liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone.'" Was the remark too severe? or did the clergyman believe his own statement? If so, then how sad that such a man should be the blind leader of others! None would more indignantly repudiate such a sentiment than godly evangelical clergymen.

The House of Commons has seldom done more honour to itself and such good service to the Empire as when it decided last week, by a majority of ten against the Government, that the fiscal methods of Indian administration are inimical to the well-being of the people of that country, because they tend to foster the drink traffic. It is not pleasant for any Government to suffer defeat, but in this case it was well deserved, and we hope our rulers will avoid further discomfiture by such changes as will remove the scandal and hurt that are being inflicted on our Indian fellow subjects. We congratulate Mr. Samuel Smith, Mr. Caine, and their supporters, and bid them go forward in their crusade against a crying wrong.

Mr. Samuel Smith was not so successful in his impeachment of the arrangements by which India makes some millions of hard cash out of the opium-smoking propensities of the Chinese people. The favourite argument brought up against those who condemn the opium trade is that it is not worse in its effects than the drink traffic is at home. As if two very black blacks could make, between them, one white! Those who are fighting the evils of the opium abroad are also doing their best to cope with the evils of the drink at home. We wonder if the same could be said of the objectors to whom we have referred. Mr. Samuel Smith and his friends were beaten in this attempt by two to one, but their cause is just, and it is bound to be victorious one day.

A recently published Parliamentary paper deals with the subject of the excessive hours which, especially in times of pressure, certain railway companies require of their servants. We do not doubt that there are grave difficulties to be met in the working of some of our large railways; but, as the Board of Trade has urged in this case, they "could be met by a permanent increase in the staff rather than by a system of overtime which is a danger to the men themselves and the public." Such an increase might imply a slight reduction in the dividends, but surely it is not too much to expect that the saving of human life should be taken as an ample set-off against a trifling interference with monetary profit.

We beg our readers' attention to the touching story of a Doomed Child (p. 18). Miss Brittan, who is there mentioned, has issued a circular on behalf of Eurasian children, who, she says, are brought up in a condition generally far worse than the poor heathen around them. The missionary societies make a great mistake in not doing more for them. If they were trained from early childhood, they would, when converted, make most efficient teachers and missionary helpers, their knowledge of the native language, and of the customs of the people, rendering them peculiarly fitted for this work.

Some weeks since we informed our readers that Pastor Jacob of Oroomiah, Persia, had been fraudulently induced by a swindler to procure the cashing of a cheque for £200, which was subsequently dishonoured. An English lady, feeling grieved at the fraud thus practised by an Englishman on the unsuspecting pastor, offers £10 in the hope that other English Christians will speedily make up the amount to £200, and thus save the pastor from financial ruin.

From the ante-Reformation times, the claims of Christianity have been enforced on the side of the authority of the Bible, which was the power of Protestantism; on the side of its adaptation to meet the needs and cries of man's sinful and tempted condition, which was, through the Spirit, the power of the Evangelical Revival; and, in addition to these, on the side of the highest culture and scholarship. Christianity, in this last aspect, is asserting its claim upon man, and in this light it is winning the battle all along the line.

Since this is so, it is manifest that our modern sceptics will put forth all their strength in opposition. They have seen that Christianity meets man's wearied and burdened condition, but have disparaged it on the side of culture. Few have done this more copiously and unblushingly than Professor Huxley. He having appealed to scholarship, Dr. Wace in this month's Nineteenth Century meets him there, and charges him, among other things, with wrong conclusions, with reasoning absolutely destitute of validity, with arguments that are mere presumption and guesswork, with omissions or misapprehensions of the German critics whom he quotes; and affirms of his articles that the astonishing thing about them is the rottenness of the ratiocination on which the Professor prides himself. Failure has been the history of the German sceptics from Strauss downwards; and failure, utter and complete is, in the providence of the Spirit, destined to be the mark of English attempts to set aside the Gospel of our salvation by appeals to culture, criticism, and scholarship.

We hail with satisfaction the results achieved at Bow-street Police Court last week by the National Vigilance Association against Mr. Vizetelly and several other publishers and vendors of obscene books. None too soon has action been taken to cleanse certain shops in the Strand and neighbourhood of these abominations. The presiding magistrate, Mr. Vaughan, in committing the prisoners for trial, said:—

> These were cases of misdemeanour, and he could not dispose of them, and, even if he could, he would not do so, as he considered the books most sensual and demoralising.

It is to be hoped that the cause of public morality will be as well championed at the Old Bailey as it has been at the Police Court, and that some exemplary judgment will be delivered. Mr. Coote, the secretary of the National Vigilance Association (whose offices are at 267, Strand, W.C.), reminds us that the prosecution is a very expensive one. We trust our readers will render substantial assistance at this juncture.

Congregational ministers of eminence are writing a series of papers in The Evangelical Magazine on present "Perils to Evangelical Religion." It was to be expected that men who were the lineal descendants of such great theological Nonconformists as Manton, Owen, and Howe, would protest against such an exposition of the language of the New Testament as reduces the atoning work of Christ to the mere exhibition of the moral influences which wean men from sin to holiness. A teaching which weakens the vital impression which the Cross gives of God's hatred to sin, and, at the same time, neutralises the grand offer of a free salvation, that man may set his hope, not in himself, but in God, cannot be formulated without so violently contradicting Scripture, and Christian literature through all the ages, as to make it not only a heresy, but another religion.

OBITUARY.

REV. GEORGE POOLE.

FOR many years vicar of Burntwood, Lichfield, this servant of God died on May 1. He was a man whose rare beauty of character, catholicity of spirit, evangelical ministry, and selfless devotion to the welfare of his parish, made his life, as one said, a stumbling-block to Infidels, and a strength to those who loved Christ. He passed away after a brief illness, and on the morning of his death was heard saying to himself, "Quite ready when the Master comes."

LIEUT.-COLONEL ELPHINSTONE.

This gentleman, who was an elder of Trinity Presbyterian Church, of which Dr. Sinclair Paterson is the minister, entered into rest on Friday last, May 3, in his 62nd year. The last five years of his life were full of bodily pain, and for several months before he died his sufferings were greatly intensified, but not a murmur escaped him. Seldom have we seen a more striking example of the truth of the word, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee.' He was a man greatly beloved, and will be sorely missed in his own neighbourhood, far beyond the immediate circle of the congregation to which he was attached.

MRS. HENDERSON, ABERDEEN.

The death is announced of Mrs. Henderson, of Devanha House, Aberdeen, wife of the provost of the city. It is a sad loss to Christian life and work in that part of Scotland. Alluding to the event in a sermon a few days ago, Rev. D. R. Kilpatrick, of the Free Church, said: "Many fellow-workers with Mrs. Henderson are finding out how much they depended upon her, and will now miss her wisdom and help. There was not a family in the congregation that she was not ready to sympathise with in the time of distress, and in all our work and organisation she took the largest and deepest interest. Such a life and such a character are never really taken away from us."

MR. J. T. CROSSLEY, CHELSEA.

By the recent death of Mr. John Thomas Crossley, at the advanced age of 89, a notable educationist has passed away. During the early decades of the century, he was master of the large establishment in the Borough-road, Southwark, which afterwards expanded into one of the largest and most important training colleges for teachers in the United Kingdom. The "monitorial" or "mutual" system of education was an instrument of great power in his hands. Some education books Mr. Crossley wrote had wide circulation. For nearly forty years prior to his decease, he lived in retirement in Cheyne-walk, Chelsea, maintaining his old interest in educational progress, attracting many friends by his genial disposition, and cheered often with assurances of the gratitude and affection entertained towards him by former pupils and by many distinguished schoolmasters, who attributed their success to the stimulus and encouragement he had given them many years before.

A GOOD IDEA in relation to the "Day in the Country" movement is being carried out by Mr. James Taylor, of the Ben Jonson Mission, Stepney-green. Instead of relying entirely upon the donations of friends, he gets each child attending the Mission to contribute ½d. or 1d. (not more) per week towards the fund. Though his work lies among the very poor, he has received in this way 5s. in three weeks. But to accomplish this the children have to be looked up in their homes; although this takes time, it shows the parents that the worker takes an active interest in their little ones, and thus wins their goodwill. Very much more in the direction of self-help might be done by mission workers generally, and we hope this example will be extensively followed during the weeks which intervene before the "treats" take place.

"The Crisis of Missions."

THIS is not only the happy title of a book, it is a phrase descriptive of one chief feature of the day we live in. A crisis in physical or spiritual life, in politics or religion, requires thoughtful and delicate handling. There is no greater gift from God than that of "men having understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do." "The crisis of missions" is an epoch second to none in the history of the nations. The great commission of the departing Christ was the incitement of his disciples to missionary enterprise. From the Apostolic days until a century ago the promise that "this Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached for a testimony among all nations, and then shall the end come," had been forgotten, and the command to evangelise all the world had been disobeyed. But the past century has been signalised and brightened by the rising from the dead of missionary zeal, and concurrently with this God has opened the doors of all the dark places of the earth. We often confuse cause and effect; we think that now that God has providentially opened the doors we may enter in; was it not equally true that, as soon as He saw his people awaking to obedience, He began to remove the obstacles? Would He not have removed them long before if his disciples had been ready for the work?

At the end of these hundred years missions have become so important a factor in the world's history that their friends rejoicingly report progress, and their enemies cynically point out their defects. And not only so, their bitterest enemies recognise the progress made, and their truest friends seek out in order to remedy their defects. Thus our enemies criticise in order to weaken us; our friends criticise in order to strengthen us.

In this time of crisis it is necessary to distinguish between friendly and unfriendly criticism, and not to confuse foes with friends, but to profit from both.

> If a foe have kenn'd,
> Or worse than foe, an alienated friend,
> Some rib of dry rot in thy ship's stout side,
> Think it God's message, and with humble pride
> With heart of oak replace it; thine the gains,
> Give him the rotten timber for his pains.

There is a dangerous tendency to exaggeration on either side. The criticism takes too much the form of attack, and the reply too much the form of a fortified defence. As if a doctor should scold his patient and exaggerate his disease, and the patient incontinently deny that there is anything the matter with him.

It is difficult to think without indignation of Canon Taylor's ungenerous assault on missions, and his indefensible comparison of Christianity with Islamism; but there were some actual defects on which he laid his finger. Mr. Caine spoke far more strongly than his information or experience warranted, but no one believed that every item of his charge was groundless. It is not, therefore, wise to entrench ourselves within our defences, and apologise for bending bayonets and leaden swords.

It is scarcely worthy the dignity of so great a cause as that of Missions to incite a great congregation to frivolous laughter by puns upon a name. To the witticisms at the Baptist missionary meeting that the question is not now, Who killed Abel? but, Who killed Caine? and the exultation over him as dead and buried, it was obviously open to reply, "Whosoever slayeth Caine, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold." Whatever of truth there was in his exuberant or extravagant criticism cannot be silenced without penalties.

It is the crisis of missions. The criticism of foes will be unsparing, prejudiced, and unjust; but it will be wise to sift the truth from the error even here, and to take advantage of the eyes of enemies, so as to strengthen the weak places and remove the rubbish which they have espied. It behoves the candid friends of Missions, on the other hand, to be guarded in their statements, and to acknowledge the good, as well as the defect, in the marvellous work of the past Mission century.

PRAYER AND HUMILIATION

DURING THE LONDON MAY MEETINGS.

DR. A. T. PIERSON, of Philadelphia, in The Missionary Review of the World for May, says, "London has to-day a thousand more missionaries than the whole Church supports on the foreign field." Is it exaggeration to call this fact a Christian enormity? Is it not on all fours with the improbable supposition of the Apostles feeding themselves, and a few of their near neighbours with the bread and fish which the Lord did not give to themselves, but merely entrusted to their hands for feeding the whole company?

For years I had been accustomed to go into Miss Annie Macpherson's old warehouse in the East of London, the Home of Industry, where she carried on her noble work of reclaiming destitute children. At this centre many other works were initiated for alleviating the misery around, whilst our sister also encouraged and helped her co-workers and friends to go forth to the heathen of the whole world. One evening, about dusk, the thought struck me before entering the building to pause on the opposite side of the street. Gazing upwards to the second story, I perceived, what had never caught my eye before, an old board; on it, still legible, were the words, "When Jesus saw the city, He wept over it." This happened long since; but now, when this statement by Dr. Pierson comes from America, the conclusion is pressed home, that what would now cause Christ to weep most over London is not the gross sin in our streets (though that is so striking and so repulsive to our heathen visitors), but the disobedience and neglect of those of us who profess to be his followers in withholding the knowledge of Him from the millions of the world who have never heard his glad news. It was not over the thieves, and drunkards, and fallen women of Jerusalem that Jesus wept; but because the city did not know the time of its "visitation," and the things that belonged unto its "peace."

Is it not thus that we are sinning by not caring to obey Christ's great last command to share with the heathen what has been entrusted to us? If we live in disobedience and bloodguiltiness, can we expect the Holy Ghost to work by us? And without the Holy Ghost are we not without any power for propagating the Gospel even in London? If the Apostles had so acted with the bread and fish, after the multitude had heard the Saviour constitute them mere trustees, it seems to me that rising and brushing aside the Apostles the people would themselves have carried out the compasionate intention of Jesus. Instead of giving the heathen an offer of the Bread of Life, we are spreading drunkenness and immorality in India; are presenting to the Chinese and to the natives of the Dark Continent

THE OPIUM SERPENT;

THE RUM SCORPION.

Is not the teaching of Scripture plain that by our disobedience, and by refusing to disperse abroad, we do, by our own acts, push away from us the blessing hanging over London, and only withheld from descending upon us by our disobedience? So we bring down disaster upon our home operations.

May not Miss Macpherson's faded board be still hung out, "When Jesus beheld the city, He wept over it"? Wept, not for the miseries of the heathen only, but, specially, because his own children in London practically refuse to be blessed and made a blessing. We may lay down additional water mains through the streets of London; but, if the water be not given to flow through the mains, London will have a famine of water notwithstanding. We may multiply places of worship, but if the Spirit be withheld the churches will be parched and dry.

The mighty continent of Africa has a population estimated at two hundred millions; we recently had it, on the excellent authority of Mr. Grattan Guinness, that only five of these millions are touched by any of our missionaries, leaving one hundred and ninety-five millions untouched. This is not difficult to believe when we know that in one district alone in Africa, situate far north of the Congo and south of the Sahara, the population of which is estimated at sixty millions, there is up to this moment not a single missionary. We will also be helped to believe the statement of Mr. Guinness when we remember the recent story of Mr. Frederick Arnot, who, after being impressed by a word from David Livingstone, determined to go and search in Africa for an elevated district, healthy for Europeans. Solitarily he travelled for five years, by many a swamp and through many a fever region, but eventually found a great healthy empire, to whose king he preached—where never before a missionary had entered. This was far away in the interior, and how many untouched tribes and languages there are in that region we cannot tell.

Last summer much prayer was evoked for the important conference of foreign missionaries held in London. Are we not now again at an important crisis? Much attention has been drawn to missionary methods, and now that multitudes have gathered in London for the May meetings it may be expected that this important subject will be in the minds and on the tongues of many. May there not be some danger of hasty or caustic or unkind or disparaging words being uttered by hearers or speakers; or of our going off on a false scent? Taken up with the differences of methods, may we not lose sight of the great world-need of which Africa is an example? In that continent, according to the estimate we have mentioned, all the methods used are confined to one-fortieth part of the population, and amongst the other thirty-nine fortieths no method whatever is being used.

In a spirit of brotherly love, it may be profitable to compare missionary methods, but remembering that our marching orders are "Forward," and "Forward at once," and that wisdom is promised to every believing seeker without upbraiding, would it not be well, if, meanwhile, at convenient times, during the May Meetings, special opportunities should be arranged for one-accord-prayer? I suspect the 120 in the upper room were about as ignorant in Jerusalem as we are in London, and that all their enlightenment came from their Father and our Father. They needed one-accord-prayer and wisdom, and they obediently waited. We need one-accord-prayer and wisdom, and should not we likewise obediently wait? Does it not please God when we are all of one accord? Would not our united asking for wisdom gratify our heavenly Father? Would He not be sure to send such a blessing as would speedily be felt to the ends of the earth? What brethren or sisters deserve our sympathy at this time more than true self-denying missionaries amongst the Jews, the Mohammedans, and the heathen, and amongst the world's population? Why not have times as of Pentecost repeated?

If anything could make Jesus weep afresh, it would be unkind thoughts or words about one another amongst his own followers. His prayer was: "That they all may be one... that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." Mr. Spurgeon has lately said, in a missionary sermon: "We must get up higher still, in praying about missions. I know some men can get anything they like in prayer. Oh for some five hundred Elijahs, each one on his Carmel, crying unto God! and we should soon have the clouds bursting with showers...Oh for some more prayer—more constant, incessant mention of the mission cause in prayer! and then the blessing will be sure to come." Can it be that speakers or hearers at our May Meetings would be too busy to devote a day—half a day—an evening—or a whole night, to conjoint prayer for a mighty working of the Spirit in the churches, and a mighty exodus of messengers to the heathen fields?

REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

Heartily sympathising with the foregoing letter, we invite the friends of the Missionary Societies, and of all Missions to the Jews, Mohammedans, and heathen, and of Christian workers in Christendom, to meet for united prayer, daily, from Monday, May 13, to Saturday, May 18, inclusive, from 9 to 10 a.m., in one of the rooms at Exeter Hall, Strand, provided for this purpose.

BENJN. BROOMHALL. W. BURNS THOMSON.
JAMES E. MATHIESON. JAMES L. MAXWELL.

[Since the foregoing article was written, we have received an important letter from Rev. J. J. Horsburgh, missionary in China, which we hope to give in our next issue.]

COIMBATORE, MADRAS.—In 1863 a day-school was established here by Mr. R. Stanes, to provide a good education on Christian principles for the children of European and East Indian families. The school has done good work, and been the centre of much spiritual activity. In an appeal recently issued, Mr. Stanes says:—"The building is insufficient for our increasing numbers. Moreover, one part of the roof is very low, and in rather a dangerous condition. We propose either to erect a new room or to make extensive alterations. The cost of the work will be about £350."

MISSIONARY HOMES. — Rev. George F. Herrick, D.D., missionary in Turkey, says in The Missionary Herald:—"I never yet saw a missionary wife whose companionship did not double her husband's usefulness. I have known more than one whose face, as the years of life increased, took on that charm—the beauty of a character disciplined by suffering, of a life unselfishly devoted to the highest ends. One of the choicest things of missionary work is the unwritten heroism of missionary homes." He says, furthermore, "It is the missionary's wife who, by years of endurance and acquired experience in the foreign field, has made it possible in these later years—the years of women's missionary societies—for unmarried ladies to go abroad and live and work among the people of Eastern lands."

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Some Remarks on the Papers of "A Missionary."

VI.—The Foreign Field: Missionaries, Methods, and Results.

IN previous papers I have dealt with the Scriptural questions at issue, and with missionary organisation, funds, &c., at home. I now turn to the actual work of missions and missionaries in the field.

With regard to open and closed doors, "A Missionary" affirms (article 3) that the great heathen continents have always been open to missionaries of an heroic type; and that when we speak of closed doors a century ago, we mean doors closed to "the average missionary of the modern type, who settles down safely and comfortably upon the edge of civilisation, in coast towns, or inland military stations, with their little circles of Europeans." I may ask, in passing, Are Sierra Leone and Hong Kong to be denied missionaries because they are coast towns, and Delhi and Peshawar because they are inland military stations? And if a missionary to the dense masses of heathen at Hong Kong, or at Delhi, is "safe," and, to some small extent, "comfortable," is that a reason for disparaging him? He can scarcely help being "safe" in a British possession. How far he ought to cultivate discomfort, I will discuss presently. But as to closed doors, is it forgotten that missionaries were not allowed to land in British India at the beginning of this century, and that a few who tried to do so were expelled by the Government?—that Carey had to take refuge in Danish territory—that Henry Martyn had to enter India as a military chaplain because he could not enter it as a missionary?

Is it denied that China was closed? or is Morrison to be branded as an "average missionary," because in order to get in as far as Canton he became an employé of the East India Company? Is it denied that Japan was closed, absolutely sealed, until our own day? To what extent was Africa "open" when the courses of three of its four great rivers—the Niger, the Congo, and the Zambesi—were totally unknown?

"A Missionary's" examples of men to whom these countries were always open are singularly unfortunate. He says: "When in all the centuries was not Africa open to a Livingstone, an Arnot, a Wilmot-Brooke; or the far-away islands of fierce cannibals to a Williams or a Patteson; or the frozen shores of Patagonia to an Allen Gardiner?" But every one of these names belongs to the present century. How does the fact that Mr. Arnot has done some admirable travelling in Southern Central Africa in the last half-dozen years prove that Africa was open to heroic men a century ago, and that the early missionaries were "average," "safe," and "comfortable," when they threw themselves among the Kaffirs and Hottentots of the South, or died by scores on the pestilential West Coast in their efforts to bring the miserable liberated slaves to Christ?

But I repeat that the examples are unfortunate. Williams, Patteson, and Allen Gardiner, indeed, were missionaries whose names are an honour to the Church of Christ; yet, because they happen to have famous names, that is no reason why they should be quoted to the disparagement, by contrast, of the "average missionary." The early missionaries in New Zealand, both Church of England and Wesleyan, were "average men"—and women! Nay, some of them were very humble persons, indeed, and scarcely one has left a name known to the outer world; but they went among the Maori cannibals, at a time when no trading ship dared to approach the shore (the crew of one having been killed and eaten), and lived in their midst for many years before the Holy Ghost converted one soul, at the imminent risk of their lives during the whole time.

Then, as to "a Livingstone, an Arnot, a Wilmot-Brooke." Livingstone we all honour; but from the day he left his mission, and started on his quarter-of-a-century of travel, he was in no proper sense a missionary. He was a "missionary pioneer," doing a grand pioneer work in opening up lands for others to work in afterwards. So did Dr. Krapf on the East Coast. He went out to Africa four years before Livingstone; he was the very first pioneer in Equatorial Africa; he and his companion, Rebmann, were the discoverers of the great mountains and lakes; it was in consequence of their discoveries that Livingstone came up from the South, hoping to find the sources of the Nile. But they did not leave their societies and become explorers pure and simple. They stuck to their work, and by their patient translational labours laid the foundation for all subsequent missionary enterprises in Eastern Equatorial Africa. One was nineteen years in the field, and the other twenty-nine—the latter without once coming home.

These are the "average missionaries" whom our critic passes over, in order to put forward two young men of our own day, whom we all delight to honour, but who cannot for a moment be named alongside veterans like these, or like Townsend and Gollmer and Hinderer on the west side, with their forty, and twenty, and twenty-eight years' service respectively in the unhealthiest mission field in the world, and their hundreds of degraded heathen converted to God. "A Missionary" says: "When was not Africa open to a Wilmot-Brooke?" Of Graham Wilmot-Brooke I can speak in no language but that of love and sympathy; but surely his travels have shown that Africa is not specially open to him above others. He has been making gallant efforts to reach the interior, but he has been beaten back three times, and now comes to one of the great societies with its "average missionaries" to start again under its wing; while an "average missionary" like Alexander Mackay, belonging to that same old-fashioned society, has lived in the heart of Africa for thirteen years without once coming home, and his mission numbers its converts by hundreds. I thank God for the zeal and devotion of our young pioneers; but I am jealous for those who, after all, are the men who have done the work and brought souls to Christ, but who get the cold shoulder because they belong to an old society.

It should be observed that the implication is that Livingstone and Arnot and Wilmot-Brooke can be counted among "Apostolic" missionaries following the regulations of Matt. x., and that Krapf and Rebmann, and Townsend and Gollmer and Hinderer, and, I might add, Moffat of the L.M.S., and Saker of the Baptists, and Wakefield of the Methodists, cannot be so counted. I can see no reason for this invidious distinction, except that the latter belonged to societies, and the former did not. I am not aware that Mr. F. S. Arnot and Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke go without a purse or a wallet or a change of clothes. Mr. Arnot has shown singular tact and skill in the management of his caravan of porters, &c.; but a caravan of porters is exactly what "A Missionary" says an evangelist in Africa should not have.

Turn to India. More than once in these articles the late George Bowen, of Bombay, is mentioned. Now, George Bowen was a saint of God, and everyone admired his self-denial in "living on a few rupees a month in the native bazaar." He spent a long life in this way; and he won, as has been truly remarked, "admiration from his countrymen, respect and affection from the heathen—everything but converts." Bowen's career is the final proof that the adoption of native habits is no royal road to success in missionary work. The experiment had in his case every chance in its favour, for a holier and more devoted man did not walk this earth; yet it failed entirely. I do not condemn him or his methods for one moment. I have no doubt they have their place. But when it is claimed for these methods that they are the only ones that God blesses, or even that they are the ones God blesses most, I reply that the fact is precisely the reverse. While "average missionaries" have baptized their hundreds, George Bowen did not baptize his tens.

Then "A Missionary" adduces the case of the Salvationists, and says that "they are reaping tens of thousands." Now, is there any real evidence for this? With all my heart I hope it is true (if it is a reaping from heathenism); but it is impossible to accept sensational letters in The War Cry as evidence, and, in the face of the serious statements on the subject made by the missionaries of the London, Wesleyan, and Irish Presbyterian Societies, an impartial inquirer is compelled to suspend his judgment. Probably "A Missionary" is not aware that it was George Bowen who vehemently accused the Salvationists of boasting of converts whom (he said) they had but stolen from the Presbyterians. I must regretfully add that even if there be a large reaping, it is of doubtful benefit if the "converts" are not tested by baptism, and if they are allowed to wear on their faces an imitation of caste marks. I wish distinctly to be understood as bringing no charge whatever. We sorely want a thoroughly unbiassed inquiry into the matter. I only say that, pending such inquiry, no writer ought to illustrate his argument from the "reaping" of the Salvation Army.

When, therefore, "A Missionary" says (article 14) that "success in mission work will be in proportion as these directions are conformed to," he is simply laying down a speculative theory. There is, at all events, no evidence in its favour; and there is a good deal the other way. The one only fact hat might possibly be adduced to support he theory is the success, after a fashion, of oman Catholic missions. But (1) while dividual Romish missionaries have disnguished themselves by zeal and self-enial, a vast amount of credit is given to hem on that account which they do not eserve. Francis Xavier himself went to ndia with sumptuous surroundings and fare n the Portuguese Viceroy's ship, and when e got to Goa he found there a magnificent athedral, with all its appurtenances. Then 2) it is to be hoped that no Protestant misionary will ever imitate the wholesale aptism of ignorant peasants, tempted by retty charms to wear round their necks, vhich constituted the successes of Xavier and is followers, or the degrading conformity to heathen customs which in after years led even the Pope himself to issue a bull condemning the practices of his emissaries. And (3), even after baptizing thousands, Xavier, as we are told by the Jesuit historian Dubois, "left the country in disgust," 'entirely disheartened by the invincible obstacles he everywhere met."

Asceticism, then, in India has nothing to boast of. Nor, in any part of the world, can any specially important results be pointed to as following on the adoption of the methods of "A Missionary." The missionary who will undergo every privation and every hardship, as occasion calls for it, who will bear any suffering, if thereby he can win a soul, will assuredly be blessed of God. But the missionary who adopts certain outward forms of self-denial in obedience to what he supposes to be a rule of life is exactly like a man who, on particular days, denies himself a particular kind of food. Unconsciously to himself, he is trusting in his own doings; thinking himself eminently "spiritual," he is really "legal"; he is virtually an ascetic for asceticism's sake. Now, in India it is absolutely certain that no Englishman can hope to compete with a Hindu fakir on his own ground; and, as has been well said, "self-imposed austerity can only seem to the Hindus a weak imitation of the principles of their own ascetics." In the paper entitled "The Great Missionary Failure," Canon Isaac Taylor accused missionaries (quite groundlessly) of attempting to "make Asiatics or Africans into middle-class English Philistines"; but under the ascetic system he commended, missionaries are to try (as has been well said) to "turn themselves into clumsy and outcaste Hindus."

On the other hand, the actual results of missionary work are the results of the labours of "the average missionary." If we take the humbler villages of the rural districts of India, the tens of thousands of converts have been gathered in by the American Baptist missionaries in Nellore, the C.M.S. missionaries in Tinnevelly, the C.M.S. and L.M.S. missionaries in Travancore, &c. If we take the still lower aboriginal tribes, the reapers have been the "Gossner" and the S.P.G. missionaries among the Kôls, the C.M.S. missionaries among the Hill Arrians, the C.M.S. and Danish missionaries among the Santáls. If we take high-caste and high-class Hindus and Mohammedans, almost every convert from amongst them has been the fruit of the educational missionaries' work, Scottish and English. If we go to China, the great majority of the converts hitherto won are in the Missions of the old English and American Societies; but our China Inland brethren, being now so numerous, are increasing theirs at a rapid rate just in those places where they settle down at fixed stations, and work defined districts systematically. If we take Japan, the great American Missions have five-sixths of the native Christians, and almost all the leaders among them have been won through missionary education. Need I refer to Madagascar, the crown of the London Missionary Society's work, and to Fiji, the glory of the Wesleyan Missions?

Let it not be supposed that I am boasting of results. God forbid! They are nothing for man to boast of. We have been quite unworthy to achieve any of them. But they are a good deal to praise God for. I entirely agree with "A Missionary" that the tendency at missionary meetings is to glorify our successes too much. He justly says that we have heard enough of the Ongole baptisms. Our experience in the Church Missionary Society is that whenever God has given us special blessing in some particular field, and when hundreds or thousands have been gathered into the Church, then, if we have made too much of them in speeches or in magazines, some humbling lesson is sure to be sent us. Still, it is unthankful to ignore what the Lord has done.

Of course, it is open to "A Missionary" to say that the results would have been far greater if his methods had been followed. But this is mere speculative opinion. Only practical experience can decide one way or the other. All I say is that, as a matter of indisputable historical fact, all (or virtually all) the results we do see have been achieved by God's being pleased to honour the old methods of the old societies, and to hear the prayers and own the labours of the "average missionaries." A PHILADELPHIAN MISSION.

LAST year we sent a request for prayer for our Mission to THE CHRISTIAN, and God has since enabled us to rent a house in one of the worst neighbourhoods in the city. He is also giving us souls, and at our Thursday all-day meeting a sister in Christ was healed, and many little children, both white and coloured, are bringing their sicknesses to Jesus and receiving healing.

We have had Gospel preachers from time to time, and send these words hoping they will meet the eyes of dear friends in England, at Mildmay, Clifton, and other places, who so cheered us on our way when we were in England in 1885, and that our dear friends will pray for Hebron Mission and send us requests for prayer. Our beloved helpers, white and coloured, have much prevailed with God for souls to be saved and bodies to be healed. We have now more white persons than coloured, but most precious helpers are among the coloured people, and, praise be to God, there is arising a deep interest in foreign missions.

We had an all-night prayer-meeting for foreign missions at our Home, 1612, Pine-street, on March 25, and have appointed another for April 29.

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—Miss Mason has issued a very interesting and attractively got up report of the work for the past year in connection with the Houses of Rest at Kilburn and Eastbourne. She entitles it "The God Who Answers Prayer," and truly the whole history of the Mission is one continuous example of the glorious fact which the title embodies. The little report can be had of our publishers, 6d. post free.

TRANSFORMED BY BEHOLDING.*

THE great sea lay and looked on high,
When, floating aloft in the lovely sky,
It saw a fleecy cloud, so light,
So pure, so spotless, and so bright;
And it wondered whence so fleet a form
Arose, the heavens to adorn.

"They say," it whispered, "that came from earth,
And more, that I had given it birth.
But how absurd to think that I
Could ever mount that lofty sky!"
And then the sea heaved such a sigh
As it watched the beauteous thing on high.

"Ah, I could never be like thee;
In the bosom of God thou seem'st to be.
Besides——" and the sea was silent now,
As it thought of its wild and fevered brow;
And how oft in its rage it had dealt a blow
That laid thousands dead in its depths below.

And yet I perceived the sea could not rest
As it looked at that beauteous thing so blest.
Then it roused itself, and said, "I will try,"
And it borrowed the wind to drive it high;
And, gathering its strength, it curled in its pride,
And dashed itself on the rocks beside;
Then, rearing a column of quivering spray,
It seemed to be borne to the heights away.

But it fell, alas! on the angry breast,
Back with its foaming, whitened crest.
Baffled and beaten it buried its head,
To hide in the depths of its ocean bed.
And it hissed as it did so, "It cannot be;
I said I knew it was not for me."

At length the great sea lay quiet and still,
For fell despair had subdued its will;
When the glorious sun looked forth on the scene,
And gleamed on its bosom in silver sheen.
And the great sea looked in the face of the sun
And asked if he knew what could be done;
"The moon draws me hither and thither," it said
"But it cannot uplift me from my bed; [
Nor can it transform this turbid breast
Into that thing so pure and blest."

"Canst thou transform me?" said the sea.
"Oh, yes," said the sun, "if you'll suffer me."
And the sun sent down a noiseless ray,
That loosened and warmed it as it lay,
And lifted it up, how it never knew,
A fleecy cloud in the heavens blue.

. . . .

Do you ken the parable, reader fair?
Can you take the lesson that's couching there?
Are you that sea with its fond desire,
Sighing and struggling to rise up higher?
Does perfect grace attract thine eye,
And to attain it dost thou try?
But do baffled efforts mock thy skill,
While sorrow and anguish thy spirit fill?
And thou say'st, "In God's bosom that grace
must rest;
It never can visit my troubled breast."

Now change thy plan, and behold yon Sun.†
Just rest and trust, and the work is done.
Transformed by beholding Him thou'lt be,
His great salvation thou shalt see.
The process? Well, that thou canst not know:
Enough for thee, it is "even so,"
That He lifts thee up, and makes thee fit
In the heavenly places with Him to sit.

THIBET, an extensive region of Central Asia, tributary to China, and having an area of 750,000 square miles; and a population of eight millions, is said to be the only country on the globe not open to Christian missions. It is one of the great strongholds of Buddhism, and Lhassa, the capital, is regarded by faithful Buddhists as the city of Rome is by devout Catholics.

XXIX.—THE IDEAL LIFE.

HEBREWS xii. 14, 15.

How beautiful and solemn are these words, like the swelling cadence of heaven's own music. Evidently they do not emanate from this sorrow-stricken and warring world; they are one of the laws of the kingdom of heaven, intended to mould and fashion our life on earth. It is quite likely that those who elect to obey them may not achieve name and fame amongst men, but they will win something infinitely better—the beatitude of blessedness, the smile of the Saviour, and the vision of God.

There are souls among us of whom the world is not worthy; yet for whom the world, when it catches sight of them, prepares its bitterest venom; who have withdrawn their interest from the ambitions and schemes, the excitements and passions of their fellows, and who live a retired life, hidden with Christ in God, content to be unknowing and unknown; eager only to please God, to know Him, or rather to be known of Him, and to preserve the perfect balance of their nature with Him, as its centre and pivot and final cause. Such souls, perhaps, will best understand the infinite meaning and beauty of these deep and blessed words.

I. THERE IS OUR ATTITUDE TOWARDS GOD.—"Follow after holiness." In R.V. this is rendered "sanctification." And this in turn is only a Latin equivalent for "setting apart," as Sinai among mountains, the Sabbath among the days of the week, the Levites among the Jews, and the Jews among the nations of the earth.

But after all there is a deeper thought. Why were people, places, and things, set apart? Was it not because God was there. He came down in might and glory on Sinai, therefore, they needed to set bounds around its lower declivities. He chose to rest on the seventh day from all his work, therefore it was hallowed and sanctified. He selected the Jews to be his peculiar people, and the Levites to be his priests, therefore they were isolated from all beside. He appeared to Moses in the bush, glowing with the light of the Shechinah, therefore the spot was holy ground, and the shepherd needed to bare his feet. In other words, it is the presence of God which makes holy. There is only one Being in all the universe who is really holy. Holiness is the attribute of his nature, and of his nature only. We can never be holy apart from God, but when God enters the spirit of man, He brings holiness with Him. Nay, the presence of God in man is holiness.

A room or public building may be full of delicious sunlight. But that sunlight is not the property of the room. It does not belong to it. You cannot congratulate it upon its possession. For when the shadows of evening gather, and curtain the face of the sun, the chamber is as dark as possible. It is light only so long as the sun dwells in it. So the human spirit has no holiness apart from God. Holiness is not a perquisite, or property, or attribute to which any of us can lay claim. It is the in-dwelling of God's light and glory within us. He is the holy man in whom God dwells. He is the holier, in whom God dwells more fully. He is the holiest, who, however poor his intellect and mean his earthly lot, is most possessed and filled by the presence of God through the Holy Ghost. We need not wonder at the Apostle addressing believers as saints, when he was able to say of them: "Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you" (1 Cor. i. 2, vi. 19).

Why then does the sacred writer bid us "follow after holiness," as though it were an acquisition? Because, though holiness is the in-filling of man's spirit by the Spirit of God, yet there are certain very important conditions to be observed by us, if we would secure and enjoy that blessed gift.

(1) Give self no quarter.—It is always asserting itself in one or other of its Protean shapes. Do not expect to be rid of it. Even if you say you have conquered it, then it lurks beneath the smile of your self-complacency. It may show itself in religious pride, in desire to excel in virtue, in the satisfaction with which we hear ourselves remarked for our humility. It will need incessant watchfulness, because where self is there God cannot come. He will not share his glory with another. When we are settling down to slumber we may expect the cry, "Thine enemy is upon thee," for it will invade our closets and our places of deepest retirement.

It is impossible to read the Epistles of the Apostle Peter without being impressed with the solemn and awful character of the Christian life, the constant need of watchfulness, the urgency for diligence, self-restraint, and self-denial. Oh for this holy sensitiveness; always exercising the self-watch; never sparing ourselves; merciful to others because so merciless to self; continually exercising ourselves to preserve a conscience void of offence towards God and men.

(2) Yield to God.—He is ever seeking the point of least resistance in our natures. Help Him to find it, and when found, be sure to let Him have his blessed way. "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." Work out what God works in. Translate the thoughts of God into the vernacular of daily obedience. Be as plastic to his touch as clay in the hands of the potter, so that you may realise every ideal which is in his heart. Be not as the horse and mule, but let your mouth be tender to every motion of the Divine purpose concerning you. And if you find it difficult to maintain this attitude, be sure to tell your difficulty to the Holy Spirit, and trust Him to keep your heart steadfast and unmoveable, fixed and obedient.

(3) Take time to it.—"Follow after." This habit is not to be acquired in a bound or at a leap. It can be formed in its perfection only after years of self-discipline and watchful self-culture. To abide ever in Christ, to yield to God, to keep all the windows of the nature open towards his gracious infilling, to turn naturally to Him; and first, amid peril and temptations, in all times of sorrow and trial—this is not natural, but it may become as second nature by habitual diligence.

But it must necessarily be the work of time, ere the sense of effort ceases, and the soul naturally and spontaneously turns to God "in every hour of waking thought." And if we are to acquire this blessed and perpetual attitude of soul, we must take time to acquire it, as to acquire aught else which is really precious. It must be no by-play, not the work of off or leisure hours, not a pastime, but the serious object of life, the purpose which shall thread all the varied beads of life's chain, and give a beautiful unity to all.

To such a character there shall be the vision of God.—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Had you been beside Moses during his forty days in the heart of the cloud, when he saw God face to face, you would not have seen Him if you had not been holy. Had you stood beside the martyr Stephen, when he beheld the glory of God, and the Son of Man standing beside Him, your eyes would have discerned nothing if you had not been holy. Yea, if it were possible for you without holiness to pass within the pearly gate, you would not see the sheen, as it were, of sapphire, you would carry with you your own circumference of darkness, and the radiant vision would vanish as you approached. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

The heart has eyes as well as the head, and for want of holiness these become seriously impaired, so that the wise in their own conceits see not, whilst those who are simple, humble, and pure in heart, behold the hidden and prepared things of God. The one condition for seeing God in his Word, in nature, in daily life, and in closet-fellowship, is holiness of heart wrought there by his own indwelling. Follow after holiness as men pursue pleasure, as the athlete runs for the prize, as the votary of fashion follows in the wake of the crowd.

II. THERE IS OUR ATTITUDE TOWARDS MEN.—"Follow after peace." The effect of righteousness is always peace. If you are holy, you will be at peace. Peace is broken by sin, but the holy soul takes sin instantly to the blood. Peace is broken by temptation, but the holy soul has learnt to put Christ between itself and the first breath of the tempter. Peace is broken by care, dissatisfaction, and unrest, but the Lord stands round the holy soul, as do the mountains round Jerusalem, which shield off the cruel winds, and collect the rain which streams down their broad sides to make the dwellers in the valleys rejoice and sing. Others may be fretful and feverish, the subjects of wild alarms, but there is perfect peace to the soul which has God, and is satisfied.

When a man is full of the peace of God, he will naturally become a son of peace. He will follow after peace with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart (2 Tim. ii. 22). He will endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace (Eph. iv. 3). He will sow harvests of peace as he makes peace (James iii. 18). All his epistles, like those of the great Apostle, will breathe benedictions of peace; and his entrance to a home will seem like a living embodiment of the ancient form of benediction: Peace be to this house. He will have a wonderful power of calling out responses from like-minded men, but where that is not the case, his peace, white-robed, and dove-winged, shall come back to him again.

But there must be a definite following after peace. The temperaments of some are so trying. They are so apt to look at things in a wrong light, to put misconstructions on harmless actions, and to stand out on trifles. Hence the need of endeavour and patience and watchfulness, that we may exercise a wholesome influence as peacemakers.

(1) Avoid becoming a party to a quarrel.—It takes two to make a quarrel: never be one. A soft answer will often turn away wrath, and where it does not, yield before the wrong-doer, give place to wrath, let it expend itself unhindered by your resistance; it will soon have vented itself to be succeeded by shame, penitence, and regret.

(2) If opposed to the malice of men, do not avenge yourselves.—Our cause is more God's than it is our own. It is for Him to vindicate us, and He will. He may permit a temporary cloud to rest on us for some wise purpose, but ultimately He will bring out our righteousness as the light, and our judgment as the noonday. The non-resistance of evil is the clear teaching of Christ (Matt. v. 39, &c.; Rom. xii. 19; 1 Pet. ii. 21, &c.). Stand up for the true, the holy, the good, at all costs, but think very little of standing up for your own rights. What are your rights? Are you anything better than a poor sinner, who has forfeited all? You deserve to be treated much worse than you were ever treated at the worst. Leave God to vindicate you.

(3) Do not give cause of offence.—If you are aware of certain susceptibilities on the part of others, where they may be easily wounded and irritated, avoid touching them, if you can do so without being a traitor to God's holy truth. And if thy brother has any true bill against you, rest not day or night, tarry not even at the footstool of Divine mercy, but go to him forthwith, and seek his forgiveness, and make ample restitution, that he may have no cause of reproach against thy professions, or against thy Lord (Matt. v. 23).

Oh for more of his peace, in the face never crossed by impatience, in the voice never rising above gentle tones, in the manner never excited or morose, in the gesture still and restful, which acts as oil poured over the raging billows of the sea, when they foam around the bulwarks of the ship and are suddenly quelled.

III. THERE IS OUR ATTITUDE TOWARDS OUR FELLOW CHRISTIANS.—"Looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God." It is a beautiful provision that love to a common Lord attracts us into the fellowship of his disciples, and as no individual life truly develops in solitariness, so no Christian is right or healthy who isolates himself from the communion of saints. But we go not there only for selfish gratification, but that we may look after one another, not leaving it to the officers of the host; but each doing our own share.

There are three dangers. (1) The laggards.—This is the meaning of "fail." The idea is borrowed from a party of travellers, some of whom lag behind, as in the retreat from Moscow, to fall a prey to Cossacks, wolves, or the awful sleep. Let us who are in the front ranks, strong and healthy, go back to look after the weaklings, who loiter to their peril.

(2) The root of bitterness.—There may be some evil root lurking in some heart, hidden now, but which will bear a terrible harvest of misery to many. So was it in Israel once, when Achan conceived thoughts of covetousness, and brought evil on himself, and mourning on the host whose defeat he had brought about. If we can discover the presence of such roots of bitterness, let us, with much searching of our own souls, humility, and prayer, root them out, ere they can spring up to cause trouble.

(3) The profane and earthly minded.—Of these Esau is the type, "who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright." Alas! are there not many such? For one momentary gratification of the flesh, they forfeit not their salvation perhaps (we are not told that even Esau forfeited that), but their power to lead, to teach, to receive and hand on blessing to the Church.

Are any such reading these words? Let them beware! Such choices are sometimes irrevocable. So was it with Esau. He wept and cried like some trapped animal, but he could not alter the destiny he had made for himself. The words "place for repentance" do not refer to his personal salvation, but to the altering of the decision which he had made as a young man and which his father ratified. He could not undo. What he had written, he had written. And so there may come a time, when you would give everything you possess to have again the old power of blessing and helping your fellows, but you will find that for one moment's sensual gratification the blessed prerogative has slipped from your grasp—never—never—never to return. Wherefore let us eagerly and diligently look both to ourselves and our fellow-believers in the Church of God.

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

IX.—I AM SO UNREAL!

A LADY called upon me one day, apparently in distress of mind. She told me that she was converted, and was the child of out-and-out Christian parents. She had always been brought up under religious influences, and for her respected father's sake everyone was kind to her. "I have therefore always been happy," she added. I stopped her in her story to ask when she was converted; for I suspect people who say they have always been happy.

She answered, "I was awakened by reading your book, 'From Death into Life.' It was the means of bringing me to a decided change of heart. I believe that book was blessed to my soul; but to tell the truth," she said, looking earnestly at me, "I am so unreal; there is a wide gap between my experience and my light. I have a class at the convalescent hospital; but while I am teaching others, something keeps telling me, 'You are a hypocrite, you are teaching what you do not know yourself!'"

I said, "Whenever such suggestions come to you again, say inwardly to the Lord, 'Lord, give me the knowledge and experience of this light;' if the rebuke is from Him, it is surely sent to bring you to Himself, that He may give you the experience you need. On the other hand, if it is from the devil to hinder you, you will defeat his purpose by your prayers. Besides this, when we teach others out of God's Word, we must necessarily often teach beyond our personal experience; nevertheless, it is the best way to learn. He that waters others shall be watered himself."

"Yes, I know that is true, thank you," she said, hesitating; "yet I am not satisfied."

"My dear friend," I replied, "you are not intended to be satisfied with yourself. We can only be satisfied with the Lord. He took your place and bore your punishment that you might have his place and his merit."

"Yes," she said, "I know that too, but I do not know how to explain my difficulty."

I answered, "You are explaining clearly enough. I see where you are, and what you want. You have been praying for a blessing, and now you are waiting to feel it before you believe you have it."

"Yes," she replied, "that is the fact; and is not that right?"

"No," I answered. "When you pray for anything God has promised in his Word, and have a desire for it, that is God then and there offering you the blessing you are craving. Ask for it as if you were falling in with his offer, and thank Him for it as if you had it."

"What," she said, "before I get it?"

"Yes," I said, "before you get it—that is, before you feel you have it. Waiting to feel the answer is nature, taking it with thanksgiving is faith and grace. When you ask for a thing in faith, God's Word tells you that you have the petition you desire, because you believe—not because you feel or because you prayed."

She looked as if amazed, or as if in doubt whether this was really true. To confirm her faith, I said, "Those ten lepers we read about in St. Luke's Gospel cried to Jesus for cleansing. The Lord seemed to say to them, 'Do you believe I can cleanse such an incurable disease as leprosy?' 'Yes, Lord,' they answered, 'and no one else.' 'What would you do if I did cleanse you?' 'We would go and show ourselves to the priest.' They might have said, 'How can we go as we are, in our uncleansed state?' But these lepers did not say anything of the kind. We read that they did as they were commanded; they went, and it came to pass, that as they went their way, they were cleansed. So I say to you, 'What would you do if you felt all you wish to feel? Do that, and you will feel.'"

Still the lady hesitated, and looked perplexed. I continued, "You are asking in faith for the blessing of reality; this is the very will of God towards you, and He is putting that prayer or desire into your heart. Make the petition with thanksgiving, and give thanks as if the answer was come, and you will find it true. Feeling, or realisation as you call it, comes after thanksgiving."

The lady began to cry. "What are you crying about?" I asked.

She replied, "Do you really think all this can be true?"

"No," I answered, "I do not think at all about it, I know—I am sure! You have no idea how much God is desiring to bless you. This hungering and thirsting which you have for deeper and fuller realisation of God and his work, is from Him; and the Lord not only says, 'Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness,' but far more than that. Satan is trying to persuade you—you are so unreal. Why do you believe the devil like this?"

"I do not know," said the lady, crying more than before.

"Look up, child," I continued. "The Lord not only says that you are blessed of Him for hungering and thirsting after righteousness, but He adds, you shall be filled. Is that what you want?"

"Yes, indeed it is," she replied.

"Then," I said, "you may have it, and have it now. Let us thank Him together."

She shrunk from doing this, saying it would be an act of profaneness for her to do so.

"Oh, no," I said, "the profaneness consists in not doing it. Come, say with me, 'Lord, I thank Thee for this hunger and thirst which I have in my soul. Lord, I believe Thou wilt fill me, Thou art filling me now.'"

"No" she repeated, "I cannot say that, I do not feel like that at all."

I said, "I do not ask you to feel, I want you to believe. Believe it first and thank the Lord, then feeling will follow. Say after me, 'I do believe, I will believe, that Thou art filling me now—I thank Thee.' Repeat that again and again."

"I think," she said, "I see what you mean."

"That is well, but do not stop there; go on thanking the Lord for answering your prayers."

She soon passed over the line of her difficulties, and began to thank God with rejoicing.

It is not a bad thing to see a gap between your light and your experience. It shows that your eyes are opened, and that the Holy Ghost is dealing with you in kindling such desires. Thank God for that, and the gap will be speedily bridged over and cease to be. God gives us the sense of our need to draw us to Himself; Satan uses the same to send us back. Be sure Satan would not try to hinder you, if he did not see that God was helping and drawing you. Cheer up, and teach others the way of deliverance, by simple faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and you will be confirmed and established in your own soul.

BARCELONA PROTESTANT COTTAGE HOSPITAL.—Last year's work was very cheering to the directors of this excellent institution. Altogether forty-one patients received 1330 days' nursing, which is the highest limit of service yet reached. Without friends at hand, some of the foreigners have required, and received, kindly help as well as careful nursing. It is gratifying to learn that £777 is in hand towards the £1000 required for the purchase of the hospital premises. Copies of the report and further details as to this undenominational and interesting work, may be had from Miss A. Thackrah, 33, Woodberry-grove, Finsbury-park, London, N.

Wesleyans in the West.

The friends of the West Central Mission have made another move forward. They have rescued Cleveland Hall, near Portland-road station, from base uses, and devoted it to the furtherance of their social and religious work. In addition to the spacious hall, there are a coffee-bar, class-rooms, accommodation for Sunday-school, workman's club, &c. A thousand pounds have been expended in needed repairs and furnishing, and in order to meet this expense inaugural meetings were held on Friday last. Rev. M. Guy Pearse preached in Princes Hall at noon. In the afternoon a meeting was held in the reconstructed hall itself, when various friends addressed a goodly gathering.

In the evening a praise-meeting took place in St. James's Hall. Mr. W. A. McArthur, Jun., M.P., a young and ardent Methodist with an honoured name, took the chair, and made a very thorough-going speech in support of the "forward movement." The new off-shoot of the work, he said, would be largely devoted to social operations, and he asked for it the heartiest countenance. Social questions are very much to the front in these days, and it rests with the Church of Christ to take her true position in the movement.

A very characteristic speech followed from Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who amply sustained his reputation as the most dangerous rival to General Booth in the money-raising line. He gave a lively description of the hall and the spiritual needs of the neighbourhood, and spoke very hopefully of the future. He undertook to say that those who would be converted at the hall would support the whole of the operations, so that, when started free of debt, Cleveland Hall would be self-supporting. To the raising of the needed sum for preliminary cost, Mr. Hughes addressed himself in his usual persuasive fashion, and before the meeting was over he was able to announce that, with gifts or promises varying from £100 to a shilling, a total of £975 had been received.

Every half-year (said Dr. Lund, the recent accession to the ranks of the workers) this Mission breaks out in a new place, so that the acquisition of Cleveland Hall will be a historic event in the history of the work. He made out a strong plea for the multiplication of mission-halls, and did not hesitate to proclaim the radical doctrine that it would be a grand thing for many Methodist churches, in town and country alike, if they were turned into halls that would be open every night of the week, and where the whole life of the people could be influenced for good. Many prosy and lifeless sermons would then go overboard, and the working people would feel at home. Dr. Lund is a very ardent brother, and we should think a man entirely after Mr. Hughes's own heart.

There are diversities of gifts, and certainly Mr. Josiah Nix, who is the head of the Wardour Hall branch, is a man of unique and peculiar parts. His rough and ready account of the work there, was a perfect masterpiece of native eloquence. His story of the way in which he baulked a Soho Boniface through open-air meetings in one of the courts, and how that discomfited publican had to put up his shutters and go, was a treat of no common kind. Mr. Nix seems to have solved the problem of the drink traffic on a small scale.
